At his meetings in Beijing, as in the provinces; Bufalini received full information about China's economic, social and political situation, with special reference to the swing that has taken place in recent years and that was ratified by the recent 12th CPC Congress. He, in turn, provided information about the Italian situation.

During these same meetings, Bufalini told us, the principal topics of the international situation were discussed. In particular, there emerged fundamental agreement on the decisive point of the need to safeguard world peace. In connection with the primary need for peace, there was also discussion of China's relations with the United States, the USSR, Western Europe and the Third World.

Asked about the current Sino-Soviet talks in Beijing, Comrade Bufalini told us that he considers these talks significant and important, inasmuch as he believes that, even though long-existing disagreements between China and the USSR raise complex problems that are certainly not east to resolve, the fact that there has been a resumption of discussions in itself positive.

Bufalini also told us that in all his meetings in China over the past 2 weeks -- both at the top and in the provinces and places of production -- both the Chinese comrades and we ourselves emphasized with pleasure the friendly and continuous development of PCI-CPC relations.

SPECULATION OVER BRITISH MOVES IN GIBRALTAR

LD201300 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] The cancellation on short notice of the Staffordshire Battalion's return to Britain from the Rock of Gibraltar, the recent arrival of a detachment of the British 32d Guided Weapons Regiment equipped with blowpipe antiaircraft missiles and the arrival of a number of ships in the last 24 hours, all seem to confirm the forecast made last Sunday by THE SUNDAY TIMES that Gibraltar's defenses are being reinforced in a manner unprecedented in recent years to guard against any eventuality which might arise from the Spanish elections on 28 October.

A British military spokesman in the colony announced that the Staffordshire Battalion have cancelled their return to the United Kingdom and will not for the moment be replaced by the 7th Gurkhas Battalion -- veterans of the Malvinas -- because of immediate difficulties over settling them in local training camps.

While THE SUNDAY TIMES report said this reinforcement might be motivated by the possibility of a military coup in Spain before or immediately after the general election, the Madrid newspaper ABC today carries a dispatch from Algeciras quoting the Foreign Ministry representative in Gibraltar as saying the British Government wants to be sure that the Rock is militarily prepared for any emergency. The Foreign Ministry official in Gibraltar said these changes of units have no political significance and are for excluviely military reasons. When journalists asked him whether those military reasons derived from confidential reports from the British Foreign ministry on the situation in Spain, the spokesman declined to comment.

UCD'S CAVERO ON ELECTION, PARTY DIFFICULTIES

PM191301 Madrid YA in Spanish 4 Oct 82 p 72

[Interview with Union of Democratic Center (UCD) Secretary General Inigo Cavero by Maria Luisa Donsos and Anabel Diez -- date and place not given]

[Excerpt] YA: The latest opinion polls do not give the UCD more than 15 deputies. Do these estimates agree with those which your party has?

Cavero: It is usual to enter into a war of opinion polls in an election period. Without indicating the source or number of samples, the parties publish polls as suits them best. We have our own polls, but we believe that it is not yet advisable to enter into that war. Nevertheless, that dearth of votes and seats is very far from the truth.

YA: But you are aware that the UCD's decline will be a reality in a few days' time. In the analysis which your party will have made of the possible causes of its decline, which causes figure foremost?

Cavero: Just as is happening in most European countries, the consequences of the current economic crisis are being suffered by the ruling party, and the opposition is benefiting from not having experienced that weakening.

YA: You do not mention in that analysis the internal struggle which has occurred in your party and the deplorable spectacle which it has presented to the public.

Cavero: A process of agglutination (acoplamiento) has taken place; people have gone to their natural places. But it is those of us who are in the UCD who have a clear idea of a center political blueprint, even though having to regret the departure of the man who has our founder and first chairman -- Adolfo Suarez. He has adopted another center blueprint, and it is he who will have to explain what its differences from the UCD are. I have already seen one; he is planning to make a rapprochement with the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] after the election.

Safeguard Seats

Ya: And how do you assess the defection phenomenon in the UCD in that stage of agglutination which you mention?

Cavero: The basic problems really began in the second stage of the legislative term, when lists of deputies were no longer circulating and no replacements were occurring. The deputies increasingly felt that they were the owners of their seats, forgetting they had won them through inclusion on a UCD ticket. When the election was approaching, they believed they had to safeguard their seats.

Ya: You have planned the publicity campaign basing yourselves on sentences or thoughts of Landelino Lavilla, taken from a past speech. Many of them condemn the left as being "immature and utopian." Can you explain their basis?

Cavero: A rejuvenation has occurred in the PSOE, and although much of it is positive, it cannot fail to be assessed by a rival party. A considerable section of the PSOE is comprised of people who are too green and inexperienced in administration. Moreover, I can see considerable contradictions in the economic program, and I am also worried that the trade union federations may be the real economic policy chiefs.

Ya: Lavilla's maxims also contain references to an authoritarian right. What is your opinion of the efforts which Mr Fraga is making to restrain himself?

Popular Alliance's Authoritarianism

Cavero: It is a salutary intention of Mr Fraga to appear as a moderate and unauthoritarian man. But I believe that the right has in its conservative viewpoints an authoritarian cast contrary to the trend of the times and to the necessary modernization and evolution of Spanish society. I would like the Spanish people to see video recordings of some of Mr Fraga's speeches in the Congress of Deputies, and not merely the image of the Popular Alliance leader seated in front of a few journalists to demonstrate his dialectical skill, to which the reporters also contributed. Of course, he walked away with the match.

Ya: At any event, the UCD's campaign seems to be directed almost exclusively at attacking the PSOE, and, to a lesser extent, the right. So, can we define the Socialists as your opponents in this election?

Cavero: Our real opponent is the one which wishes to oust us from power, which is the PSOE. Next, there is a party such as the Popular Alliance and its satellites, whose sole obsession currently, as throughout the legislative term, is to dynamite the UCD. Naturally, we must confront rivals of various kinds.

Ya: The UCD's credibility has been entrusted to Lavilla. However, his authority was called into question on 19 September, when the pact with the Liberals was broken. As you already know, there was talk of a battle once more, which was won by your party's blue sector.

Lavilla, the Peacemaker

Cavero: A party has its own structure, and an operation as traumatic as is entailed by an organizational vacuum in certain provinces cannot be carried out in 2 months. Nevertheless, there have been important renewals which are to be observed in certain provinces. Mr Lavilla has helped to pacify the UCD, although it was no easy matter. As for the Liberals, I hope that in a not very distant future Mr Garrigues and Mr Lavilla will demonstrate that there are possibilities of cooperation.

NORWAY

AFTENPOSTEN SUPPORTS GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC PLAN

[Editorial: "Necessary Change of Course"]

[Text] This fall's discussion of the budget in the Storting will chiefly be a question of whether the majority of politicians are prepared to be party to the change of course which the Willoch government considers necessary to get the economy moving again, and in doing so, safeguard employment and the welfare state. The main problem in the Norwegian economy is that the level of prices and other expenditures has become so high that Norwegian firms are having ever-increasing problems selling their goods and services. They are simply too expensive in comparison with what other countries have to offer. If we do not succeed in reversing this trend, we must simply prepare ourselves for significant unemployment in Norway, too. It is this situation which the government is seeking to attack in its economic plans for 1983 which, through a series of measures, aim at resurrecting competitiveness and creating a better economic foundation for the solution of urgent public and private issues.

The first comments on the draft budget which has been put forward could indicate that the Labor Party is intent on continuing to pursue an erroneous policy, with increases in public spending, tax increases and higher inflation. The result would inevitably be the further weakening of Norwegian competitiveness and not the reverse, which is what the government's policy amounts to.

It hardly comes as any surprise that the Labor Party should be groping in the dark and be unable to present a realistic alternative for the solution of the problems we are now facing as a nation.

However, it is worrisome that the government's support paties, the Christian People's Party and the Center Party, according to the comments on the budget to date, are playing with the idea of weakening the very foundation of the Willoch government's budget proposals. The "spending parties" are once again living up to their reputation and have already hinted at several hefty spending increases at the same time they are reducing the government's proposals for real tax reductions, merely referring to index-linked adjustment of the tax system instead.

The government's proposals for tax reductions are a central, decisive part of its overall economic strategy, where the efforts to improve competitiveness appear as the main task overshadowing everything else. As Finance Minister Rolf Presthus stressed in yesterday's budget speech, the personal tax reductions proposed by the government could be the largest and most important contribution to those firms in difficulty, because the tax reductions could slow down the upward trend in wages and operating costs. If the Christian People's Party and the Center Party were to adopt positions whereby that the government would run the risk of not winning a majority for its tax proposals, it could be necessary for Prime Minister Willoch to use the cabinet question for the first time since he took office. If the very foundation of its economic policy were to disappear, the government would have no business being in office. The prime minister has already voiced this view on several occasions in the past.

Taking the circumstances into consideration, the government has made a correct political decision, firmly intent as it is on combating unemployment in both the short and long terms. The budget has been given an unmistakable social profile, and this means the consolidation of the welfare state and the secure society we have constructed. We are on the right road -- in accordance with what was promised before the election.

COCKFIELD SPEAKS ON U.S. TRADE POLICY, GATT

LD202140 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2116 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] A stern warning about the consequences of a shift by America towards protectionism came tonight from Trade Secretary Lord Cockfield.

He told the Lords that the world was watching with interest and real concern how the U.S. Administration was coping with strong pressure in Congress, fuelled by the recession, for new trade legislation.

"That could easily, in the guise of 'reciprocity' or of 'domestic content' bring America into conflict with its multilateral trading obligations in the GATT", he added.

The fears had been accentuated by the behaviour of the American administration over steel and the Siberian pipeline.

"A development of this kind, that is a move on the part of the United States in a protectionist direction, would be one of the biggest blows a great market economy could deliver to the open international trading system", Lord Cockfield said.

Speaking in a debate on the forthcoming GATT ministerial meeting, he added that the government should not blindly and unthinkingly follow a liberal trade policy for all sectors and in all circumstances.

But policy decisions for governments became more difficult as major departures from open trading, or fears of such departures increased.

"It is unreasonable and unrealistic to expect that any major trading country will continue to keep its market open to exports from another country if its own exporters are shut out of that country's domestic market," Lord Cockfield said.

The benefits of a liberal trading system were very great.

"If my home market is open to you, your home market ought to be open to me on equal terms."

Lord Cockfield said the November GATT meeting had the chance to take a limited step in that direction.

The House rose at 9:28 pm.

ULSTER ASSEMBLY ELECTION RESEMBLES OPINION POLL

PM200941 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 20 Oct 82 p 20

[Editorial: "Voting for Nothing"]

[Text] Even by Irish standards, today's election in Ulster is an extraordinary affair. The assembly to be elected will, in the first instance, have no power and its ability to achieve power will depend on its accepting certain conditions which all the main participants in the contest have already rejected.

The Social Democratic and Labour Party (SDLP) (the chief representative of the Roman Catholic minority), though it is putting up candidates, has announced that its members will neither sit nor accept their salaries.

It believes, correctly, that its principal opponents will never agree to power sharing, and that the whole exercise will therefore turn out to be either fatuous or a fraud. Mr Paisley and his Democratic Unionist Party speak quite kindly of the assembly, knowing that it will have some sort of Unionist majority and pretending to believe that Mr Prior will in the end hand over power to that majority rather than admit that he has fathered a dead duck. The Official Unionist under Mr Molyneaux (the solid, traditionalist party which used to take the Tory whip), is profoundly disillusioned. Many of its members, including its leader and Mr Powell, would like the assembly to be dissolved at the earliest opportunity and before it has had time to do irreparable harm to the union by pressing demands which no British Government could accept. They would like to see Ulster governed like any other part of the kingdom. Since, however it is not in the nature of assemblies to demand their own annihilation, they will begin by demanding that this one should have all the powers enjoyed by the old Stormont parliament; this they know will be rejected.

The Alliance Party (Ulster's equally sanctimonious equivalent of the SDP) [Social Democratic Party] is well disposed to Mr Prior's plan, as to all other types of confused moderation. But it will be surprising if it does very well. The best hope is that the Official Unionist (a stable and decent party) will do vastly better than Mr Paisley, and that the SDLP (which firmly rejects violence) will maintain its strength against those Republicans who more or less overtly support the IRA [Irish Republican Army]. This is not so much an election as an opinion poll. As the latest violence shows, however, the information which it will yield is being bought at a high cost.

PAPAIOANNOU REASSERTS AKEL STAND ON CYPRUS

NC201212 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou stated in his recommendation at yesterday's regular session of the plenum of the Central Committee and the Central Control Committee of the party that the Cyprus issue must be solved through intercommunal talks within the framework of the United Nations, through our own intensive struggle, through its all-sided internationalization and through the convocation of an international conference within the framework of the United Nations.

Papaioannou stated that it is an unquestionable fact that the presence of Turkish occupation troops in Cyprus creates a difficult and unilateral situation for the Greek Cypriot side at the intercommunal talks. The Cypriot people, he added, will never cease their struggle for withdrawal of the Turkish occupation and all other foreign troops from their territory.

He also stated the Cyrpus issue has been, and remains, correctly positioned since Ethnarch Makarios was alive and that it was, and remains, a question of ridding Cyprus of the Turkish occupation and imperialist intervention in our domestic affairs.

Papaioannou said there is not a single AKEL document or statement by its cadres which does not position the Cyprus issue on its correct foundation.

GREEK, TURKISH TRADE UNIONS ISSUE STATEMENT

[Text] The Pan-Cypriot Trade Union of Public Servants and the trade union of employees of Denktas' administration have decided to cooperate on a permanent basis for the promotion of mutual understanding and cooperation in order to avert the great dangers which, as they say in a joint statement, are created by the present situation and which threaten Cyprus' future.

The joint statement was released following a meeting that representatives of the two trade unions had at the seventh International Congress of Public Servants held in Prague. Within the framework of their cooperation, they have decided to work for the holding of an all-trade union conference in order to discuss practical measures and joint action on a permanent basis among the trade unions and other mass organizations for the promotion of good will, mutual confidence and cooperation among the working people of the two communities.

In their statement, the two trade unions voice concern and anxiety over the great prolongation of the Cyprus problem and ask for its settlement without any further delay through peaceful means. They also expressed support for the procedure of the intercommunal talks for a solution based on the UN resolutions, a solution which will provide for an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, nonaligned, federal and demilitarized Cyprus.

DENKTAS MEETS ISLAMIC LEAGUE REPRESENTATIVES

TA201500 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, held a meeting with representatives of the World Islamic League in New York. In a speech at a dinner given in his honor by the Islamic League, Denktas called on the Islamic countries to act in unity and solidarity in the just causes of the Turkish Federated State and the other Islamic countries. Relating how the Turkish Armed Forces had saved the Turkish Cypriots from Greek Cypriot cruelty with the 1974 peace operation, Denktas expressed the Turkish Cypriot community's sadness about the negative attitudes of certain countries regarding the Cyprus problem.

A representative of the World Islamic League, (Aladdin Harufa), said that the unity and solidarity of the Islamic world was important for the Turkish Cypriots' national cause. He added that the World Islamic League would help the Turkish cypriots.

DAILY COMMENTS ON MOOD OF GREEK-CYPRIOT TALKS

NC201010 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 20 Oct 82 p 3

[Text] It did not escape notice that President Kiprianou's latest visit to Athens was undertaken in a sufficiently warm atmosphere and that it was given continual television coverage. This was not the case for the two gentlemen's other meetings following the announcement of the minimum program [Democratic Party-AKEL cooperation]. If one ignores the expedient embraces and certain formal smiles, Kiprianou and Papandreou kept a distance between them created by the minimum program and the abuse AKEL directed against Papandreou.

It now appears that something has changed. All indications point to a certain rapprochement, or at least a certain mutual tolerance. This is no way surprises us, because it is something which we forecast based on the possible developments of Greek domestic affairs. Papandreou is faced with serious problems both inside and outside his own party. He would in no way want his problems to be expanded under the light of the Cyprus issue, particularly after the results of the Greek municipal elections which allow the Communist Party of Florakis [KKE] to attempt a regulatory role in the country's political affairs. Naturally, observing protocol in no way means that the differences in Athens-Nicosia relations have been smoothed out. This remains a burning issue.

PAPANDREOU QUESTIONED BY FOREIGN CORRESPONDENTS

NC202110 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 20 Oct 82 pp 7, 13

[Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou's answers to questions at a luncheon by foreign press correspondents in Athens on 19 October]

[Excerpts] Question connected with Greece's attitude toward the Polish situation.

Answer: Within the EEC framework as well as on other occasions, we have unreservedly denounced the proclamation of martial law in Poland. We have radically disagreed with the approval of sanctions against the USSR and Poland. We have been fully vindicated on the European and world-wide level. Even the United States is violating its own regulations by sending grain and cereals to the USSR in astonishingly historical quantities.

Question connected with the positions of PASOK and the government toward NATO, the bases, the EEC and the "alliance" with the KKE during the municipal elections.

Answer: I do not know to which alliance the reference is made because, as you know PASOK participated in the vast majority of the municipal areas with its own candidates.

PASOK, the Government of Greece, does not believe in the division of Europe into two cold-war blocs. It does not overlook this division because today it is, unfortunately, a given fact in Europe's international life. Greece does not wish to belong to any military bloc and, consequently, not even to NATO; we have not concealed this, we do not conceal it and we do not change our stance, particularly since NATO supported the dictatorship in Greece for 7 years and has let Cyprus be led to a real tragedy. As I said at the sporting club gathering, every step in our foreign policy must be guided by ensuring the highest possible security and independence as well as our territorial integrity. For each step we must be responsible to the people. We will do and are doing whatever we can without jeopardizing the security of the nation or the people.

As you know, with regard to NATO, there are already serious problems with the military arm of the alliance, problems which refer to the "triangular relations" of NATO-Ankara-Athens. We have not managed to resolve these problems during the past 12 months and, consequently, Greece has not fully reciprocated on the content -- as it is being interpreted -- of the agreement on Greece's reintegration, that is, the Rogers agreement.

I cannot predict the future. But I confine myself to this answer. With regard to the U.S. base, we have stressed and do stress that the presense of foreign bases in our country limits our national independence and the national people's sovereignty over our country. The U.S. bases do not serve any direct national defense interests of our country and, of course, they are not a continuation of Greece's commitments toward NATO. The bases exclusively serve -- unless one views them within the framework of a world war -- the strategic interests of the great United States in this region, particularly at a time when the U.S. role in the eastern Mediterranean and in the Middle East is greatly reinforced as a result of the neutrality toward developments being shown by the USSR. We have invited the United States to a dialogue, a dialogue in connection with the future of the bases.

We stressed prior to the [parliamentary] elections, as well as in our policy statement, that it is not our intention to unilaterally take by surprise the superpower called the United States, that first, the framework of the presence of the bases -- that is the timetable -- will be shaped through a dialogue; second, there will follow the terms under which, during that period of time, the bases will operate within the framework of the given timetable; and third, that the existing agreements -- they number 108 -- introduce a colonial status (this is the result of civil war) and that such a status is unacceptable. If the two parties do not come to an agreement, if the talks do not arrive at a positive result, then the bases must go.

With regard to the EEC, I think a few words would suffice. We have raised the question of special relations with the European Community. We believe that, with the framework in force, a country with such a relatively low per capita income within this club of rich countries will be unable to soundly and successfully plan its agricultural, industrial, economic or social development. I am glad the EEC has displayed both a strong interest in and desire for dialogue, a dialogue which is now continuing and for which, of course, I cannot say anything more today.

Question connected with the municipal and communal election results and particularly with the increase in KKE strength and the repercussions on government policy.

Answer: I would first of all like to say that I am not in a position -- I am saying this sincerely -- to assess whether there has been any flow [of voters] from PASOK to the KKE, where it happened or how much it has been. I would like to recall that during the 1981 parliamentary elections PASOK received 44 percent of the votes in Athens. During the same occasion, but in the case of the Europarliament, we received only 31 percent at the same moment. This means that, indeed, the parliamentary, Europarliamentary and municipal elections cannot be subjected to the same analysis as equal, equivalent or uniform things. I also wish to tell you something else: The government has its program, its strategic goals. We would rather not be in power than violate any one of our strategic positions or strategic goals. Therefore, any bargain with any party -- a bargain that would change our goals -- must be ruled out in advance.

Question connected with Greek-Turkish relations and cooperation in commercial and other levels.

Answer: As you know, it has been a few months since it was agreed between the two governments to observe a moratorium, that is a truce, in connection with provocative statements or provocative actions in the Aegean area.

I can generally say that this truce has been observed and, as a consequence, Greek Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos met with Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen in Ottawa on 2 October and agreed to meet again -- this is actually the content of the meeting -- in Brussels on 9 December in order to explore the possibility of a "dialogue framework" for the so-called Greek-Turkish differences.

When I refer to the Greek-Turkish differences I wish to make it clear that I do not refer to the Cyprus problem which, for us, has never been and is not a Greek-Turkish issue. It is an international problem, a problem of the independence and integrity of a UN member country.

Question as to whether the handling of the problem of the bases is within the framework of the international balance of power.

Answer: Allow me to say something about the balance [of power]. As has been said by others on many occasions, the balance -- so long as the two blocs exist -- is a prerequisite for peace. This balance must be sought downwards through disarmament and not upwards through an arms race.

With regard to the balance of nuclear terror, we believe that there the question surpasses human logic. There is balance not only with regard to nuclear arms, but at many levels.

For example, when the program of Great Britain, of the present British Government, mainly for submarines, is completed, England alone will be in a position level with the USSR. Today the United States can do this many times. The Soviet Union can do this many times. It is clear that the balance in the question of nuclear arms has ceased to have any meaning, but I can add that, for us, the presence of Euromissiles, medium-range missiles, Pershings and cruises on one hand, and of SS-20 on the other, constitutes the greatest and most direct danger for Europe.

We must not forget that one of the strategies being mentioned is that a nuclear conflict between the United States and the USSR can be confined to the European continent, therefore it is feasible, therefore it can be inserted in some strategy. For this reason, beyond any technological analysis, PASOK says no to nuclear arms in Europe, no to nuclear arms in the Balkans, no to nuclear arms in Greece.

Now let us address the question of the bases. Of course the only significance of the bases -- whether they are in Greece or Italy -- which, as I said, concern U.S. strategic interests, is a conflict between the two blocs; they do not directly concern the Greek cause. But we are unable to see the problem from this world-wide point of view. I think that the Greek Government has a primary and supreme duty to its people, who have made huge sacrifices during two world wars but who have been kept in a satellite-like status and have seen their interests sacrificed for the sake of the various strategic interests of the superpowers that prevailed each time.

Question connected with the prime minister's forthcoming visit to Romania.

Answer: This visit will take place in November at the invitation of Romanian President Nikolay Ceausescu. And it is natural that I should attach such great importance to this visit because Mr Ceausescu has contributed not only to good-neighborly relations, detente and friendship in the Mediteranean region, but also because, with his really world-wide reputation and his systematic and continuous efforts, he is contributing to peace, detente and disarmament. Thus, for us it is a meeting that is being undertaken with great pleasure and we believe it will further consolidate our relations and peace in the Balkans.

Question connected with a likely visit to Washington by Mr Papandreou and with the nature of the negotiations on the bases.

Answer: As I have said in the past, the dialogue on the bases is primarily a political dialogue. For this reason, as it has already become known, the first phase of the dialogue, which is a decisive one, too, refers to the general principles which are of a political nature. The technical processing on another level, the technical level, will follow.

It is probable that after a procedure which will have taken form and shape in Athens it may be considered useful to have a meeting with President Reagan. If both sides consider this useful, I would be glad to go to Washington. At this moment there is no invitation; moreover, I do not consider the talks as having started; they have not taken form or shape, and it would be clearly premature to have a meeting at a summit level. In my opinion, something like this would be much more effective after the conclusion of the first phase of talks in Athens.

RIZOSPASTIS SCORES PASOK VIEW OF ELECTIONS

NC191844 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 19 Oct 82 pp 1, 9

[From the "Commenting on Developments" column]

[Excerpts] Yesterday things were very downcast for the pro-government press and particularly for ELEVTHEROTIPIA and ETHNOS. What could they say in the face of the implacable truth of numbers, when for an entire month they celebrated in advance "PASKOK's sweeping victory" while they presented the KKE as being dragged to the fray in order "to save face"?

Naturally, these two newspapers had learned their lesson well from Hellenic Radio and Television, which truly raved in partisanship and discrimination. We will only refer to certain late developments which caused its audience justified indignation. Hellenic Radio and Television proceeded with two unprecedented interventions in an effort to influence the electorate: On Saturday it broadcast the prime minister's pre-election speech in the Chamber of Deputies and at noon Sunday -- while voting was in progress -- it broadcast similar statements by the prime minister. While broadcasting results at night, the candidates of democratic cooperation were dubbed as PASOK candidates; municipalities represented by united KKE slates were often totally deleted by the "brain" who proved himself sufficiently "anticommunist."

The very same methods were used by ELEVTHEROTIPIA and ETHNOS. "Green [PASOK's color] Mayors Everywhere" were seen by ELEVTHEROTIPIA. "Greece Turned Green," started ETHNOS' political reportage. Where did they find this?

The truth is entirely different:

-- First of all, the people ratified cooperation between the democratic forces. Wherever there were democratic cooperation slates, the defeat of the rightwing was crushing, right from the first round.

-- With their mass support of the unified slates supported by the KKE, the people confirmed the basic necessity of supporting the KKE so that it can proceed with the cause of change.

-- The people condemned theories about "self-sufficiency." Wherever the democratic forces in the election were divided, the slates supported by PASOK lost considerable ground.

-- The rightwing cannot be dealt with through PASOK's divisive one-party policy. Wherever this policy undermined cooperation, the rightwing avoided collapse.

-- The people have stentoriously rejected PASOK's anticommunist cooperation with the various hot-air balloons of the "Interior" [KKE] and the united democratic left type. Not only did these hot-air balloons fail to add anything to PASOK, but, on the contrary, they managed to deprive the slates supported by PASOK of percentages far greater than their own strength. Once again the "Interior," with its anticommunist monomania, in exactly the same manner as it behaved under the "alliance," proved itself to be a repulsing, dissolving and unlucky factor.

Instead of accepting these simple truths, certain pro-government newspapers prefer to rave about "green pastures." How long, however, will they be able to underestimate their readers in this manner? Don't they understand that their readers have eyes, that they can see and that they cannot accept the color of a red orange as green? Do they fail to understand that theories about "self-sufficiency" and "the lot of fate" upon which they based all their circulation and other hopes are not supported by the people who, once again, are in favor of cooperation for the sake of change?

RESOLUTION FORBIDS CRITICISM OF CONSTITUTION

[National Security Council Resolution No 71 issued on 20 Oct -- read by announcer]

[Text] 1. Since the Consultative Assembly began to debate the new draft constitution on 4 August 1982, our citizens, the press, the high judiciary bodies, universities, unions and associations have criticized it very extensively, freely and democratically with a view to developing and improving it in such a way that it can enable our country and nation to be enhanced in security, peace and prosperity. The National Security Council has consistently followed the views, suggestions and criticisms expressed by these institutions and establishments and has taken them into consideration in its own work.

2. Since the new constitution gained its final form in the National Security Council and was published in the Official Gazette, henceforth the duty of officially familiarizing our lofty nation with the constitution will be fulfilled on behalf of the state by means of speeches to be delivered by our head of state on the radio, television and during visits to certain provinces, from 24 October 1982 until 5 November 1982. In this situation, it has been deemed necessary to add the following Clause 4 to Section B of Article 1 of National Security Council Resolution 70:

(4) The (?temporary) articles of the constitution which have been drawn up to ensure a stable, secure and speedy passage to a parliamentary and democratic system, and the speeches to introduce the constitution to the nation, to be delivered by the head of state on the radio and television, and during his visits within the country, cannot be criticized, nor can any verbal or written statements be issued against them. This decision goes into force with its publication.

BAYULKEN ADDRESSES ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON DEFENSE

[Text] National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken has said that the Greek Cypriot side's extreme desire for and efforts toward arming themselves will lead to negative developments on the island and that these developments will also affect relations between Turkey and Greece. In a speech at the Consultative Assembly Budget and Planning Committee, Bayulken said that efforts were being made to make the national industry meet the defense requirements so that the war force of the Turkish Armed Forces could be raised to the desired level against internal and external threats. The national defense minister recalled Ataturk's principle of "peace at home, peace in the world" and added that Turkey did not covet anybody's land. However, he added, we are determined not to give away even an inch of the land within our national borders and the entire world should know this very well.

Bayulken noted that Turkey, which has a powerful armed force, would remain a balancing element in the most sensitive part of the world. He went on to say that Turkey was fulfilling its duties to ensure unity and solidarity within the NATO alliance. He added: We expect our friends to be aware of our loyalty and react in kind to our good will in our bilateral and multilateral relations.

Bayulken then said: The Middle East has become one of the most sensitive parts of the world as a result of recent developments. Turkey is the NATO country closest to this area. The policies pursued by our government are developing our relations with the Middle Eastern countries from every aspect. The further development and strengthening of these good relations would also contribute to the favorable solution of any problems that might arise in NATO's southern wing. This is as much a natural action Turkey would take as a result of its historical development as it is an absolute requirement of its economic development and interests. As always, Turkey is continuing to pursue a peaceful and balanced policy in the face of incidents occurring in the Middle East. In this way, Turkey remains an element of security and stability and thus helps the efforts to protect peace.

The defense minister stressed that areas of instability were increasing in Turkey's region and there was no sign that these negative developments would stop. Therefore, he added, the issue of Turkey's having a sufficient deterrent defense power was gaining special importance.

Bayulken stated that Turkey was exerting efforts to have good relations with all its neighbors. Despite that, he added, weapons obtained from Eastern and Western countries were observed in the Greek Cypriot parade held on 1 October. Bayulken added: I believe it would be appropriate to recall that we do not find convenient the Greek Cypriot side's extreme desire and efforts to arm themselves. Such efforts, that upset the balance in Cyprus, hurt the Turkish Cypriot community's sense of security and also have a negative effect on the negotiations being held on the island. Ultimately, negative developments on the island would harm the interests of both communities and would also affect our relations with our neighbor, Greece. We believe that good, neighborly and friendly relations and mutual cooperation with Greece would be useful, mainly regarding the strategic positions of the two countries, as well as other factors. We also believe that our problems can be resolved through bilateral talks.

VOTCP INTERVIEWS BILEN ON 80TH BIRTHDAY

[Interview with Turkish Communist Party Secretary General Bilen by unidentified correspondent on the occasion of his 80th birthday, date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Good day, Comrade Bilen. On behalf of the technical and editorial staff of the Voice of Turkish Communist Party [VOTCP] radio, I would like to greet you on your 80th birthday wishing you many more years of struggle and success. All the staff express their desire for many more years of collaboration with you.

[Answer] I thank you all. I also want to express my hope for the (?success) of the staff of VOTCP radio and its sister station, Our Radio. With their valuable work, they are greatly contributing to the struggle of the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] being waged under very difficult and dangerous conditions.

[Question] We have received a large number of letters greeting you on your 80th birthday. In addition to greetings from various party provincial committees and other party organizations, there are letters from a large number of our young listeners and workers. They are all wishing you a long life and many years of successful work. Taking into consideration the current existing conditions, we thought you might not be able to answer each and every one of these letters. What would you like to tell them on this occasion?

[Answer] I would like to address them directly.

[Question] Please, Comrade Bilen.

[Answer] Dear Comrades, my working and young friends: I am very happy to be able to stand with you in your class struggle. I am grateful for the valuable letters you have addressed to me. All the words of praise you have addressed to me actually belong to the honorable struggle waged by our party for 62 years. I am convinced that every member of our party is worth the sacrifices we have made. The TCP, which waged a consistent and difficult struggle for the sake of our working class and our people for 62 years, is [word indistinct]. The TCP is our most lofty possession as well as our most powerful weapon. The struggling elements of the party -- workers, toilers and youths who are loyal to the party -- are struggling at the most difficult period in our history, showing courage against the aggressive NATO, U.S. imperialism, the collaborationist and monopolist bourgeoisie as well as against the reactionary junta of the generals. The coming generations will not forget the sufferings and acts of bravery which arouse feelings of pride.

On 7 November, all humanity will mark the 65th anniversary of the great October revolution. Workers of my generation had also marked with joy this revolution, carried out jointly by workers and peasants for the first time in the history of mankind. I will never forget how the wonderful news of the great revolution reached our district, an area of poverty, where I was born and raised. This day is a great anniversary. It is the date which intimidated all the capitalists and tyrants in the world.

As a result of an interesting coincidence, on that very day, 7 November 1982, the Turkish working class, the toilers, in fact, our poverty-stricken population of 45 million, will go to the polls for a referendum on the constitution. That day does seem an auspicious one for the generals and it will not be one. Our people are capable of telling the military dictators, who continuously drag our country blindly into fire behind U.S. imperialsim, to stop. The blue color of the no vote in the referendum is the symbol of peace. Peace brings more [word indistinct] and liberty.

We Communists have never known any particular interests other than the interests of the working class and the toilers. No matter what the enemies of the class struggle claim, we were born as toilers and we are living (?among) them. For 62 years, the bourgeoisie has ruthlessly attacked and oppressed our party and the most valuable work of our people. The situation is no different today. The bourgeoisie will go on attacking us until the day it collapses.

We are still under heavy pressure. I warmly greet our struggling party members as well as the resisting working friends and the young girls and boys of our youth organization. The same goes for Communists who refuse to bow to oppression in the dungeons. I respectfully greet those who sacrificed their lives for the happiness of the people.

I greet my 80th birthday with the same feelings that I had on the day I joined our party in the Halic District of Istanbul. That day was my birthday. Exactly 62 years ago I joined the ranks of our great party. Like you, I also owe everything to the party founded by Mustafa Suphi and his followers. I know of nothing that makes me prouder than being in its ranks. The TCP is waging its struggle under the most difficult of conditions, but it will nevertheless be successful. Long live the TCP, the party of the Turkish working class.

MILLIYET ON U.S. PRESSURES CONCERNING RDF

NC141200 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 8 Oct 82 p 2

["Viewpoint" column by Professor Mumtaz Soysal]

[Excerpts] Turkey is under a double-edged pressure from its biggest ally, both officially and through public opinion. The first pressure comes from certain circles in the United States which want Turkey to say "Yes" to the Rapid Deployment Force (RDF), intended, without much thinking, for use against the Soviet threat to the Persian Gulf. The second pressure is that they [these circles] expect Turkish authorities, as well as all of the Turkish people, to say unanimously and in a most pronounced manner that "the Soviet Union is the only responsible force behind the terrorism which has brought us to the 12 September military intervention." This is an attitude which would undermine Turkey's relations with its northern neighbor in a manner that would not be easy to repair, knowing as they do how dangerous Turkish-Soviet tension would be to world peace.

All of this is part and parcel of another big wave which was formed during Reagan's election campaign and which gained great momentum when he came to power, wanting to mobilize both the state and the public behind it. It wishes to end detente in the world, to stimulate rearmament and to support a preposterously expensive "electronic war" industry. Like all human beings who put something into their heads and invariably walk in the direction of their noses, these very "intelligent" people are also committing the most serious blunder: treating other people as stupid.

For example, is it possible for Turkey as a state and nation to stupidly say "Yes" to an RDF which would completely destroy its chances with the Arab states, with whom it has barely managed to improve relations over the years, even to the extent of increasing its trade with the Middle East and obtaining cheaper oil?

Nevertheless, as a state and a nation, Turkey has to be vigilant during these days, despite all kinds of pressures. It has to put its own interests above the big interests of others and to bear in mind that it has got to continue to be an element of peace and good neighborliness in the region. "Doctor No's," who are after dangerous games which could destroy the entire world, are brainless enough not to see that the strongest assurance for the security of the Middle East is a Turkey with a healthy economy, free people, peaceful relations and unmolested neighborliness. Staying away from them is the greatest service that Turkey can render to both itself and to all mankind.

CUMHURIYET Comments

["The Truth Behind the Events" column]

[Text] The U.S. Middle East policy may be assessed from various angles. It may also generally be argued that though it may appear to be successful and dexterously manipulated at times, it still intensifies crises and leads to explosions. What is left of the Camp David accord today is a little ash and a little smoke. The explosion in Iran can be considered the biggest event leading to the collapse of the visions of the White House. Examples in this vein are numerous. The policy Washington is pursuing in the Middle East, sometimes getting in front of Tel Aviv and sometimes hiding behind it, has taken the form of a fixed idea -- from the viewpoint of the Rapid Deployment Force (RDF) -- in connection with the Persian Gulf. The intensification of the RDF movements and bases which would protect the monarchies of the Gulf means to create a network of U.S. strategy with new connections.

As always, Washington looks for and supports governments which tend to serve this objective. Both the White House and the CIA are involved in this. Vacuums and discriminations have periodically been observed between the official U.S. policies and the CIA. It is difficult to talk of a difference in the tone of this policy in the Middle East. Washington is seeking a comprehensive basis for its Middle East policy alongside its military strategy in the Persian Gulf. The administrations of the countries which would form this basis are facing a dilemma. If the administration which identifies itself with the policy of "surrender" to Washington loses its popular support, the danger grows in intensity. The risk of being isolated from the Islamic world is another source of anxiety.

Two main rules have always prevailed in U.S. foreign policy: 1. Administrations saying "Yes, sir" to the wishes of the United States are supported, even if they happen to be undemocratic; 2. Unfortunately, the United States feels free to turn its back on a foreign country with an administration which grows weak and disintegrates.

U.S. "support" and "ingratitude" is the dialectic of the dilemma. That is why "wise" administrations do not trust U.S. support and know that this support is not an assurance of "stability" for their administrations.

We hope that Turkey, which seeks "stability" in the Mediterranean between the Islamic world of the Middle East and the democratic world of Europe, has rulers experienced enough to perceive such simple facts.

RECORD BUDGET DEFICIT ENVISAGED FOR 1983

AU211041 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 21 Oct 82 pp 1-2

[Summary] At yesterday's meeting of the Austrian Nationalrat, Finance Minister Salcher presented the 1983 draft budget. It provides for expenditures of 399.4 million schillings (1982: 368.3 million schillings), and revenues of 325.6 billion schillings (1981: 309.1 billion schillings) and a gross deficit of 73.8 billion schillings. In his budget speech, the finance minister stressed that no tax increases are planned for 1983. He pointed out that the large deficit was accepted deliberately, because the budget policy must be oriented to the overall needs of the national economy, and also because the government continues to give priority to maintaining high employment.

[Text] During his visit to Vienna, the Yugoslav finance minister did not obtain any super loan running into billions of schillings, but the Austrian Kontrollbank will continue to adopt secondary liability for loans granted to Austrian producers for exports to Yugoslavia. Yugoslavia's debts to Austria at present total some 8 billion schillings.

Work on the Karawanken Tunnel project can now finally start after the recent Vienna negotiations when Austria consented to prefinance about 70 percent of the construction costs of the Yugoslav part of the tunnel, on condition that this part of the construction work be carried out by Austrian firms. The tunnel is to be completed by 1990.

BARRE URGES SELF-DETERMINATION FOR OGADEN

AU211140 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 21 Oct 82 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "GWO"]

[Excerpt] Vienna -- Somalia does not raise any territorial claims against Ethiopia, but it is afflicted with the consequences of the Ethiopian aggression: Most of the 2.5 million refugees whom Somalia has had to admit to its territory come from the Ogaden region, whose people should determine their own future in a referendum under international control. This was stated by Somali Foreign Minister Jama Barre on Wednesday in Vienna at the conclusion of his 3-day official visit to Vienna.

During this visit, the Somali guest had talks with Chancellor Kreisky, to whom he conveyed a personal message from Somali President Siad Barre. In talks with the chancellor and with Foreign Minister Pahr, he discussed the possibilities of expanding Austrian-Somali cooperation. Barre focused on the problems in the Horn of Africa, a question which aroused the strong interest of his Austrian interlocutors. Barre left Vienna on Wednesday afternoon and proceeded to Switzerland.

KOHL WELCOMES FRANCE'S MITTERRAND TO BONN TALKS

LD211628 Hamburg DPA in German 1519 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 21 Oct (DPA) -- For the first time in his role as federal chancellor, Helmut Kohl welcomed French President Francois Mitterrand in Bonn on Thursday afternoon for French-German governmental consultations.

Kohl: 'Closer Cooperation'

[Excerpts] Bonn, 21 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl has stressed the desire for even closer cooperation between the FRG and France. At a dinner in honor of French President Francois Mitterrand on Thursday within the framework of French-German consultatins, Kohl said that he wants to do his utmost to promote this close cooperation. This applies to foreign policy and to action within the EEC and on economic issues. Kohl said that Europe's only future lies in the community between Germany and France.

Kohl stressed, as he already had done during his visit to Paris, the continuity of French-German cooperation. Even his first conversation with Mitterrand had shown him "that a German chancellor, even one who is new to the job, never has to start from scratch in French-German affairs." He can fall back on what had been begun long ago and what in the course of the years had been enriched "with real and substantial cooperation." French-German friendship is firmly anchored in the people, irrespective of the governments of the day. It is the politicians' task to keep on giving this cooperation "new and powerful impulses."

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his French counterpart Claude Cheysson discussed East-West relations. According to a foreign Ministry statement, both took the view that in the context of overall political and economic relations with the Eastern bloc states, there should be as soon as possible, a stance which has been attuned to that of the United States. Current EEC problems were also discussed.

Greater Defense Cooperation

NC212002 Paris AFP in English 1924 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, Oct 21 (AFP) -- France and West Germany will step-up cooperation on security and defense issues, West German diplomatic sources said here today after a six-hour meeting of the two countries foreign and defense ministers.

The discussions were part of a two-day French-German summit that opened here today with talks between French President Francois Mitterrand and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

A joint declaration will not be published until talks have finished tomorrow. But four themes are expected to dominate the summit: The economic crisis in the Western world, defense and security in Europe, relations between Western Europe and the superpowers, and the economic recovery of the European Community.

No details were released after the initial, two-hour private meeting between Mr Mitterrand and Mr Kohl, which was immediately followed by talks between the chancellor and French Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy.

Beforehand, however, West German political circles said both sides would try to seek ways to revive their respective economies and that Bonn was determined to support the French franc -- under heavy pressure in the monetary markets -- and supports the franc's position within the European Monetary System.

After the meeting, on security issues, both French Defense Minister Charles Hernu and his West German counterpart, Manfred Woerner, expressed satisfaction with the talks, though Mr Woerner denied speculation of any new nuclear axis between Paris and Bonn.

Diplomatic sources said the possible use of French tactical nuclear weapons, in case of conflict, were at the center of talks. But informed sources here denied reports that any such nuclear cooperation would include the future use of French-made neutron bombs along advance battle lines -- West Germany's east border -- against Warsaw Pact tanks.

The sources said today's discussion was the first of a new type Franco-West German consultation on European defense issues.

Bonn, in particular, wants to be kept informed of any changes in French defense policy, particularly concerning tactical weapons that would be used on West German soil.

These include, according to the sources, the new Hades missile with a 350 km (218 mile) range and the possible future production of a neutron bomb by France.

Though no decision has been made by Paris, Mr Mitterrand has asked for more research into this armament, which the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has called the "anti-tank weapon par excellence" that could be "useful for the central European sector."

Carstens Receives Mitterrand

[Text] Bonn, 22 Oct (DPA) -- Federal President Karl Carstens received French President Francois Mitterrand in Bonn this morning for a talk on current political questions. The talk opened the second day of the French-German consultations.

After the talk, the agenda included a continuation of the exchange of views begun yesterday between Mitterrand and Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

BRANDT ON EAST-WEST POLICY, MISSILES, DISARMAMENT

[Text] Bonn, 21 Oct (DPA) -- SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has expressed support for the new Federal Government in its assurance of continuity regarding its policy toward the East. "We have noted and are not afraid to welcome the fact that the present Federal Government has announced its desire for continuity in the development of East-West relations," Brandt said today at a German-Soviet conference of the Friedrich Ebert Foundation in Bonn. The SPD will take the government at its word and measure it on the basis of this assertion. The SPD also recommended foreign partners to do likewise.

Addressing the Soviet Union, Brandt also promised the SPD's "full support" for any contribution toward stabilizing East-West relations; any strengthening of detente and cooperation; any effort to prevent a return to the cold war and any step aimed at ending the arms race. Good, fruitful and forward-directed relations between the Soviet Union and Federal Republic are of such exceptional importance, not only for the two countries but for all of Europe, that their cultivation and further development should not depend on changes in the leadership of one country or the other.

According to the SPD chairman, maximum confidence-building continuity and reliability in relations with the Soviet Union means that the German-Soviet treaty "must not only be observed very meticulously, but also be filled with life again and again." This includes, Brandt said, indirectly criticizing the U.S. sanctions policy toward Moscow on the gas pipeline deal, "so that we should let no one hinder us in continuing and, where possible, intensifying mutually useful economic and technological cooperation."

Brandt called for continuation and revival of the policy of detente, as well as decisive steps toward disarmament. He underlined the SPD's goal of "security partnership" with the East but at the same time, stressed the Federal Republic's membership in the Western alliance as the basis of its security policy. Brandt strongly appealed to the United States and the Soviet Union, who are negotiating in Geneva on nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe, to be ready to compromise. The Germans, who are threatened by these weapons, "must urge those responsible, with great emphasis, to remove unilateral threats and to create such conditions that the basing of new medium-range weapons here is made superfluous."

The SPD leader described the initial positions at the Geneva talks as being unable as yet to reach agreement. Each side would have to consider carefully what is possible and necessary in the way of compromises in the interests of greater security for all parties. "Nothing would be more devastating for the entire system of East-West relations than for Geneva to remain unsuccessful," he said.

Brandt warned the Soviet Union against deceiving itself into thinking that the SPD, in its new role as opposition party, would change its attitude with regard to the NATO decision on medium-range weapons. The SPD desires a satisfactory outcome of the talks and would take a stand on the question of siting new medium-range missiles in the light of results from Geneva. "No one should doubt our determination in this respect to do what is necessary in the interests of our state's security."

LAMBSDORFF SEES DOWNWARD ECONOMIC TREND

[Excerpt] Berlin, 21 Oct (DPA) -- In the view of Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff, economic development in the Federal Republic could "for the time being" proceed even further in a downward direction. Addressing the 2-day conference of German enterpreneurs which opened in Berlin today, Lambsdorff said that it is therefore particularly important to strengthen the economy's investment power. Wage policy can be decisive in helping improve conditions for more investments and more employment.

Lambsdorff called on enterpreneurs to the advantage of every opportunity to provide job training. He said that the new coalition will pursue a "sounder finance policy" than the previous one did and adapt the social security system to the changed growth conditions "without endangering the system itself." Subsidies will be taken away from firms, but investment conditions will be further improved.

The chairman of the Association of Young Entrepreneurs, Thomas Selter, said that the political change in Bonn was necessary both from a social and economic point of view. Selter described the Federal Government's planned cut of 1 percent in subsidies as disappointing since industry itself had proposed higher cuts.

WARNING TO USSR: ADDRESS TRADE IMBALANCE

[Text] Paris, Oct 21 (AFP) -- France has warned Moscow that it could reconsider its deal to buy Siberian gas if the growing trade imbalance between the two countries is not checked, Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert said here today.

In terms of the gas accord signed by Paris and Moscow early this year, France will buy 4,000 million cubic metres of Siberian gas each year starting in 1984. This will be in addition to 8,000 million cubic metres of Soviet gas already being bought each year by France.

The two countries are due to meet in Moscow in December for a meeting of the Franco-Soviet mixed economic commission.

Mr Jobert was addressing a press conference just one day after the French cabinet announced an emergency plan to improve France's fast-deteriorating balance of foreign trade. He noted that Soviet imports of French goods had progressed slowly over the past year, with [words indistinct] into contracts with West Germany worth six times as much its contracts with France. But Mr Jobert added that the Soviet Union was "beginning to understand" the problem, citing as an example the food deal for 1982/83 signed by Agriculture Minister Edith Cresson during her visit to Moscow last week.

Mrs Cresson told the press conference that the Soviets now appeared to understand that the growing Soviet-Franco trade imbalance was "unacceptable" to Paris. Her meeting with Soviet Cabinet ministers included some tough bargaining, during which the Soviets refused to buy nearly as much French grain as the French would have liked.

As a result, observers said, the food deal was notably vague on detail and figures.

During the 12 months that ended on August 31, French exports to the Soviet Union totalled 9,900 million francs (1,400 million dollars), compared to imports of Soviet goods worth 20,500 million francs (3,000 million dollars). This left France with a trade deficit of 10,600 million francs (more than 1,500 million dollars).

The deficit for 1982 is expected to be around 12,000 million francs (1,700 million dollars), up from 8,300 million francs (1,200 million dollars) last year and 4,500 million francs (640 million dollars) in 1980.

More on Trade Imbalance

[Text] [Minister of State for Foreign Trade] Michel Jobert has just revealed that the government is firmly determined to restore the balance of trade between Paris and Moscow. PREMIER HAS 'POSITIVE' TALK WITH PCF GROUP

PM211401 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 Oct 82 p 9

[Patrick Jarreau and Alain Rollat report: "Mr Maurov Stresses Need for Majority Unity"]

[Excerpts] [French Premier] Pierre Mauroy addressed the Communist deputies and senators in the National Assembly on Thursday, 14 October, at the end of the 1-day working session during which the PCF elected representatives had discussions with Economy and Finance Minister Jacques Delors, Labor Minister Jean Auroux and Budget Minister Laurent Fabius.

Also attending were Research and Industry Minister Jean-Pierre Chevenement, Social Affairs Minister Pierre Beregovoy, Employment Minister Jean le Garrec and Vocational Training Minister Marcel Rigout. Education Minister Alain Savary and Minister for Public Office Anicet le Pors, who were also present, were unable to speak because of lack of time; another meeting with those two ministers is planned.

Speaking to the PCF representatives last, Mr Mauroy expressed the hope that the majority parties would work together in the same spirit as they did after the liberation and, in that connection, he recalled the appeals for collective effort launched in 1946 by Maurice Thorez. The political, economic and social context is different now, but according to the premier, the leftwing parties must express the same determination in ensuring the country's recovery.

Mr Mauroy stated in particular: "I think it is vital not to return to debates which undermined the left in the past. Of course it is true that history is not only made up of conflicts among men; it is also shaped by their dreams and utopias, and the left must always bring hope.

"But it is important not to confuse dreams and illusions. And to those who might be tempted to take up the attitude launched in 1936 that 'everything is possible,' I would like to say: 'No, everything is not possible immediately.' Governing means making choices, picking out priorities, respecting a timetable."

Couching his remarks in very careful terms to avoid upsetting his audience, the premier then called on the Communists to ensure that any criticisms they might make -- whose legitimacy he does not dispute -- do not undermine majority solidarity too much: "I fully accept that some decisions may be displeasing and be criticized," he stressed, "but let us not deceive ourselves: There can be no government action which is popular in every respect. We have been forced and will in the future certainly be forced to take unpopular measures. Nobody can accept the positive and reject the negative aspects. The majority must show solidarity, but that does not mean it must automatically give its approval to the government."

National Assembly PCF Group Chairman Andre Lajoinie said that the exchange of views had been "frank and positive." The Communist parliamentarians, Mr Lajoinie said, echoed the reactions which they are hearing in the country, "without disguising the truth, even when it meant expressing dissatisfaction and even discontent." Mr Lajoinie specified that the Communist parlimentarians' aim was not to "take into account the positive aspects of government action and leave the negative aspects to others."

The Communist parliamentarians "stressed the obstacles and difficulties" which are hindering the "national economic renewal," Mr lajoinie said. The chairman of the assembly Communist group mentioned "the difficulties inherited" and those which are the result of the behavior "of the rightwing and capitalist forces" and even behavior "of some economic forces, even in the nationalized enterprises."

"We emphasized to the government that, in our view, the effort to increase purchasing power, especially that of the workers and low and medium wage-earners, while ensuring their social protection, is completely indivisible from the effort to progress toward national economic recovery," Mr Lajoinie said. The workers, he added, must "benefit from" that recovery. Mr Lajoinie stressed the need for measures to establish social and fiscal justice, especially in the 1983 budget, and measures to "combat unemployment and create jobs."

The premier's office noted that "moderation" and a "constructive attitude" prevailed throughout that day and considered that the result of that meeting was therefore generally positive. And that is a source of satisfaction for the premier which is particularly appreciated, since he had rather feared right up to the last minute that things might be different.

LEBANON'S AL-JUMAYYIL ARRIVES, BEGINS CONTACTS

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 21 -- Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil arrived here today from Paris on the last stage of his tour of the capitals which have sent troops to the Italo-Franco-American international peace force in Beirut.

Immediately on arrival, after a brief chat with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo at Ciampino International Airport, Al-Jumayyil helicoptered to the Vatican City for a private audience with Pope John Paul II.

Following their usual practise for private audiences, Vatican sources would say nothing about what was discussed, but it is almost certain that one topic was the possibility of a papal visit to Lebanon. Asked if he was going to invite the pope to Lebanon, Al-Jumayyil told reporters on arrival, "We'll talk about it."

His meeting with the pope lasted 35 minutes, from 1005 to 1040 GMT. Al-Jumayyil, the third Lebanese head-of-state to have a papal audience, then had a private meeting with Cardinal Secretary of State Agostino Casaroli.

The Lebanese leader, who spoke at the United Nations and met with President Ronald Reagan in Washington before meeting with President Francois Mitterrand in Paris and coming here, helicoptered from the Vatican to the Quirinale presidential residence in Rome for luncheon and talks with Italian head-of-state Sandro Pertini.

Meeting With Pope

[Text] Vatican City, Oct 21 (AFP) -- Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil met with Pope John Paul II today, asking the pontiff to help his war-torn country "through your solicitude and your prayers," and receiving the pope's confidence in his fledgling government.

Asked if he had invited the pope to Lebanon, Mr al-Jumayyil said after their 35-minutes one-on-one meeting in the pope's private library that the pope "needs no invitation. In Lebanon, he is always welcome."

In an official exchange in the presence of Mr al-Jumayyil's 13-member entourage, the pope offered condolences for the death of Mr al-Jumayyil's brother, assassinated President-elect Bashir al-Jumayyil. And he expressed confidence in the new Lebanese Government, saying, "although it came to power at a time of national turmoil, it will actively contribute to a permanent solution to the Middle East crisis and to a solution the problem of the Palestinian people."

"Lebanon will be able to accomplish that in an active and concrete manner," the pope told the Lebanese president. "While remaining within the framework of its independence, your country will be able to smoothe over the still deep divergences that persist between the conflicting parties."

He assured Mr al-Jumayyil of the Vatican's "cordial and impartial aid" in "recovering real independence and full sovereignty for the Lebanese state over all of its national territory."

"All Lebanese," said the pope, "must feel that they are equal, in their rights as well as in their obligations to their homeland, while maintaining ties with their respective communities...thus will the new Lebanon be reborn."

Mr al-Jumayyil said Lebanon owed the fact that it was on the road to recovery to "a favorable international combination of circumstances." "These times demand still greater effort and vigilance on our part, and on that of our friends," he told the pope, "and when they speak, or think, of friends of their country...the Lebanese, whatever their religious beliefs, think of your holiness and the papacy."

The Lebanese president spent a total of about an hour and 40 minutes at the Vatican, meeting also with Vatican Secretary of State Cardinal Agostino Casaroli.

He was received with full honors, including a rendition of the Lebanese national anthem by Lebanese living here, and at the conclusion of his meeting with the pope the two exchanged traditional gifts. The pope offered a book of Rafel Fresco reproductions and three papal medallions, the president, a Phoenecian urn in a gold-encrusted cedar chest.

During Mr al-Jumayyil's visit, an anonymous phone call to a Rome newspaper claimed last night's victimless bombing of the Lebanese Embassy here in the name of "communist groups for proletariat internationalism."

Mr al-Jumayyil was to meet later in the day with Italian President Sandro Pertini and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. He returns home tomorrow.

[Text] Lebanon's tragedy was the focus of the talks held between President Pertini and Lebanese President al-Jumayyil today at the Quirinale presidential residence. After the talks, Pertini entertained his guest to luncheon. Al-Jumayyil awarded Pertini the greatest honors of his country as a sign of gratitude for the Italian initiative in favor of Lebanon. This evening, al-Jumayyil will hold talks with Spadolini and Colombo.

This morning, the Lebanese president was received by the pope in the Vatican.

Visits FAO Headquarters

[Excerpt] Official talks followed the luncheon and concentrated on what Italy can give to Lebanon so as to guarantee the withdrawal of the Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces from its territory and its reconstruction.

Following his talks with the Italian president, President al-Jumayyil went to the FAO headquarters where he was received by the FAO Lebanese director Dr Edouard Sauoma. The Lebanese president discussed with Dr Sauoma the program of FAO aid to Lebanon and the reactivation of agriculture in Lebanon.

Requests Troops Remain

LD212246 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Text] Lebanese President al-Jumayyil has asked the Italian Government to maintain the troops of the multinational peace-keeping force in Lebanon and to strengthen them until the Lebanese Army is in a position to defend the country's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The Lebanese president had already hinted at this during his luncheon with Pertini but the subject was discussed in depth this afternoon by Foreign Ministers Emilio Colombo and Ilyas Salim. Italy will study the question if the same requests for a possible agreement are made to the other two countries of the multinational peace-keeping force, the United States and France.

This morning Al-Jumayyil was received by Pope John Paul II who showed his confidence in the government of the new president for a final solution of the Middle East crisis and for the settlement of the Palestinian problem. These two topics were also at the center of Al-Jumayyil's talks with President Pertini. This evening the Lebanese president met Spadolini at Villa Madama.

Talks With Spadolini

NC212223 Beirut Domestic Service in Arabic 2100 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini held a dinner banquet tonight in honor of President Shaykh Amin al-Jumayyil and the accompanying Lebanese delegation. The Italian prime minister delivered an address in which he dealt with the historic relations between his country and Lebanon, the concern which his country had shown to Lebanon and its people during the [Lebanese] crisis, as well as its contribution to entrenching peace in Lebanon through participating in UNIFIL in south Lebanon and in the multinational force. He also dealt in his address with cultural and economic relations and expressed his country's readiness to give aid to Lebanon in all domains to enable it to rise from its fall and resume its message and distinguished role in the East in its capacity as the best bond between the East and the West since the dawn of history.

In reply, President al-Jumayyil delivered an address in which he thanked Italy for its efforts and contribution toward the restoration of peace to Lebanon through its forces operating in the south and in Beirut.

In the afternoon President al-Jumayyil visited the FAO headquarters and held a meeting with its Director General Edouard Saouma. They discussed the nature of the FAO contribution to the process of reactivating the agricultural sector in Lebanon. President al-Jumayyil then presided over a working meeting at the FAO headquarters with Mr Saouma, and the executive director of the Food Program, (James Ingram), and their aides. They discussed the possibility of this organization providing food aid and redeveloping agriculture in Lebanon.

After President al-Jumayyil had left the FAO headquarters, FAO Director Edouard Saouma said to the NATIONAL NEWS AGENCY that he was very proud of the visit, which had the character of special relations. It was the first time that a Lebanese president had visited the FAO headquarters in Rome.

Dr Saouma added: During the years of the crisis [in Lebanon], the organization gave food aid to Lebanon worth over $50 million. He added: We have decided to send to Lebanon very soon a food and development delegation to draw up a plan for developing agriculture and implementing the projects in which we will participate by giving aid, including medicines and fertilizers, and by allocating credits for many years. He added: I shall visit Lebanon soon to hold contacts and reach an agreement on a working program for a period of over 3 years -- a program whose implementation will help in developing agriculture in Lebanon.

Around 2000 tonight, President al-Jumayyil and the accompanying delegation held talks with the Italian prime minister and the foreign minister on the situation in Lebanon.

MARCINKUS DENIES VATICAN BANK-AMBROSIANO LINKS

AU211028 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 21 -- the Vatican Bank "is and was extraneous to all the operations ever carried out by all of the former Banco Ambrosiano's holdings", according to its chairman, American Archbishop Paul Marcinkus.

The man who runs the Vatican's finances broke his silence on the delicate affair to issue a blanket denial of all responsibility in the sensational collapse of the Banco Ambrosiano last summer. The denial came in an interview granted to the Catholic "IL SABATO" weekly, the first Marcinkus has given since the scandal broke.

According to many, and these many include Italian Government officials, the letters of "patronage" Marcinkus signed over to the Ambrosiano's late President Roberto Calvi made the Vatican's Institute for Religious Works (IOR) liable for debts, amounting to some one billion, 290 million dollars, incurred by the protected party.

But Marcinkus played down the letters, insisting in his interview with "IL SABATO" that "they never had the value of a guarantee". The American archbishop disclaimed any responsibility for the financial strategy followed by Calvi, who was found dead in mid-June hanging from London's Blackfriars Bridge. Official British police reports of his death as a suicide have been challenged by many in Italy including the victim's wife.

"I'm the president of an institute", Marcinkus reasoned, "and I try to work for its own aims... I have always tried to prevent it from going into areas that were not in its realm".

Marcinkus admitted that he "certainly" knew, at least in part, what Calvi was up to. "We had normal business relations, that's no mystery... but his schemes and strategies were none of my business".

As for relations between the Vatican Bank and the Italian state, which according to many have suffered the effects of the recriminations accompanying the Ambrosiano affair, Marcinkus stated in part: "We owe utmost respect to the regulations in effect in Italy but, at the same time, the Vatican has to have financial autonomy, which is indispensable for pursuing its aims".

Asked if the IOR would be willing to pay up its debts if the measure that forced the Ambrosiano into bankruptcy was repealed, Marcinkus' only reply was "the IOR has always met its debts, as long as the debts were effectively contracted".

At the height of the scandal last summer, Cardinal Secretary of State Agostino Casaroli appointed three international financial experts to a commission with the job of investigating the IOR's relations with Ambrosiano. The panel has wound up its probes, but the findings have not been released.

TWO DC MP'S TO DEFECT ON VALUE ADDED TAX

[Excerpt] (ANSA) Rome, October 21 -- Italy's five governing parties appeared headed today for another round of bickering after two Christian Democrats in Parliament announced plans to defect the majority's ranks on a government-sponsored financial measure. The two, M.P.'s Publio Fiori and Mario Usellini, told the lower house Finance and Treasury Commission Wednesday that they planned on voting with the opposition on a measure calling for a reform of the value added tax scale. They explicitly announced their agreement with the arguments against the measure put forth by the Italian Communist Party (PCI).

The same value added tax reform was the banana peel on which Premier Giovanni Spadolini's government slipped in August, when it had to resign from office after the Socialists, offended by coalition defections in Parliament, pulled out their support. The measure which brought the government down once and might, if the Socialists so decide, drag it down a second time, was sponsored by a Socialist minister, Treasury Minister Rino Formica. The August crisis lasted two weeks. The exact same coalition, with the same premier and the same ministers, were sworn back into office when it ended.

As of early this morning, there was no official reaction to the two Christian Democrat M.P.'s move. Some observers believed the government may be saved this time by the format the defectors used, giving prior notice that they will vote with the opposition Communists in a "personal capacity".

CPSU'S ZAGLADIN TO MEET BERLINGUER 25 OCT

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 22 -- Senior Soviet Communist Party official Vadim Zagladin will meet Monday with the head of the Italian Communist Party, Enrico Berlinguer, an encounter described as highly unlikely Wednesday and Thursday, during the first two days of Zagladin's visit to Italy, because of the chill in relations between the two parties since the declaration of martial law in Poland last December.

The report of the meeting put on the calendar for Berlinguer and the deputy chief of the Soviet Party's Foreign Bureau came last night in a communique on Zagladin's talks yesterday with an Italian party delegation led by the PCI's senior foreign policy spokesman, Giancarlo Pajetta.

The Soviet party official's visit to Italy is officially described as a lecture tour on the invitation of the Gramsci Institute, the Italian party cultural center. Some political observers read into his acceptance of the invitation a prelude to a thaw in relations between the Soviet party and the West's largest Marxist alignment which were strained to the breaking point by the PCI's hostility to Soviet policy in Poland. The Soviet party last spring came close to "excommunicating" the PCI from the Soviet-led communist camp because of its outspoken challenges to Soviet policy and the role of the Soviet party as the undisputed arbiter of communist orthodoxy.

The PCI communique on yesterday's talks referred to the "differences of view" between the two parties and reaffirmed the usefulness of "discussion" between the sides.

The points covered, the communique reported, were the situation in Poland, conditions in the Middle East and international tensions in the economic fields.

Political observers said in the evening that a degree of progress must have been made in Zagladin's consultations with Pajetta towards closing the gap between the two parties, otherwise a meeting with the Italian party secretary would not have been scheduled for the Soviet official.

PCI'S BERLINGUER OUTLINES CONGRESS AGENDA

PM201557 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 7 Oct 82 pp 10-11

["Text" of PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 6 October report to PCI Central Committee and Central Control Commission session in Rome]

[Excerpts] 1 -- Date and Preparations for Congress

On the basis of the regulations of the party constitution, which state that the national congress must meet every 4 years, the Directorate proposes that the Central Committee and Central Control Commission convene the 16th congress on 23-27 February 1983 in Milan.

The time needed to start and carry out the precongress debate in the cells, sections and federations makes it impossible to hold the national congress earlier than the date proposed. However, it should not be set back any further, so as to maintain a sufficient lapse between the end of the congress and the local elections, which will probably take place in the late spring in two regions, a number of provinces and several municipalities.

The reasons that have prompted us, and still prompt us, to fight to ensure that the eighth legislative period run its natural course through 1984 are well known. However, one cannot entirely rule out the possibility of Parliament's being dissolved in the first half of next year, as a result of thrusts from other political forces and the exacerbation of the conflicts among them.

If this happens, the Central Committee and Central Control Commission will have to reexamine the issue of the date for our congress.

On the basis of the date now proposed, the precongress debate could start in about mid-November on the basis of a document to be approved by another Central Committee and Central Control Commission meeting on about 10 November.

It is proposed that the draft document be prepared by a special committee, which will have about a month's working time ahead of it. Another committee, which too will be appointed at the end of this meeting, will examine the organizational problems and proposed amendments to our constitution to be submitted to the national congress.

As soon as the document has been published, the cell assemblies and section congresses should begin, so that a timetable for these meetings must be prepared right away.

The federation congresses should take place between 9 January and 6 February 1983.

Obviously, every congress body must pronounce itself on the document and can submit its amendments to the next higher body. It is proposed that suggested amendments rejected by the Central Committee be published together with the Central Committee document, if so requested by those who submit them.

The proposed timetable demands that, while every effort be made to promote the maximum democratic participation by members, there also be a simplification of the congress machinery, organizing its functioning without collateral or purely ritual precedural complications.

The occasion of the congress could indeed be a step forward toward a streamlining -- whose need is recognized -- of the party's work and internal life.

The task of the present Central Committee and Central Control Commission meeting is to define the character and the aims of the congress, to issue pointers for the drafting of the document to be submitted at their next session and to approve the regulations regarding the proportional balance between members and delegates at the various levels of the congress, which could be the same ones that applied to our previous congress.

What kind of congress do we need? It seems to the Directorate that we need a congress that will take major action with respect to the political situation, that will issue and assert a clearly defined proposal that will place the party at the center of a broad action, both within society and within the institutions, to achieve the change of course that we call the democratic alternative.

This character that we should impart to the congress demands that during the period of the precongress debate the party refrain from closing in on itself.

The actual facts of the situation demand a variety of political and mass initiatives from us with a strong spirit of struggle, openmindedness and a quest for alliances on issues such as: the defense of peace; the problems of economic policy; the social and class conflict, on whose outcome the country's political future largely depends; and the struggle against terrorism, the mafia, the camorra and devastating scourges such as drug abuse. Furthermore, it must not be forgotten that the congress period coincides with the 1983 membership campaign and precedes the by-elections, which must by law be held in the spring.

Because of the charater the congress debate should assume, the Directorate believes that it should be based on a policy document instead of, as on previous occasions, on a secretary general's report (as at the 14th congress) or theses (as at the 15th congress).

It is not a matter of establishing the best method in an abstract manner. Under present conditions, the proposed document seems to us the form best suited to the political aims that we set ourselves.

What is the difference between theses and a policy resolution? With theses, the aim is a comprehensive and detailed organization of our analysis and proposals. And this task was performed positively by our previous congress -- so much so that the theses that it approved are still valid in their basic principles.

A resolution implies a choice of topics, highlights the most burning and dramatic issues to be broached, both in the immediate term and in relation to fundamental prospects.

Furthermore, the advantage of the policy document is that it is less unwieldy and easier to distribute and read, which facilitates a broader involvement in the debate.

2 -- International Framework of Italian Crisis

If it is believed that the central issue of the congress is how to build a democratic alternative, as a necessity for Italy and a topical political objective (naturally, with an awareness of all its implications and therefore not restructed solely to the question of government), then the issues to be used as a basis for discussion are as follows:

A -- What is the policy of the alternative: In other words, what approaches and proposals constitute its objective and substance;

B -- What social and political alliances and what movements must be promoted and organized to achieve the democratic alternative; and

C -- What innovations must be introduced to our party's methods and approach, since it is inconceivable that there be a democratic alternative without the PCI, without what it stands for and is within Italy and Europe, without its having or being able to perform a decisive role.

The democratic alternative itself constitutes a major operation of regeneration of society, the state, politics and the parties, and we wish to give an example of how we possess this ability to regenerate ourselves in every direction necessary to be equal to this national task set to us by the situation in which we are living.

We will give this example by means of an internal democratic debate, whose breadth, correctness and honesty we believe cannot be matched by any other party.

Centering the congress on the building of a democratic alternative does not imply reducing the place which international issues must occupy in the debate.

These issues will occupy a prominent place, both because action for a democratic alternative cannot ignore the framework of political and economic relations surrounding our country's situation and because the present international framework presents our party with tasks that must in any case be performed, irrespective of the Italian political and government situation.

Whether or not we succeed in proceeding with the building of the democratic alternative, it is our duty -- now a pressing duty -- to contribute all our strength to the world struggle for peace, disarmament, detente and cooperation, with a view to a new international economic order; and it is equally impossible for us to abandon our existing characteristic commitment to an in-depth examination of the problems of socialism, of its rebirth and establishment on a European and world scale in the new historical phase in which we live.

So it is only for convenience of presentation that I will deal with these issues, as far as they affect the party's international tasks, in a separate section at the end of my report.

But we must first take a rapid glance at the present international framework, because it is partly from that, too, that we perceive the need for a democratic alternative in Italy and the PCI's role within it.

First, it must be reasserted that it would be a mistake to feel overwhelmed by such vast problems and such serious dangers as now assail mankind, failing to also see the events and forces that make it possible to tackle those problems and avert those dangers. I am referring above all to the advance of the liberation movements of the oppressed classes, the nations and the women's masses which characterize our century and to the extraordinary opportunities to improve mankind's life provided by revolutionary scientific discoveries and technological innovations. But even looking at the international political events of recent weeks, not everything is negative. It is enough to consider two events: The world reaction which has, albeit belatedly, isolated and, at least for the time being, blocked the Israeli Government's bellicose attitude, in a condemnation joined by many Jews both in Israel and elsewhere; and the signs of an improvement in relations between China and the USSR -- an innovation which could have beneficial effects on the international climate and international relations.

But it cannot be denied that the world panorama is now characterized by dramatic tensions, hugely magnified problems and frightening uncertainties.

The remainder of my report will consist of very concise pointers and, sometimes, notes and questions, since both it and the ensuing discussion at this meeting should have the sole aim of providing pointers and guidelines for the document to be drafted by the committee which we will elect at the end of our proceedings.

3 -- Why Democratic Alternative Is Necessary

Italy is suffering dramatically as a result of the repercussions of the European and world economic and political crisis and of the exacerbation of U.S. pressure on Europe, and is directly involved in the nuclear arms race (existing missile bases, construction of Comiso base).

To explain on the basis of Italy's alignment with the model provided by the other European capitalist countries, which are also suffering a crisis, is no longer a credible solution. The Italian economy's objective interdependence with the European and world economy, while demanding greater innovative initiative on the international plane, must not prompt a neglect of the specific domestic causes at the root of the Italian crisis, which are carrying it toward a decline and to the brink of collapse.

Here reference must be made to the historical and structural socioeconomic causes examined on other occasions (the backwardness of agriculture, the imbalance between north and south, our major dependence for supplies of raw materials and energy, the cumbersome and rigid nature of the structure of public spending, and so forth). Italy's inflation is not only the result of world inflation.

Political causes are of decisive importance -- first and foremost the incomplete democracy, because of the prejudiced exclusion of the PCI from government. This discrimination has managed to survive a long time, but has accumulated in economic and social development, in the life of the institutions and in the parties' role distortions which the exacerbation of the crisis now renders intolerable. To what extent and in what ways -- this is a question that could be discussed -- may the stubbornness of the anti-socialist and anticommunist, and the sole anticommunist, prejudice have negatively influenced the conduct of our opposition?

This must be examined, but always remembering that Italian Communists have never strayed from the democratic rules.

Now, in view of the pressures and the ungovernability of the situation, the PCI's proven staying power and the substantially intact strength that it still possesses despite so many vicissitudes, there is broader recognition of the need to unblock the system of political and government relationships as it has been built up in Italy over the past 35 years.

The experience of recent years, since the end of the national solidarity majority (an incomplete and inadequate attempt, caused to fail instead of being carried forward to its necessary developments) is another factor.

What is the substance of the "governability" operation and of the five-party formula? The ambitions and unrealistic political plan (based on an erroneous analysis of the domestic and international economic and political situation and a narrow view of society and the state) was to restore the Italian situation to normality without the Communists, and indeed in the hope of, and with the intention of, reducing the PCI to a marginal force.

In fact, this operation has helped to shift class relations to the right (as is apparent first and foremost from the employers federation's present offensive) and has accentuated the unleashing of corporativism and patronage.

4 -- Some Proposals on Problems of State, Economics and Foreign Policy

What solutions must the democratic alternative set in motion? And what social and political alliances and what movements do these solutions require?

Neither this report nor, I believe, the document must present a detailed program, but rather a series of points that will highlight a line and a conception of what is needed for the economic and social development of today's Italy.

We, too, could agree on giving the priority to the problems of the institutions, the state and the functioning of democracy, though specifying immediately that the problem of specific institutional reforms, though it exists, is not the principal one.

Italian democracy's ills stem not from the written constitution but from what has been called the "material constitution," namely the combination of decisions, practices and methods which we are agreed on calling the "blocked democracy."

The 30 years and more of prejudice against the PCI has led to a confusion of the parties' role with that of the state and to the growth of more or less concealed parallel powers.

The proposal of a "different kind of government" was no impromptu, August sally but a result of the fundamental assessment that prompts us to forcefully assert the need to restore a distinction between the parties and the bodies and agencies of the state and, therefore, on the one hand, to free the state from the cancer of cronyism among the ruling parties and, on the other, to restore to the parties their full role in social and civil life and in shaping and representing the citizens' will.

More people are now obliged to acknowledge that the morality issue, which we were the first to raise, exists in precisely the terms which we have just now briefly indicated.

There have been some specific results, too (the blows dealt to the P2] and other illegal and criminal centers of power that have established themselves in the financial world and within the body of the state; the failure of the brazenly cronyist attempt made in the appointments of the new chairmen of the Industrial Reconstruction Institute and the National Hydrocarbons Agency).

But the battle must be continued. What points can we indicate, apart from new criteria in the formation of the government?

The reform of the state-shareholding industries. The matter of appointments to state agencies, public services, cultural institutes, and the media, starting with the Italian Radio and Television Corporation.

Public administration: Is it possible to establish the absolute rule that all appointments be made by competition?

Presidents and councils of local public health bodies: Can they be thoroughly freed from the practice of cronyism among the parties (a practice which in this case involves our party too)?

Another issue that arises -- and that must be stressed in our battle -- is that of real democratic life within the trade unions, parties and mass organizations.

Then there are the problems posed by technological innovations, and particularly by the development of computers and communications, in relation to the citizens' involvement in democratic life.

Last, there are the specific problems of the functioning and reform of the institutions:

-- Monocameralism, or a differentiation of the functions of the two houses;

-- The reform of the investigating authorities;

-- Parliamentary regulations;

-- The prime ministership; and

-- Local authorities, and particularly a critical appraisal of and possible proposals concerning the experience of regional decentralization.

The antiterrorist struggle: the reasons for the recent successes, the need not to lessen vigilance and action.

The struggle against the mafia, the camorra and drug abuse: a return to the ideas and proposal formulated in recent months. The implementation of the La Torre law.

Economy: This is the most complex point, in which, partly through the congress debate, the maximum effort of lucidity and invention must be made, rallying to this task not only th party's internal forces but also outside forces and groups.

A more vigorous demystification of the campaign that has portrayed labor costs as the central issue.

The point of departure should be the main elements of policy material. In general, our approach should rest on three linchpins: development, rigorousness and equity.

A -- A policy of development, and therefore the rejection of any prospects of stagnation and recession, which are unacceptable, primarily because of the social costs (increased unemployment and a widening of the gulf to the detriment of southern Italy) but also because it would lead to Italy's greater isolation from the European and world economy and to its decline.

The need for a selection of sectors in which the largest investments must be made (starting with agriculture, scientific research and all aspects of the education system): A selective reduction of money costs.

Innovations not only in production techniques, but also in products (as discussed at the Turin workers conference):

The central issue is how to increase the output of the entire economic process, but there are also the questions of the increase of productivity in individual enterprises and of the length of the working week.

National employment service, as a way of tackling growing unemployment and using the labor force in socially useful projects; a comparison of our proposal with those of Ruffolo, Napoleoni and others.

Matters concerning the introduction of autonomous and direct workers' intervention and control (not via the trade unions) in the economic and production process. The trade unions' role is different.

B -- Rigorousness and financial reform, as the precondition for a policy of development. How to implement a policy of rigorousness that will safeguard the workers' fundamental economic and social gains.

-- Revenue (a fiscal policy of the kind frequently suggested);

-- A struggle against wastefulness and inefficiency in all fields, for a prudent usage and saving of existing resources. A consideration of the advisability of campaigns and mass mobilizations to identify and halt the various kinds of wastage within the public administration and enterprises and among private individuals. Apart from its economic benefits, such an initiative could help to enhance and to spread social awareness;

-- Possible forms of intervention to rationalize and contain expenditure on security, welfare, health, and so forth.

C -- Equity, as the precondition for a policy of rigorousness.

Apart from fiscal measures, further proposals should be examined to permit action with respect to the pay and pensions jungle, caused and increasingly exacerbated by the explosion of patronage and corporativism. The definition of clear and binding regulations to prevent the existing, scandalous inequalities and privileges and the introduction of a pay and pensions scale based on the protection of the underprivileged and underprotected and observance of the values of competence and professional standards. This scale should range from minimum guaranteed levels to absolute ceilings for pay and pensions for all fixed-salary workers in all sectors and at all levels.

One final consideration: Economic calculations usually ignore a factor that can in some cases alter them substantially: the factor of the consensus (or lack of it) of the broad masses, that is, their involvement and initiative (consider how this factor has acted or could act at certain times and circumstances, such as, the struggle against wastage, output at work, the containment of damage caused by natural disasters, and so forth). We should always take into account the importance of this factor and make use of it in all circumstances -- whether, obviously, to strengthen our demand for a change of political and government conditions that will make that factor fully operative, or in taking initiatives that will set us in the forefront in the practical solution of problems.

Foreign policy: We must recall and reassert the stances adopted by us in connection with Italy's membership of the Atlantic pact and the EEC, matters concerning arms reduction and security, East-West detente and North-South relations.

The democratic alternative should have as one of its results the release of Italian foreign policy from the habits that have consistently characterized it hitherto: The habit of being strongly influenced, for domestic reasons, by ideological prejudices and by anticommunist propaganda requirements.

This habit has helped to substantially restrict our governments' capacity for initiative, but above all it has caused them to neglect the defense of national interests in all forums and bodies in which they could have and should have been resolutely defended.

5 -- Social and Political Alliances; Mass Movements

Reassertion of the traditional principle that guides us in our policy of alliances: to work for the creation and operation of the broadest possible alignment of forces. Attention must be given not only to the parties but also to the real forces and movements that exist and are active within society.

Reference must be made not only to the classes, sectors and categories defined by the trade unions, but also to the major international issues (peace) and domestic issues (the problem of the south, the women's issue, the Catholic issue, and so forth) that embrace areas that transcend all social sectors.

The present trend, reflected partly in government policy, is toward bringing together a combination of interests in order to convince them that the way out of the crisis is a reduction of the living standards and democratic rights gained by the working class over decades of struggle, starting with a blow, inflicted in economic, trade union and political terms, on the lowest paid workers' sectors.

There must be no concessions in the defense of these sectors, not only for reasons of equity, but also because of their central position within society, within the workers' movement and within our party and because of their ideological motivation.

But we must not restrict ourselves to defending the class from the current attacks. This raises the question of what criterion should guide our quest for social alliances in the present specific situation.

In general, it seems to me that the criterion should be to aim to rally all forces wanting the maximum development of the country's economic potential and therefore the inevitable task of reform and transformation, efficiency and rigorousness. We believe we are the party that most desires a strong and healthy development of the production forces. But these demands, which objectively conflict with the power system built by the DC and its government allies, can also strike a chord among a large proportion of the forces now within that system.

We must pay particular attention to the following:

A -- Southern Italy;

B -- Peasants;

C -- The combination of forces (scientific researchers, specialized and trained personel, workers in the advanced services sector, and so forth) who are usually described as the "emergent sectors" (recognition of the specific nature of these sectors and of their role in the country's economic and social development; facilitating the formation of their own autonomous organizations, and so forth).

6 -- The Parties

-- The PSI. Any attitude toward the PSI based mainly on the change of its "nature," rather than of its policy, is mistaken, and the source of errors.

The exhaustion of the hypothesis on which the PSI has worked in recent years confronts that party with a dilemma: whether to persist with the competitive alliance with the DC, thus exposing itself to all the negative consequences that could derive from it, or to assert its own autonomous and particular role within the context of a democratic alternative plan.

This choice has not yet been made and cannot be taken for granted. But there are now growing possibilities that the PSI will increasingly reflect on the country's situation and will thus be prompted to opt for the democratic alternative.

We believe that an explicit statement of preference for this prospect would help to clarify political relations, but would above all prompt new confidence and energies in all the workers and peoples forces in the battles to resolve, through regeneration, many of our present problems and to accelerate a substantial change in the country's political leadership.

-- Leftwing forces and groups outside the PCI and PSI (a certain leftwing area).

-- The intermediate parties.

-- The DC. A full restoration of the distinction -- which became rather less clear for some of us, especially during the democratic solidarity period -- between the question of the DC and the Catholic question, while bearing in mind the interconnection between them, if for no other reason than the fact that a considerable number of politically active Catholics vote DC.

We have no plans for government cooperation with the DC. This does not rule out the need for and possibility of convergences for safeguarding the democratic system and other specific objectives, even at the national level.

The need to avoid a splitting of the country and a reactionary shift among DC voters is still valid. De Mita's performance as DC secretary must be assessed on the basis of his achievements.

How to stimulate the DC on the issue of relations between the parties and the state, the struggle against the mafia and the camorra and the elimination of the contamination of the institutions and ruling parties stemming from and nurtured by the DC power system.

7 -- The Area of Catholic Organizations and Movements

One can no longer talk about the "Catholic world" as a compact and homogeneous area. But it is wrong to argue that the Catholic question has lost its importance.

The need to extend our knowledge of this area and to pay renewed attention to all the innovations that have emerged within it. There seems to be no need to revise the basic analysis made by the party through its ultimate developments in the 15th congress theses.

But there are points to be made and new problems to be tackled. There are two in particular:

A -- A new and stronger party initiative with respect to the Catholic question must be considered one of the decisive areas in the assertion of the democratic alternative policy.

Indeed, the democratic alternative must not be characterized as a "secular" alternative and must not be limited to a contraposition of a secular alignment to a Catholic alignment. Of course the democratic alternative is, as far as government solutions are concerned, an alternative to the DC and its power system. However, it is not a matter of forming preconceptions or establishing a prejudice that sets non-Catholics against Catholics: The decisive factor, if any, lies in and is determined by the dialectic between those who accept and those who do not accept a program of reform and regeneration. If this is the true, decisive factor, there is certainly also an essential contribution to be made by forces of the Catholic area in building a policy of regeneration and in forming a majority that will put it into practice, partly because, without such a contribution and if the alternative proved to be simply a secular alignment, it would inevitably be exposed to the moderate blackmail of the socially and politically conservative forces, which carry undeniable weight within the secular area too.

B -- The other point to be stressed is that the field of encounter and convergence with movements and organizations of the Catholic area must not be restricted to the pursuit of specific economic and social objectives, but must include the major long-term issues, within a mutual acknowledgement of values and the building of new values, for whose sake one must work against war and rearmament, injustice and poverty, exploitation, alienation and underprivilege and against the oppression of the weak, whether individuals, classes or peoples; against drug abuse and against phenomena that are repugnant to Catholic consciences too, such as the mafia, the camorra and the private embezzlement of public funds.

Furthermore, how many times have members of our party and of these organizations worked together voluntarily and gratis at tragic moments of natural disasters (from the Florence floods to the Campania and Basilicata earthquakes), in the care of the ill children and the elderly; and how often have they found themselves side by side in movements such as the peace movement?

8 -- Aids and Obstacles to Democratic Alternative

The foregoing brief indication of topics, approaches and initiatives should clarify the kind of process by which the democratic alternative can be built. It is not restricted to the objective of a new government, though it implies that as well.

It is necessary to eliminate the mental attitude whereby our entry into the government becomes an obsession, so that, unless it happens right away, there is nothing we can do.

We have seen, however, that there is a great deal to be done in involving and guiding the necessary forces in ensuring the victory of the democratic alternative -- much to be done with regard to proposals, struggles and initiative and in the political field, in social life and in the cultural world.

And the forces to be involved are not only the parties -- still less as they are now -- but the broader range of energies to be found inside and outside the parties and whose revival and mobilization can impart thrusts to the regeneration of the parties themselves, including our own.

Though there is much to be done, something has already been done, especially in recent months. Things now are not as they were before the August government crisis.

The DC and PSI may be continuing their government cooperation -- but with more acute contradictions that will, unfortunately, be reflected in the functioning of the institutions, though these have created and will continue to create broader scope for our own initiative in all directions.

Indeed, it is now possible to talk in terms of the resumption of a current in favor of us, though we do so cautiously, because it is still limited, subject to opposition and not irreversible.

It is made apparent by various signs: the repercussions of our proposal of a different kind of government; a more widespread awareness in the country of the validity of things that we have long been saying about the fundamental nature of the economic and political crisis (basically, the country is increasingly realizing that it has been misled by governments over the years); the success of the L'UNITA festivals and of our membership campaign; a certain increase in party activity; and a resumption of attention toward us on the part of other parties and political and social areas.

This is important not only and not so much because it gives the lie to the simplistic thesis put forward by some politicians and self-styled political experts who have forecast the inexorable decline of all communist parties by virtue of their very nature, but above all because the growth of a current of interest and confidence within the PCI is an indispensable, if not sufficient, condition for the affirmation and advance of the prospect of a democratic alternative and, meanwhile, for the workers to wage today's battles more vigorously.

If it is true that a current favorable toward us has begun to emerge to some extent, it must mean that, basically, our policy in recent years has not been mistaken and that the party has, on the whole, succeeded not only in defending itself with sufficient energy from attacks, traps and overtures for ulterior motives, but also in tackling new problems and taking initiatives that are beginning to bear some fruit (from our stances on Poland to those on public morality, from the battles for peace to our examination of the issues raised by new technological and scientific progress.

A self-critical examination is therefore needed, and the congress debate will doubtless accomplish this. But I believe it would be inappropriate to carry out a self-flagellation, in which our affairs of recent years were regarded as a sequence of errors.

This critical examination must be very careful, especially in precisely identifying which of our shortcomings or which obstacles created by outside circumstances or individuals can hinder, halt or deviate our struggle for the democratic alternative. The most serious and difficult of these obstacles is the burdensome nature of the economic, social and trade union situation. Indeed, there is a contradiction between the potential inherent in the political situation and the evidence of difficulties and even degenerative tendencies within the workers' movement. Hence the need, which is now more pressing than ever, for the party to mobilize all its forces to restore combativeness and confidence to the workers.

The second obstacle is the holding power and resistance of the DC power system, especially in the south. There is now a more favorable climate for the condemnation of the evils that this system has created and still creates every day. But experience has shown that condemnation is not enough and that, by not going beyond that, only frustrations are caused. It is therefore necessary to examine more carefully (this should be another prominent topic in the congress debate) which struggles and initiatives in all fields can attack and ultimately undermine the social and even cultural bases of this power system.

The third obstacle is the de facto monopoly that the ruling parties and certain economic groups of big speculators and financiers exercize over the mass media. One of our Central Committee meetings was devoted to this very serious problem: The indications that it produced must be debated so as to further enrich them, but must above all be the subject of more effective initiatives for implementing them.

9 -- Concerning the Party

This section of my report does not provide the possible stocktaking of the party's activity over the past 4 years (which could perhaps find a place in the document). An assessment should be carried out at various levels and on a national scale, so as to draw all possible lessons from the way in which the party has responded to the difficult situations and arduous trials of this period (the end of the national solidarity majority, the PSI's new course, events in Poland and the situation in other socialist countries, and so forth).

There has been a strong, basic steadfastness. But, for instance, to what extent have sectarian-type lapses or areas of fluctuation and yielding occurred? What action was taken in both cases? I am now referring only to the needs that must be satisfied so that the party will be made equal to the task that it has to perform for the democratic alternative, so that it can be its principal instrument.

The first requirement, obviously, is that of a party more open to society and more willing to carry out the necessary innovations within itself. If this is lacking, the systematic change of the party's lifeblood cannot take place.

There have been considerable instances of such openings, especially with respect to women, who now constitute one of the party's most vigorous forces and who are establishing themselves in leadership roles.

But there are also instances of persistent deafness and a continuing lack of interest, particularly with respect to the young and the Italian Communist Youth Federation, but also with respect to other strata (trained personnel, for instance). And here and there there are relapses toward a lack of communication with women, too. Similarly, there is inadequate representation in the leadership bodies of the workers' and intellectual cadres involved in research, production activities, teaching and cultural life.

The need to carry out political activity in new fields and with new objectives to be interconnected with the new mass movements is more proclaimed than carried out in practice; and the same applies to the utilization of skills.

This is perhaps partly because it is insufficiently borne in mind that party membership is no longer regarded by many people as something affecting a person's total cultural, moral, private, behavioral and living options; the party is still less regarded as the source of all the values on whose basis a person gives meaning to his life. This applies to many people. For many others there is a separation of many options and values from a unifying -- and to some extent preconstituted -- logic embodied in party membership.

But this is a fact of our time to which we must succeed in adapting ourselves, partly because it accords fully with Article 2 of our party constitution, which requires as a condition for party membership adherence to its political program, not to any conception of mankind and the world.

There is no contradiction between the concept and practice of a party more open to society and to the new horizons steadily being opened up by culture and science and the reinvigoration of the characteristic elements of the party's approach -- elements that are no less indispensable now than before -- in order that the PCI be a force capable of opposing the disruptive thrusts operating within society, prompting confidence and hope and giving an impetus to the development of real political democracy.

The communist way of life: observance by everyone of all regulations and of all the rules of our constitution. Democracy and unity: Our experience and that of other communist and workers' parties shows the damage that can be caused, on the one hand, by bureaucratism and on the other, by the polarization and crystallization of stances.

The congress debate must examine ways of developing internal democracy -- but with a steadfast rejection, I believe, of factions and organized currents.

Once such a phenomenon has started, it can make it very difficult to safeguard the party's political and organizational unity -- a unity that is a valuable asset that must be defended against new dangers, some originating from outside, as a guarantee of the party's strength and its internal democratic life.

Working structures and methods: An examination of what measures can bring about a streamlining and simplification. An examination of the ways in which comrades working within the trade unions (and the other mass organizations) can participate more actively in party life.

10 -- The Party's Tasks in the International Field

On this point, too, a choice of topics to be submitted for debate must be made. The three points could be as follows:

A -- The peace struggle and movement. An assessment of what has been done since mid-year last year and of the lessons that can be learned from the movements that have developed in Europe, the United States and Japan.

The need for the peace movement to maintain and strengthen its autonomous character with respect to the states, military blocs and parties.

This pluralistic and autonomous characteristic of the movement implies the following two things in particular: that the movement's various components maintain the complete freedom to carry out their own autonomous initiatives within the peace struggle; and that the movement not only not aspire to a monopoly over the peace struggle, but also recognize the value of the involvement of other movements, institutions and organizations in this field and seek the broadest possible dialogue and most varied contacts, with a view to helping to ensure that the peoples' awareness and desire for peace is represented as widely as possible and will therefore profoundly influence states' and governments' policy in the direction of disarmament, cooperation, the abandonment of the use of force, detente and peace.

To reassert and update our stances and proposals on the problems of arms reduction and the peaceful solution of conflicts. To reflect on what initiatives and contacts can be carried out to bring about more effective coordination of the peace movements on the European scale.

B -- For a new international economic order. How to follow up the peace and development charter.

What more can our party do, particularly to create a broader knowledge and awareness -- on the part of the Italian and European peoples masses and workers' movement -- of the terms of the problem of underdevelopment and of its connections with the developed countries' economic crisis?

How to make relations between the West European workers' movement and the Third World progressive forces more frequent and stable. Could consideration be given to the organization of a conference -- Euro-African, for the time being -- as the first initiative in the direction of a conference embracing the entire Third World?

C -- The issues of socialism

An examination and development of our deliberations since the previous congress (particularly following the proclamation of martial law in Poland) so as to update our analysis of the existing situation in the East European countries and at the same time to reassert, on the basis of the contradictions of today's world, the need for socialism.

We have chosen the path of looking reality in the face, without pretences or self-censorship.

It seems difficult to deny, partly in the light of the events of recent months, that several socialist countries, starting with Poland itself, are unfortunately manifesting phenomena of crisis, stagnation and regression, the reasons for which we are trying to identify.

To do so does not imply abandoning a class position or espousing reactionary theses and abandoning internationalism. In any case, nobody can say that we have failed in our duties of solidarity with respect to the peoples struggling for freedom.

On the one hand, we believe that, within a framework of detente, there not only must be but also can be economic and political reform in those countries; and on the other, and above all, we believe that there is a more pressing need than ever to advance toward socialism in the advanced capitalist countries by means of paths, methods and solutions that must not repeat the ones pursued in the Eastern bloc countries, which belong to an obsolete historical phase and which do not correspond to Western characteristics and traditions.

Our position is therefore scientific, not based on feelings or temperament, and not designed for ulterior motives. What can be done to make the ideas and objectives that form the foundations of the third way and the new internationalism clearer and more popular?

I conclude this report, which was intended to provide only some starting points for the drafting of the precongress document, which will be drawn up on the basis of the debate that will take place at this meeting.

Some commentators have already decided that our congress will avoid speaking out clearly on the most burning issues and that it will be characterized by "power pacts" among various, supposed pro-this or pro-that groups and currents.

I am sure that our congress will give the lie to these ridiculous speculations and that it will succeed in tackling all the issues that really interest and concern the Italian workers and people in a responsible, innovative, democratic and unitary manner, thus satisfying the expectations of the party and the country.

Cossutta Challenges Agenda

PM210831 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 8 Oct 82 p 10

[Unattributed report on PCI Directorate member Armando Cossutta 7 October speech at PCI Central Committee and Central Control Commission session in Rome]

[Text] I believe, Armando Cossutta said, that we are all agreed in wanting to make the congress a major opportunity for strengthening party unity. As things stand, this unity appears if not exactly threatened, then certainly weakened and to some extent debased. And to be frank, this applies not only to the issues on which I myself have expressed disagreement. I am referring to certain international issues on which my opinion still differs from certain deliberations expressed here by Comrade Berlinguer and on which, depending on what the congress document says, I reserve the right to reassert my explicit disagreement or not. But also with regard to other fundamental points of policy, on which, within the party and even its leadership groups, there exist differences and sometimes outright divergences, or at least systematic discrepancies, which are the cause of serious disorientation and constitute a burdensome hindrance to our entire action. They are, I believe, emergent reflections of a multiplicity of tendencies present within the party but which are rarely broached openly and are in fact more often deprived of a frank debate and a fully democratic appraisal.

For instance, these include certain issues concerning the economic situation, beginning with the ones concerning labor costs. If it is true, as Mediobanca's [Credit Bank] latest figures on the 1,176 foremost industrial enterprises show, that labor costs per 100 lire turnover have fallen from 23.51 lire in 1969 to 15.6 lire in 1981, the government's policy must be opposed vigorously; moreover, a critical assessment and major revision must be made of the stance adopted by the trade unions, which have effectively agreed to discuss labor costs. They cannot be negotiated, however. I believe that any further discussion of them would be a purely antiworker and anti-trade-union action.

The consequences of the crisis can and must no longer be brought to bear solely on wage earners.

To give another example, divergences also exist on certain issues having to do with political relations -- with the Socialists and with the DC. In my own work in the local government section, I constantly have to note their existence. The vicissitudes of certain city councils, such as the ones that have led to administrative agreements between the PCI and DC -- and only between the PCI and DC -- in certain municipalities in Calabria have prompted major justified disagreements within our ranks, not only within that region but, because of their repercussions, in many parts of the country.

Thus, we see the emergence of a real problem for the congress debate -- what method can really facilitate the strengthening of party unity. I am sure, as I believe we all are, that only a fully democratic debate can facilitate unity, while the blunting or diversion of the debate can only facilitate the crystallization of tendencies. If we want -- as we all do -- to really surmount them, I believe it is necessary to bring them to light by means of a debate aimed at unity, but one that is frank and not diplomatic. On the basis of this debate, it must be decided what each of these tendencies really stands for at present. No section of the party that disagrees with another can consider surmounting these divergences except by means of a dialogue. And this dialogue must be conducted in such a way as to present it from assuming the aspect or guise of a "campaign of elucidation."

I believe that a congress debate developed on this basis can regain unity through action. For this to be effective, there must be a thorough conviction of the many, since it is not easy and perhaps impossible to ensure that everyone is convinced -- a thorough conviction of the many, but with the involvement of all; and therefore a possible, conscious and logical discipline on everyone's part.

To achieve this result, attention should also be paid to certain practical and organizational aspects of congress activity.

I believe that I, too, must make an observation about the actual date of the congress. The danger is that it will take place in close proximity to early elections, and it seems to me that, depending on how events develop, we should take prompt measures to avoid this risk. In any case, it will take place in close proximity to scheduled elections -- the by-elections involving about 10 million citizens, 20 percent of the entire Italian population and 2 whole regions, 4 provinces, 7 provincial capitals and over a 1,000 municipalities. Nor can one rule out the possibility that before then other very major municipalities could become involved in the same round of elections. In this connection, there is among the federations involved a very justified concern to devote the utmost of their energies to the election campaign in the months ahead, in the full knowledge that it will be all the more effective if conducted in advance of the official dates; it is enough to consider the campaign for an account of past activity, the mass consultation for the definition of programs and choice of candidates, the elucidation of political platforms and the quest for alliances. This all threatens to hinder the congress debate, certainly in those federations and to some extent elsewhere, too. On the other hand -- and this is the point -- it must take place frankly and openly. A propagandist-type debate would ultimately not benefit election propaganda itself.

Another observation regarding method concerns the party secretary's indication in favor of the publication of amendments to the congress document proposed to the Central Committee but not adopted by it. I fully agree with the suggestion and consider it a very valuable innovation. It will enable the entire party to have an accurate idea of any possible divergences and to discuss them. The aim would certainly not be a debate for its own sake, but to guarantee that the congress reflects the real attitudes of the entire party at all levels.

Last, I want to stress what I consider another very important aspect: the election of delegates.

I believe that every congress body must be recommended to adopt, within the context of the present statutory provisions, whatever procedures for electing delegates are most likely to guarantee the faithful representation of the whole of the congress grassroots throughout its subsequent stages. This would particularly apply in cases where the debate highlighted any specific points of political disagreement. It would also be desirable for a section's delegates to be chosen from among the members of that same section, as a rule.

Berlinguer Responds

PM201445 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 9 Oct 82 pp 1, 16

[Ugo Baduel report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer's 7 October closing speech at PCI Central Committee and Central Control Commission session in Rome: "Unity and Clarity on Alternative Line"]

[Excerpt] Rome -- More than a proper reply, Comrade Berlinguer's Thursday speech to the Central Committee and Central Control Commission was an examination of certain specific topics and arguments (and also certain tones) that emerged during the debate.

In any case, a complete and conclusive reply to the debate as a whole would have been inappropriate, since this session of the Central Committee and Central Control Commission was not at all conceived as the start of the precongress debate, which can in fact start only when the document that will form the basis for that debate is ready, and therefore not before the Central Committee session planned for November. The purpose of the present meeting was to provide some pointers for the work of the committee appointed to draft the congress document.

But, Berlinguer said, at the start of his concluding speech to the Central Committee and Central Control Commission, Comrade Cossutta decided that this forum was already an opportunity not so much to express disagreements on specific points in my report (which would have been entirely legitimate and was in fact done by others) but for polemical declarations which, above all, concerned not what was said in the report but rather, matters which will be the duty of the precongress committee and then the Central Committee to deal with.

Comrade Cossutta thus gave the impression, as Comrade Scano pointed out, of wanting to make some gratuitous distortions, almost with the intention of rallying all possible "malcontents." This is not forbidden, as long as we agree that it is not forbidden to point it out, either.

Berlinguer gave two examples from Comrade Cossutta's speech of this "distortion": The method in which he raised the issue of labor costs was the first of these examples.

The PCI secretary general recalled that his report stated the issue clearly -- in fact, serving as the starting point for the section concerning economic policy -- in order to indicate the need to react vigorously against the mystification that has been carried out on this point by the adversaries of the working classes, who accuse labor costs of being chiefly responsible for the difficulties being experienced by enterprises and inflation. Moreover, there was no neglect of the difficulties created by a certain surrender on the part of sectors of the trade union movement to the campaign unleashed by the employers, which in fact succeeded in portraying labor costs as the central factor in the exacerbation of the economic situation.

The party has reacted to all this, and since we have already received indications from various sides concerning trade union meetings at factories at which criticisms are emerging regarding certain trade union proposals, Berlinguer continued, we believe that the PCI must intervene to explain its position precisely, which does not coincide with that of certain trade unions, not even entirely with that of the Italian General Confederation of Labor.

Our party's conduct has therefore been extremely clear on this issue, Berlinguer said, but it does not deny that the problem exists; such an assertion must be regarded either as a purely demagogic stance or as evidence of a failure to fully understand the problem itself.

Entering briefly into the merits of the issue, Berlinguer referred to Chairomonte's remarks in this connection, also in disagreement with the arguments put forward by Cossutta (namely, the Mediobanca figures cited by Cossutta and presented in a note by Raffaelli concern percentage labor costs against turnover and are therefore a "variable," dependent on other percentages, the chief of which, in the case of the companies under consideration, is the vast increase in money costs, black interest [interessi passini]and indebtedness). What these data -- certainly interesting -- do confirm, however, is that labor costs are not the prime cause of firms' difficulties, but certainly not that the labor costs problem does not exist. It is therefore a matter of seeing how to tackle this problem (this, in its various aspects, was broached at the Turin workers conference.

Next, Berlinguer cited another example from Comrade Cossutta's speech, namely the connections -- in relation to preparation for the congress -- between democracy and unity, democracy and debate, lucidity and unity.

For one thing, I do not fully understand whether we on the Central Committee are intended to give section and federation congresses some kind of instruction to give preference, when appointing delegates to higher levels of the congress, to dissenting, rather than to consenting, comrades. It must be stated right away that dissent, like consent, can sometimes be partial, and in any case I cannot understand how we could attack the full sovereignty of congresses at all levels to elect their own delegates. They will decide the composition of their delegations and therefore also how many cadres should be included, compared to comrade delegates that do not belong to the apparatus.

The important thing, the PCI secretary general explained, is that at the congresses there be full freedom for the expression of opinions, the full opportunity to submit amendments to the document and to adopt different stances in votes, a guarantee that amendments submitted to the Central Committee itself will be published even if not adopted (if so requested by their authors). These are the things that the leadership bodies must undertake to guarantee during the precongress debate.

Furthermore, Berlinguer continued, there is another point in Comrade Cossutta's remarks that I do not understand. That is, in connection with the difference between a free exchange of opinions and a "campaign of elucidation," whether, in criticizing the latter and preferring the former, he believes that the leaders should in general forgo speaking so as to give comrades and the public outside the party all the requested or necessary clarifications. Of course, it is not obligatory for anyone within the Central Committee or the Directorate to provide such elucidations, but I for one, Berlinguer said, will try to provide them and I believe that many other comrades in the Central Committee and Directorate will try to take part in this task of elucidation, which is part of the task of formulation in which we are involved.

Apart from these two, let us say, specific issues, Berlinguer also broached a more general topic, namely the relationship between lucidity and unity. The one requirement must not prevail over the other, he said. Though it is true to say that positions must be clear, it is also true that the objective of party unity must not be entrusted solely to it.

He made two observations regarding this drastic assertion: The first is that there is no reason to believe (and it often does not happen) that the various stances that emerge during a debate will all inevitably be mutually divergent and contrasting, to the extent of prompting a clash and requiring a pronouncement. There are often differences and even nuances that it is difficult to reduce to the formula: "Unity only through lucidity."

There are stances that can be adopted wholly or in part: Sometimes this has led to muddled formulas and of course this is wrong and must be avoided, but often, however, the correct line has prevailed, which implies "taking account" of comrades' viewpoint, even when at first sight they may have seemed mistaken, either wholly or in part.

Berlinquer referred to the reactions prompted in certain comrades by the stances adopted by the party on events in Poland. This will be discussed again when the congress document is discussed, he said. But I do not believe that we need to modify our stance (events, including those of the past few hours, confirm that those stances were based on reality). In any case, even comrades who have expressed reservations regarding those stances must be heeded so as to take account of the real demands that sometimes lie at the root of their anxieties, especially if they are sincere; and we must rather carry out effective action to persuade them.

I say this, Berlinguer continued, to return to the idea that there need not always be a conflict and a vote on every issue (though this may often become necessary); and to say that unless the party's political and organizational unity is viewed as an end in itself, a result to aim at consciously, then, while I doubt that we would achieve results even on the path of clarity, I am certain that we would not achieve them on the path of unity, and the party would split.

Why must unity also be a goal, an asset to be pursued for its own sake? It is, as we well know, the decisive precondition for the party's capacity for mobilization, struggle and intervention outside; and it is the precondition for confidence and tranquility within the ranks of the party itself. If the internal atmosphere has improved in recent months -- and I believe that it has, though still to an inadequate extent -- one of the reasons, though not the only one, is that there has been a free and sincere effort by all the leaders to surmount, partly on the basis of the new factors that have recently entered the Italian political situation, certain instances of unilaterality which, because of the forms in which they were expressed, had created unrest within the party's ranks.

The requirement of lucidity must therefore go hand in hand with the requirement of unity. And this applies all the more today, that is, when we find ourselves confronted with a relatively new factor. I am referring to a continuous activity from outside our party aimed at damaging its structure and unity. I would like to repeat here and now that I believe that we must warn those carrying out this activity that unless this activity ceases, it will obviously appear no longer as a passing and marginal factor, but as evidence of inadmissible interference in our party's internal life that must be condemned as such in Italy and within the international worker's movement.

L'UNITA: 'UNACCEPTABLE TURNING POINT' IN POLAND

[Romano Ledda commentary]

[Text] The Polish situation has reached another dangerous and unacceptable turning point. We wish to state this very clearly and with concern: The Polish military government's decision to present the Sejm with a measure (on which we have already reported) that outlaws Solidarity and any form of autonomous trade union organization is a grave and negative one.

There are three principal reasons why. The first concerns the commitments made immediately after the 13 December 1981 coup d'etat. Indeed, at that time assurances were given that in no case would Poland return to the pre-summer 1980 situation. This was stated publicly and solemnly. Well, those commitments are now being negated with an act that finally eliminates the trade union gains ratified by the Gdansk accords. This implies a backtracking, in principle and in practice, from one of the most significant innovations and hopes of the Polish experience.

The second reason stems from the possible developments of Poland's domestic situation. The military government's decision exacerbates the profound rift that exists within Polish society and political life. The struggle against Solidarity and against the millions of workers that it still represents is now translated into an administrative act, becomes "law" and makes formal a further separation between government and the masses. This is also partly because it affects more than just Solidarity.

The attack against this essential component of modern-day Poland also further complicates relations with the other decisive component, constituted by the Catholic Church. The threads of a three-way dialogue, already made thin by the 13 December coup, are being further jeopardized to make way for factors of division and contraposition. With what prospects? This is the most worrying question. How will the country's stability and governability be guaranteed? By entrusting them solely to the use of force? Is it possible to believe that further painful upheavals can be avoided by following such a path?

Obviously, these questions -- which, it must be remembered, are assailing a country crucial to the present European balance -- cannot be answered by repeating that because of the state conditions had arrived at by December 1981, it was a matter of "inevitable" measures. It was not true then and it is not true now, because then, as now, the only realistic, possible and feasible prospect is renewal in the economic and social fields and the political system. This must be pursued by acknowledging the real forces at play -- in short, by proceeding to political negotiation and dialogue with the autonomous representatives of the working class and the church. Despite the coup d'etat, the conditions for the reactivation of a political dialogue that would gradually replace the acknowledged "exceptionality" of a military regime still existed. But this option was not taken.

And so we come to the third reason for our concern. We know we have issued a severe assessment of the East European societies, and on this point we have had -- and still have -- an impassioned debate among our comrades. We are certainly not pleased to see a further practical demonstration of that assessment in Poland. The Polish junta's decision confirms yet again the phenomena of regression that we have mentioned, the crucial embarrassment of a politicosocial model which (albeit with all due differentiations), trapped between demands for reform and authoritarian structures, always eventually gives the priority to the latter. Therefore, we were not mistaken when we spoke of a "historical phase" that was coming to a close and when we put forward thought-out and serious material for reflection and analysis. This problem concerns not only the worker's movement, but whoever regards with justified anxiety the complex and widespread crises shaking the world, including the ones in Eastern Europe.

Indeed, nobody is unaware that the Eastern bloc countries' stability is fundamental to the evolution of peaceful international relations. There must therefore be an acute awareness of the facts and a realistic approach to the problems. In other words, we must realize -- if we want to remain in touch with history -- that renewal processes in the Eastern bloc societies can only be gradual, advance in stages and experience further vicissitudes and autonomous protagonists (such as Solidarity). This is why sanctions, pressures or reprisals,and incentives or lack of incentives fall within a panorama which, on the one hand, is petty and which, on the other, exerts a negative influence. Instead, it is necessary to respond to the problems posed by the Eastern Bloc countries' crisis -- and to so many other problems now assailing the world -- with innovative outlooks, ideas and proposals consistent with the full development of a detente with a new substance equal to this world of the eighties. Very briefly, this means building an international framework dominated no longer by the logic of power blocs, but by new forms of autonomy, by a real democratization of world orders and by new developments in interstate economic relations. It also means -- primarily for us but also for the broad alignment of leftwing and democratic forces in Europe and beyond -- coming to grips immediately with the major issue of the advance of socialism and democracy in the West.

We now clearly reaffirm our condemnation of the Polish military government's decision and express our anxiety regarding the developments of what is still a very critical situation. We request a responsible awareness from everyone. It would be dangerous to pursue the kind of "realpolitik" that justifies and absolves everything, just as it would be equally dangerous to play the card of those whose sole aim is to destabilize. Being realistic does not imply doing nothing or being rash. Political realism consists of the ability to seek, indicate and initiate solutions to the problems with which reality confronts us. This is the work being carried out by Italian Communists in the fields of ideology and political action, without pedantic presumption or fatuous extremism, but with an awareness of the international responsibilities of the major force that they represent and that they constitute.

PAPER INTERVIEWS EANES ON POLITICAL SITUATION

[Unattributed report: "It Will Soon Be Possible To Make Appropriate Response to Situation"]

[Excerpts] "This worrying political situation requires a careful assessment on my part, above all, a careful assessment of how and when I must act politically -- I must do so under conditions which make it possible to achieve democratically stable, or at least stabilizing, results, and, of course, with the minimum disturbance and the maximum effectiveness," the president of the republic stated in an interview broadcast yesterday in Radio Comercial's "Domingueiro" program. Ramalho Eanes also emphasized that "conditions will soon converge for a response" to the principal issues of the current Portuguese political situation.

Ramalho Eanes, who had been questioned about the reasons why he did not dismiss the government, pointed out that the current government originated from a parliamentary majority which, he said, "will have to demonstrate whether or not it is capable of responding to the hopes which it created and which to some extent justified the electorate's choice."

Referring to the current situation in Portugal, Eanes stated that the "government has displayed difficulties in resolving the crisis, but the majority has implicitly and repeatedly asserted that this is the prime minister and this is the government which it wants and supports." As for the opposition, the president stated that the alternatives which it has put forward "are not very strong -- they have confined themselves to demanding the calling of an early election without jointly proposing a new political solution or solutions."

"There are also other political leaders who assert that it is advisable to allow time to enable the potential for agreement and even effectiveness embodied in the law on revision [of the constitution] to be explored," he added.

"Considering, as is my duty, these implications of the rules of the functioning of democracy, I do not forget that they also include recognition of and respect for my election and respect for my powers and for the political values which in my conduct and even in my political program finally won the Portuguese people's electoral support."

"I have no doubt," Ramalho Eanes stressed, "that conditions will soon converge for a response which I hope will be appropriate to all these issues, which are obviously complex."

Disagreement on Presidential Party

Asked about his stance on the forecast presidential party, Ramalho Eanes stated that he disagrees "with the model or the theory of the so-called presidential party."

"I personally do not believe in and therefore do not advocate parties without clear political programs and without social bases," he said, adding immediately that it is because this is so that he cannot "believe in or advocate parties which seek to replace the clear political programs which I mentioned and the social bases which they represent by a person, whoever he is, including, of course, a president of the republic."

Again declaring himself in favor of the formation of a "central bloc," Ramalho Eanes stated that that area is sought "by an electorate which I regard as steady, stable and well-informed and which does not as yet correspond to a fully defined party stance."

"I have long believed that that is detrimental to political stability and even to the strengthening of democracy and of its ability to respond to the population's problem insofar as it is through that response that democracy is strengthened and consolidated and prevails."

"If the existing political parties do not succeed in defining a stance which will attract that central electorate steadily and surely, I believe that we will only be able to accept the following: either we will continue with difficulties or we will witness the birth of new parties which will meet that need," he added.

Veto Is Presidential Prerogative

When asked whether by the use of the power of veto, regarded as frequent by the listeners, he is not "playing into the opposition's hands," the president maintained that the issue has been exaggerated by "a certain section of the press" and fabricated by the so-called "creators of political facts."

"The constitution grants the president of the republic the right and duty to veto, whether because of unconstitutionality or politically, "Ramalho Eanes pointed out, adding that "whether the action pleases or displeases the opposition is a matter which, although of interest, does not necessarily determine any stance of the president of the republic on the matter."

Next, Eanes enumerated the documents which had been vetoed. Out of the 672 the government had sent to the president's office by Saturday, 656 were promulgated, 12 were vetoed and 2 are awaiting promulgation or veto (the one updating salaries of the personnel of the ministerial offices and of the president's civil and military households, and the one winding up ANOP).

As regards the Assembly of the Republic's documents, Ramalho Eanes stated that since the beginning of the second legislative term, 88 decrees have been submitted and only 5 of those were vetoed, and he stressed that none of them was confirmed on the second voting in the plenum, which demonstrates that parliament accepted the grounds for the presidential veto.

MINISTER CORREIA ON 14 OCT LISBON STRIKES

LD171048 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 0815 GMT Oct 82

[Text] Speaking last Saturday in Carrazeda de Ansiaes, Braganca District, the minister of internal administration announced a tough riposte to the acts of sabotage and illegal actions carried out by the PCP and the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers-National Intersyndical [CGTP-IN].

Referring to last Thursday's events in Lisbon, Minister Angelo Correia described them as an attempt to plunge the country into chaos. The minister, who was speaking at the Carrazeda Town Hall, added that should such acts recur, the police will act with determination, firmness and confidence.

As is known, the CGTP-IN called strikes in the largest industrial enterprises in the Lisbon area last Thursday. The strike, protesting the alleged attempts by the government to close down state-owned companies, seriously affected the supply of electric power, which was cut in parts of the capital and other areas in the country. The Lisbon city center was without power for almost 24 hours, apparently due to acts of sabotage on power transformer pylons. This brought underground train services to a complete standstill and caused traffic jams in the streets of the capital as the cuts affected the computer that regulates traffic lights in the city. Even television broadcasts in the Lisbon area were affected for 47 hours. They could only be resumed when a police detachment escorted a group of electricity company technicians to the spot where a power cable had to be repaired.

In addition to the aforementioned statements by Angelo Correia, it is known that the government has ordered a strict inquiry into last Thursday's power cuts so as to ascertain who was actually responsible for the alleged acts of sabotage on the power distribution network.

NEARBY MILITARY EXERCISE CAUSES PALACE SCARE

[Text] Madrid, Oct. 21 (AFP) -- Tension was running high in Spain today as both politicians and the man in the street wondered about rumours of military maneuvers with legislative elections only a week away.

Less than three weeks after an alleged right-wing military plot to disrupt the elections was discovered on October 2, King Juan Carlos's guards were put on maximum alert Tuesday when an unidentified military convoy approached the Varzuela Palace, about 30 km (19 miles) from Madrid, the ABC newspaper reported today. The guards remained on standby, added ABC.

A reliable source said the palace had earlier received an anonymous phone call warning of preparations for an attack on the palace. Sources close to the king's security forces said the warning was taken seriously and that 2,500 royal guards were put on alert "by precaution" due to the "many rumors circulating in Madrid on attempts to destabilize democracy."

It was while watching for suspicious military movements that the guards spotted the military convoy, which included several pieces of artillery, from the Brunete armored division stationed near the capital. Certain of the Brunete's units participated in the failed putsch in February 23, 1981.

ABC said the royal guards were told to fire if the convoy came within 100 metres (300 yards) of the palace.

The Defense Ministry later said the convoy was returning to its barracks after carrying out target practice which had been scheduled in this region.

The elections are expected to bring the left to power, and the prospect of a Socialist victory has brought warnings from both right and centre about "Marxist collectivism". The extreme right has sworn to do all it can to stop a Socialist victory.

According to the reliable source, "the royal guard's command learned Tuesday of certain anonymous rumours but thought it best to take them seriously. These rumours coincided with the traveling overnight of a small military unit in the region, which was shown later to be a normal exercise." "The command ordered the royal guards on alert until it had verified the identity, itinerary and destination of the military unit," the source added.

While the alert was thus said to be only a "coincidence," it showed the jumpy mood in the Iberian peninsula as the crucial elections draw nearer. Much has not been disclosed concerning the coup plot for October 27, the eve of the elections. Two colonels and a lieutenant colonel were arrested on October 2 in connection with this. Defense Minister Alberto Oliart said the putsch would have involved shelling the Zarzuela Palace.

A source closed to officials at the king's residence said the royal guards would remain on alert until the elections.

TRANSFERS OF MILITARY OFFICERS IMMINENT

LD211422 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Excerpt] In an article by (Conde Zavala) in the newspaper DIARIO-16, it is reported that between 10 and 20 military officers will be transferred from their posts in the next few weeks as a result of the decision made by the military command concerning those suspected of being most inclined to participate in coups or those considered by superiors to be closely affiliated ideologically to the previous regime.

According to the newspaper, the replacement of these officers will be carried out gradually and discreetly. It states that these steps are not sanctions in principle, nor is there any reason to link them with the so-called "colonels' coup," although they have been taken as a result of the investigations into the 27 October coup plot known as "Operacion Marte."

ETA CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR 20 EXPLOSIONS

[Text] San Sebastian, Oct 21 (AFP) -- An anonymous phone call to a local radio station today said the Basque separatist ETA organisation was responsible for 20 explosions last night in the Basque country and Navarrap Province.

The caller said he belonged to the military ETA Eighth Assembly -- and ETA faction dedicated to using violent means in the pursuit of its aims.

The Eighth Assembly agreed at the beginning of this year to continue with terrorist action in contrast to the ETA-PM Seventh Assembly which renounced violence on September 30 last year.

Replying to a question, Santiago Carrillo said his party will support the Socialists against pressure from the rightwing, although the Socialist Party refuses all cooperation with the Communists. ELLEMANN-JENSEN CITED ON CURRENT EEC ISSUES

PM211045 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 18 Oct 82 p 5

[Klaus Justesen report: "Ellemann-Jensen on EEC Middle East Round Trip"]

[Text] The 10 EEC nations are once again attempting to play a prominent role in the Middle East. The first step will be a surprise visit by Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen to Lebanon and Jordan in early November. However, Israel is not included in this first phase of the foreign minister's travel plans.

Time and time again the EEC has attempted to play a decisive role in Middle East peace endeavors. However, up to now it has had to make do with general statements and demands. This time the initiative will take a more concrete form. One of the things Uffe Ellemann-Jensen will look into is the possibility of EEC economic support for the reconstruction of Beirut.

The Danish foreign minister will travel in his capacity as chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers. The decision was reached at a meeting between the EEC's ten foreign ministers at Hotel Hesselet in Nyborg. After the meeting, Uffe Ellemann-Jensen said that in the view of the Ten, the next few months will be extremely important in the endeavors to reach a peaceful solution. A fiasco would have far-reaching consequences for the whole world.

The visit to Lebanon is to stress support for the new government and for the calls for the withdrawal of all foreign troops. At the same time, Ellemann-Jensen will look into the possibilities of giving economic aid. The EEC is willing to make significant sums available. At present, the Commission is looking into concrete projects.

Uffe Elleman-Jensen said that he wants to visit Jordan because everything indicates that that country will play an increasingly important role in the peace process. However, the Ten do not feel that there is any need for a visit to Israel at the present moment. This is remarkable, for in the past the EEC had attached great importance to visiting both sides at the same time. "But we are waiting for Israeli reactions to our demarche," the Danish foreign minister said.

"The Ten admitted that the international peace-keeping force in Lebanon will need to stay there for some time to come. Its mandate will run out shortly, but the EEC is prepared to extend it by 2 months. The force comprises French, Italian and U.S. troops.

The foreign ministers were clear in their rejection of the attempts being made at present, by Iraq, for example, to have Israel excluded from the United Nations. This would have disastrous consequences not only for the United Nations, but also for international cooperation, the ministers said.

At the Nyborg meeting, the dominant topic was the EEC's relations with the United States. The Ten reject confrontation, but it is clear that trans-Atlantic relations -- already tense -- have deteriorated.

Uffe Ellemann-Jensen was bitingly sarcastic in his comments on the U.S. announcement of renewed grain sales to the Soviet Union. In his opinion, the arguments of reliable supply and the United States' own trading considerations were not convincing. The EEC has used the same arguments for its deliveries for the Siberian gas pipeline.

The steel conflict with the United States will come to a head this week. On Wednesday, [20 October], West Germany will decide whether it will accept a compromise among the Ten designed to prevent a trade war.

Bonn is under tough pressure and will probably give in, but this will happen only hours before time runs out on Thursday.

The Ten are worried by and pessimistic about developments in Poland. However, they reject the U.S. call for new sanctions and have promised more food aid instead. The Danish foreign minister hinted at the possibility of a visit to Washington to discuss the many problems in EEC-U.S. relations. However, this is unlikely to take place before his visit to the Middle East.

LIBERALS CRITICIZE SOCIAL DEMOCRATS' NATO STANCE

PM211111 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 16 Oct 82 p 5

[Kim Bang-Sorensen report: "Nonsocialist Disapproval, Socialist People's Party Jubilant"]

[Text] The Social Democratic Party's refusal at the moment to grant money for the 572 NATO missiles, which are planned for deployment in Western Europe, has caused surprise among the nonsocialist parties as well as on the left.

Whereas the Socialist People's Party greeted former Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen's change of heart with satisfaction and called it an important victory for the trade union movement's peace forces, Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen (Liberal Party) described it as "deeply regrettable."

Liberal Party defense spokesman and Folketing Defense Committee member Arne Christiansen described the Social Democratic 'No" as irresponsible. "I thought that the Social Democrats were a responsible party as far as Danish foreign and alliance policy is concerned, but their sense of responsibility seems to have fled now that the party finds itself in opposition."

Nor is Arne Christiansen able to shake off the thought that considerations of a possible election have a decisive factor for the change in the Social Democrats' attitude: "If this is the case, it could be a Social Democratic attempt to win back votes lost to the Socialist People's Party. If this is true, then the party's stance is even more irresponsible."

The Social Democratic stance now means that there is no longer a majority in the Folketing to approve the allocation of around 35 million kroner which Defense Minister Hans Engel will soon request from the Finance Committee in order to pay the Danish contribution to the infrastructure program, thus signaling Danish acceptance of the NATO missiles.

NATO Reaction

PM211109 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 16 Oct 82 p 5

[Klaus Justesen dispatch: "Surprise in NATO Over Anker Jorgensen's 'No' to Missiles"]

[Text] Brussels -- Former Danish Prime Minister and Social Democrat opposition leader Anker Jorgensen's turnabout on the question of 572 new NATO nuclear missiles has caused suprise at the organization's headquarters in Brussels. High-ranking sources have said that the situation would become untenable if the Social Democrats were to succeed in blocking Danish payments to NATO.

Anker Jorgensen wants to suspend some of the payments to the so-called NATO infrastructure program. The suspended payments are those which he considers would be used in the preparations for the deployment of the Pershing II and cruise missiles, which are intended to counterbalance the Soviet Union's SS-20 missiles.

The joint infrastructure program was begun in the fities, when it was used to finance the construction of air bases. Since then it has been extended to also include communications and early warning installations and much else.

Now it is time to prepare for the deployment of the new missiles. Preparations include ground installations and defenses.

Denmark makes a contribution of 3.7 percent to the infrastructure program. This represents a total of 160 million kroner in the present budget year. Experts say that it is impossible to tell how much will go to missile installations. In Copenhagen, opponents of the NATO plans have claimed that a sum of around 35 million kroner is involved.

Brussels is pointing out that the Danish Folketing has already accepted a 5-year defense spending program for 1980-84. The annual expenditure involved has since been approved by the Folketing Finance Committee. The plans for the 5 years total 1 billion kroner.

Anker Jorgensen justified his turnabout by saying that Denmark should wait to see the attitude of the countries in which the NATO missiles are to be deployed. NATO headquarters is unable to understand this argument. It is said that the Netherlands, for example, supports the deployment of the missiles but is still debating whether they should be deployed on Dutch territory. The Netherlands, like the other NATO nations, supports the infrastructure program. "The situation would be totally baroque if the Danish contributions were now to be blocked," high-ranking officials said unanimously yesterday.

LAMB PURCHASE, ECONOMY, UN OCCUPY FINNISH TALKS

LD211342 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1300 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Text] Finland has promised to buy 100 tons of lamb from Iceland next spring. This was announced following the talks held by President Mauno Koivisto and Foreign Minister Par Stenback with the prime minister of Iceland, Gunnar Thoroddsen, in Reykjavik today. The Icelanders emphasized the importance of the deal for the country's economy, as there is a considerable overproduction of lamb in Iceland at present. It was also confirmed after the talks that Finland will increase the amount of the Finnish-Icelandic cultural fund by Fmk 100,000.

During the meeting, which ended in the afternoon, President Koivisto described the state of the Finnish economy following the devaluation to Prime Minister Thoroddsen, who for his part briefed the Finns on the political situation in his country.

International issues were also discussed. Prime Minister Thoroddsen said that Iceland supports President Koivisto's view that the Nordic countries should take the initiative to restore the prestige of the United Nations.

President Koivisto's program during his state visit includes a tour to the south coast later today to see Icelandic agriculture. The president will return home on Saturday.

CHEAPER ALTERNATIVE FOR HAWK MISSILES SOUGHT

[Knut Falchenberg report: "Hawk Plans Collapse: Missile Offer Too Expensive"]

[Text] The question of the choice of antiaircraft missiles for Norwegian air bases has taken an unexpected turn after it became clear last week that the U.S. offer of the Hawk missile system would be considerably more expensive than expected.

It will not therefore be possible to implement the original plans for the purchase of Hawk missiles for Norway, sources in the Defense Ministry told AFTENPOSTEN. Norway will now turn to Sweden to look at a "Swedish alternative," a simplified version of the Hawk, while contacts with the Americans and the suppliers of the Roland and Rapier missiles are maintained.

Last Friday [8 October] the Defense Ministry received a so-called letter of offer and acceptance from the U.S. authorities. Norwegian officials were somewhat surprised when it became clear that the document from the United States was more in the form of proposals for various solutions than a final offer. There was also surprise when the figures for the cost of the Hawk were added up -- it was clear that the bill for the version of the Hawk in the numbers that Norway had been contemplating would exceed the budget allocation. The Hawk was considerably more expensive than the Norwegians had expected. A contributory factor here was the growing strength of the dollar.

The long-term plan for the Defense Forces which is presently being worked on contains a ceiling on how many kroner can be allocated to antiaircraft defense, and it is clear that the original Hawk plans recommended by the armed forces chief exceed these limits.

Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad has given the missiles issue high priority and has asked his civil servants to reach a solution which can be presented to the Storting before the end of the year. On the other hand, any notion of being able to include the missile question in the Storting's discussion of the defense budget in November has been abandoned.

Initially, the Defense Forces will turn to the Swedish authorities to make a more detailed examination of the solution the Swedes have chosen for their Hawk missiles. This includes simpler installations which make use of Swedish-produced radar in various functions. The antiaircraft defense materiel administration and the high command's antiaircraft defense inspector have been told to contact the relevant Swedish bodies as soon as possible while Norway maintains contacts with the U.S. suppliers. Such a "Swedish" solution would mean that Norway would purchase part of the Hawk system from the United States while other parts could come from Sweden. Another possibility being evaluated is whether it would be possible in purchasing the Hawk to reduce materiel requirements and choose somewhat simpler equipment and installations at air bases, or whether it will also be necessary to reduce the installations, at present planned for six air bases.

The original Norwegian plans for the Hawk sought an agreement under which part of the system would be leased from the United States while other parts would be bought. According to the information received by AFTENPOSTEN, it is not the leasing section of the agreement which has provided the price surprises, but the section covering the cost of the planned modernization program. It was stressed to AFTENPOSTEN that the Defense Forces' political leadership still attaches importance to the industrial aspect of the choice of missile system, and that the Hawk's competitors are still in the running. It is well-known that the German-French Roland system and the British Rapier have always been under consideration in the decision-making process.

OLOF PALME ON NORDIC ZONE, GULF MEDIATION

PM210855 Paris LE MONDE in French 17-18 Oct 82 pp 1, 2

[Interview with Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme by Alain Debove in Stockholm on 15 October]

[Excerpt] [Question] Mrs Alva Myrdal has just received the Nobel Peace Price for her efforts in favor of a Nordic nuclear-free zone. Are you in favor of that plan?

[Answer] I am very much in favor of it. But of course it is not easy to achieve since the Danes and Norwegians are NATO members and since nuclear arms could be deployed on their territories in the event of war. It is necessary, therefore, for the two military alliances to make concessions or take initiatives. Such a zone is of interest to us Swedes because it would move nuclear weapons even further away from our territory. It would probably also help to reduce tension in the region. But the Soviets must make a gesture and NATO must abandon the nuclear option in Denmark and Norway.

[Question] What kind of concession might the Soviets make?

[Answer] Several kinds, but for instance, it would be an excellent idea for them to withdraw their nuclear-armed submarines from the Baltic. Those submarines are not particularly appreciated. I think that such a zone should include the Baltic.

[Question] With regard to submarines, could you comment on the latest incident in the Stockholm Archipelago?

[Answer] I do not know what nationality it is, but if a submarine has indeed entered the region, it is a serious violation of our territorial integrity, but it is important to realize that it is extremely difficult to force a submarine to surface. We are going to adopt a tougher position in the future. It is necessary to be tough because we are neutral and neutrality is a political matter. The world must realize that we will always be neutral.

[Question] In the final analysis, is Sweden not serving NATO's interests better by being neutral than if it were not?

[Answer] I do not know, but I do know that it is in our interest to remain neutral. NATO and the Warsaw Pact must realize that we are prepared to defend that neutrality in all circumstances, even if we are subjected to strong external pressure.

[Question] The UN secretary general has entrusted you with a mediation mission between Iran and Iraq, but so far it has produced no results.

[Answer] I do not know whether it has or not, but I am carrying out the mission. The situation is very serious and I am following events closely. It is a terrible and pointless war which is causing enormous loss of human life and economic resources. In my opinion, it is entirely possible to find a solution, but the warring parties must first show a real desire for peace.

EC-U.S. STEEL AGREEMENT ON CUTBACKS CONCLUDED

LD211502 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1456 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Excerpts] A peace pact to end the transatlantic steel war was finally agreed in Brussels today -- eight minutes before time ran out. The West German Government decided to join her EEC partners in offering a package deal of steel export cutbacks to appease the U.S. steel industry, which has been claiming unfair competition from subsidised EEC shipments.

The end of the 10-month steel war has meant a sacrifice for EEC steelmakers who have had to agree to cut their U.S. exports by an average 8 percent until 1985. However, with the sharp slump in U.S. demand the effect will be far less dramatic than the proposed crippling tariffs.

Today's agreement came after days of intense discussions to persuade the West Germans to fall in line. But shipments of steel pipes and tubes -- crucial for Germany which supplies 70 percent of Europe's pipe and tube exports to the U.S. -- will be pegged at 5.9 percent of the American market. Last year Europe exported 10.9 percent of such products to the U.S. West Germany has agreed to a monitoring system coupled with consultations between the EEC and America if pipe and tube exports exceed the agreed quota.

KIPRIANOU STATEMENT ON RETURN FROM ATHENS

[Excerpt] President Kiprianou this afternoon returned from Athens where he held talks on Cyprus developments. In a statement at Larnaca Airport, President Kiprianou stressed that his talks with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou have been particularly useful. He said: We have covered all the issues that concern the present phase of the Cyprus problem. There was a very broad review of developments and possible prospects. There was also an exchange of views, and decisions were made as to what should be done in view of the discussion of the Cyprus problem at the nonaligned summit conference next March and the Cyprus debate at the UN General Assembly later, probably also in March 1983.

We also discussed, said the president, the question of missing persons and decisions were made on this question in connection with its promotion.

The talks, in general, were held in a cordial atmosphere and within the framework of the sincere and close cooperation that exists between the Governments of Greece and Cyprus. We will continue, President Kiprianou stressed, this close and sincere cooperation in order to promote our national cause. I want to say that I am pleased with my Athens talks with the Greek Government.

President Kiprianou added: Hellenic Republic President Karamanlis asked me to convey his warm greetings to the Cypriot people. I also had the opportunity to meet Greek official opposition leader Averof, KKE Secretary General Florakis and almost all the leaders of the Greek parties.

The president concluded: I noted again the same thing. The Government of Greece is fully alligned with the Cypriot people's struggle for freedom and justice, while the interest of the political circles, the Greek people and all Hellenism is unabated and continuous. We rightly consider Greece the mainstay of our struggle.

DAILY CITES LIBYAN COMPLICITY IN CYPRUS INVASION

NC211103 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 21 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] An important Libyan strategic role during the invasion of Cyprus was revealed with a great dose of pride by Al-Qadhdhafi's ambassador to Ankara, (Dr 'Isa). This revelation by the head of the Libyan Peoples Bureau (this is the name given to Al-Qadhdhafi's embassies overseas) in Ankara is included in an article published by the Turkish English-language magazine, MIDDLE EAST REVIEW.

As is known, there have been other press mentions in the past about the Libyan role during the Turkish invasion of Cyprus. This, however, is the first time that an official admission is made by a leading official of the Al-Qadhdhafi regime.

In his MIDDLE EAST REVIEW article, published last September (page 21), (Dr 'Isa) proudly admits reports that Libya's role during the Attila invasion of Cyprus was important and mentions that Libya is now trying to develop economic relations with Turkey, in contrast to what is happening with Greece.

The position of Libya in 1974, supported by a photostat copy of the ('Isa) article in the Turkish magazine, was denounced in an interpellation in the Greek Chamber of Deputies by New Democracy Deputies Andhrianopoulos, Papadhimitriou, Sofoulis and Khatzigakis, who ask whether the Greek Government intends to ask for explanations from the Al-Qadhdhafi regime about the provocative statements of its diplomatic representative in Ankara.

The People's Bureau of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah in Athens gives assurance that the so-called statement is untrue and "fabricated" and that it has been officially denied by the People's Bureau of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah in Ankara.

AKEL'S PAPAIOANNOU DELIVERS RECOMMENDATION

NC211138 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 21 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[19 October recommendation by AKEL Secretary General Ezekias Papaioannou]

[Excerpts] The secretary general of AKEL delivered the following recommendation:

The second plenary session of the party's Central Committee and the Central Control Committee meets in order to evaluate international and Cypriot political developments since AKEL's 15th congress, and to define our new duties accordingly.

The first, imperative conclusion we can draw is that the international tension, which commenced a long time ago, continues, because the reasons which caused it continue to exist. These reasons are none other than the notorious theory of dictation "from a position of strength" used by the U.S. imperialists with the support of some of their allies.

This antiquated and anachronistic imperialist theory leads to the nuclear armaments race with dire consequences for the world in case of a third world war. The time when the imperialists were able to dictate "from a position of strength" has passed for good. The existence of the all-powerful socialist community, headed by the Soviet Union, has put an end to this state of affairs. There are only two courses open to the world today: war or peace.

War today means thermonuclear annihilation and retardation of human civilization by thousands of years. The U.S. imperialists are committing a crime against humanity when they opt for the course of war.

There is, however, also the course of life, creativity, joy and happiness -- that of a higher civilization -- and this is the course of peace. The champion of this course is the Soviet Union, which was born for peace. The great October revolution was staged for peace and socialism and the first act of the young Soviet state was for peace. Socialism and peace are interrelated and inseparable.

The peaceful initiatives of the Soviet Union, and particularly its unilateral obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, won the esteem, appreciation and respect of all liberal and peace-loving humanity. Only the circles of the U.S. Pentagon, and certain others who are influenced by these circles, approach these peaceful Soviet proposals in a negative manner by insisting on adhering to the calamitous course of the armaments race. The peoples of the entire world, however, together with the people of the imperialist countries, have already made their choice and this is the course of peace.

The recent barbaric Israeli attack in Lebanon, which is the product of the strategic alliance of the Israeli Zionists and the United States, falls within the criminal, warlike plans of U.S. imperialism for world domination. The course followed by Hitler's Germany is now being followed by the United States of America. There is no reactionary, facist regime in the world which is not supported by them, aided by them and toward whose stay in authority they do not contribute.

The attack in Lebanon and the massacres of the Palestinians could not have happened if the Zionist neo-Nazis of Israel did not enjoy U.S. support. This is proved by the U.S. imperialists' use of the veto within the UN Security Council in an effort to prevent sanctions against Israel.

Certain circles, even in Cyprus, attempted to blame the Soviet Union of allegedly abandoning the Palestinians. The truth, however, is that only the Soviet Union helped the Palestinian fighters with arms during the 3 months of their heroic resistance against the Israeli invaders and the Lebanese Phalangists. The Lebanese Government not only rejected the offer of Soviet aid but even avoided an appeal to the United Nations.

The various critics of the Soviet Union, who wanted it to intervene -- uninvited -- in Lebanon, are the same ones who criticized and continue to criticize it because, in response to an invitation from the legal Government of Afghanistan, undertaken on the basis of an existing agreement, it hastened to help it against the foreign-motivated, attacking guerillas.

Comrades, it is not at all an exaggeration to say that what the U.S. imperialists did in Lebanon, using the Zionist neo-Nazis of Israel, they could also do in Cyprus by using the Turkish occupation troops. The Democratic Rally-affiliated press protests because we pointed out this danger in the past. They said we were "danger-mongering" and called upon the Cyprus Government to deny it. However, why did they call upon the Cyprus and not the U.S. Government?

For a long time now, the U.S. imperialists have wanted to give the Cyprus issue their own solution, which is nothing less than a conversion of Cyprus into their base through partitioning it and through striking at the liberation movement of the Cypriot people, and the leftwing movement in particular.

As was the case with Israel, the U.S. imperialists, had they wanted to, could have prevented the Turkish invasion of Cyprus, particularly because they also had the Soviet proposal for joint action in order to prevent the invasion and restore constitutional order on the island with the return to authority of the elected president, Makarios. They could also force Turkey to observe the UN resolutions on Cyprus and to withdraw its occupation troops.

Most certainly, the Cyprus issue was and remains a question of ridding Cyprus of the Turkish occupation and of imperialist intervention in our domestic affairs. It is a question of an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus.

There is not a single AKEL document or speech by party cadres which fails to position the Cyprus issue on its proper foundation or which fails to underline the liberation, anti-occupation and anti-imperialist character of the struggle we are waging.

In the first paragraph of the minimum program for cooperation between AKEL and the Democratic Party, it is stressed: "The Cyprus problem continues to be a problem of foreign intervention, of invasion and occupation and of stark violation of the rights of the Cypriot people."

With respect to the solution of the Cyprus issue, the two cooperating parties stress: "Considering the Cyprus problem as a question of foreign plots and intervention climaxing with the coup, the invasion and the continued occupation, and expressing their concern for the lack of progress toward a solution of the problem, the cooperating parties declare they will struggle for:

"A) A just, peaceful, mutually acceptable and viable solution to the Cyprus issue on the basis of the relevant UN resolutions and summit agreements;

"B) Ridding Cyprus of foreign troops and attaining its full demilitarization;

"C) The continuous internationalization of the Cyprus issue to the greatest possible degree; and

"D) Strengthening the entity of the Cypriot state.

"The Cypriot problem has two aspects: domestic and foreign. This is the proper foundation and framework for the solution to the Cyprus issue. The methods of struggle for the solution of the problem cannot and must never be confused with the policy for the solution of the Cyprus issue, which is an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus. The Cyprus issue has been correctly positioned ever since the time of Makarios.

It is a fact that the intercommunal talks did not show any basic progress. It is for this reason that it was resolved to have the Cyprus issue debated by the UN General Assembly next March. The lack of fundamental progress in the intercommunal talks is due to various factors, foremost of which are: Ankara's intransigence, which is encouraged and nurtured by the imperialist element and particularly by U.S. imperialism, and Turkish expansionism, which threatens the entire island of Cyprus and has its roots in U.S. imperialist strategic policy. We must never forget that the Turkish occupation troops are NATO troops and that they simultaneously serve NATO war plans and goals. When, therefore, we speak of Turkish occupation troops and about Turkey, we must know they are supported by U.S. imperialism and by the reactionary forces of NATO.

Therefore, in their struggle for liberty, the Cypriot people have to fight against the imperialist forces of NATO. Some people, like the leaders of the Democratic Rally, support our full subjugation to imperialism and say that we cannot cope with imperialism because we belong to the West, which can help us solve the Cyprus issue. This is a servile policy which places the interests of imperialism and its flunkeys above national interests, above the interests of the Cypriot people and their liberation cause.

With the policy, the leaders of the Democratic Rally aspire to play the role of the Lebanese Phalangists in Cyprus. We have said it many times and we repeat that imperialism and NATO could solve the Cyprus issue, but the solution they will give, if we allow them, will be an imperialist, partitionist and enslaving one. In other words, it will be the Lebanization of Cyprus.

The socialist and the nonaligned countries have proved themselves the true friends and supporters of the Cypriot people in the titanic struggle they are waging for their liberty. It is thanks to these countries that we have the UN resolutions in support of Cyprus. It is thanks to the support of these countries and thanks to our own resistance that U.S.-inspired Turkish plans for the conquest of all of Cyprus by Turkey were defeated.

We will solve the Cyprus issue within the framework of the United Nations and on the basis of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. Most of all, we will solve it through our own intensive struggle, through the support and assistance of the brother people of Greece and the democratic Greek Government, through the solidarity and support of the socialist and nonaligned countries and of all the liberal and peace-loving peoples of the world. We will solve it through its all-sided internationalization in all possible directions and through convocation of an international conference under UN auspices. The domestic aspect of the new, independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, nonaligned and demilitarized state, however, will be solved by the Cypriots, Greeks and Turks, within the UN framework and with UN assistance through the intercommunal talks.

The recent official visit of Erich Honecker to Cyprus, the talks and agreements signed with the Cypriot Government, the joint communique issued, as well as the imminent official visit to Moscow by President Kiprianou, will strengthen our entity as a state and the liberation struggle of our people.

It is an indisputable fact that the presence of the Turkish occupation troops creates a difficult and unilateral situation for the Greek Cypriot side at the intercommunal talks. Their presence encourages and nurtures Turkish intransigence. The Greek Cypriot side has demonstrated all its good will in the intercommunal talks by responding to the relevant provisions of the UN resolution and we believe this will be appreciated by the member states of the international organization when the Cyprus issue is debated at the UN General Assembly next March.

The domestic front has a tremendously important task in the successful conduct of our liberation struggle. As we all know, this front is not solid. This is because they, having destroyed this country and led it to the present tragic situation, not only fail to understand the huge crime they have committed, but also continue to insist upon dividing the Cypriot people.

With what we have said, we do not mean that there are no democratic rightists within the ranks of the Democratic Rally. There are such people, but, as was the case in the 1981 House of Representatives election, those elected were supported by the crosses of preference given to them by EOKA B. It is likely that in the future these very same elements may prevail, because they also have a better organization. AKEL and the democratic forces not only have no hatred against the honest rightist democrats who, for various reasons, were influenced to vote for the Democratic Rally, but we are ready to welcome them into the ranks of democratic cooperation whenever they decide to join. The same applies to all the other rightist democrats who voted for the small parties or who are organized under these parties.

The gates of democratic cooperation were and will remain wide open, even on election day. The fact that the patriotic and democratic forces did not all unite on the basis of a joint minimum program and for a joint candidate is not because of a refusal by the two parties [AKEL and Democratic Party] which did, in the end, cooperate, but rather because of the personal ambitions and disagreements between certain leaders over questions of line and tactics for the solution of the Cyprus problem.

The minimum program for cooperation is a program which, when applied in practice, guarantees a democratic and just solution of the Cyprus issue based upon the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. It guarantees the liberation of Cyprus and its conversion into a progressive democracy in which Greeks and Turks will cooperate harmoniously and will construct a joyous and happy life for all.

The enemies of democracy have said very much about the minimum program for cooperation which is only lies and slander. Many have presented this cooperation as subjugation of the Democratic Party to AKEL and others as the subjugation of AKEL to the Democratic Party. Some rave about "the communist danger," while others find ogres and monsters in it.

The truth is totally different, however. The two parties have agreed to cooperate on the basis of the minimum program and have even left the doors wide open for others who might wish to join. The two parties, which belong to different ideological-political camps, fully maintain their independence and even the right to disagree and criticize each other on issues not incorporated within the minimum program.

The coming presidential election has a great and decisive importance for the life and future of the people and of Cyprus. Which are the forces which basically clash and claim the presidency in the election? There are only two. These are the forces of the extreme rightwing reaction and great capital, which identify their fate with imperialism, the very forces which united with those who destroyed Cyprus. Then there are the forces represented by the democratic cooperation of the Democratic Party and AKEL. All other forces which stay away from the democratic cooperation and who in any way disrupt this cooperation unconsciously only help the extreme rightwing Rally leadership.

We will never forget that we are waging a struggle for life or death, for the liberty of Cyprus. The enemy lies in wait, ready to exploit, at every possible opportunity, a chance to implement his enslaving plans. We will not forget that we must live and prosper in this land which is called Cyprus. We will not forget the 2,000 missing persons, or the tens of thousands of refugees, or the enclaved people. We will always remember that this country belongs to its people and that we have the sacred and inviolable duty to liberate it and to hand this land over, territorially integral, to future generations.

We would like to hope that our political opponents will respond so that the election is conducted with exemplary law and order as well as decorum, as is proper for this long-suffering people of ours, as is proper for the honor of all those who sacrificed what is most valuable, their lives, for the liberty, progress and happiness of our superb people.

DENKTAS: PAPANDREOU LEADING ISSUE TO 'IMPASSE'

TA211906 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Text] Head of state Rauf Denktas, who is in New York, has charged that with his statements and actions, Greek Prime Minister Papandreou is influencing the Greek Cypriot community and leading the Cyprus problem to an impasse. Denktas said: Papandreou is trying to prevent the establishment of a bizonal federation within the framework of an agreement I had reached with Makarios. He is also trying to protect his position in his country by continuing to show hostility to Turkey.

ANATOLIA reports that Denktas held a news conference with press and television reporters from various Arab countries. Denktas said that Papandreou was encouraging the Greek Cypriots to arm themselves and, like his father, pushing the Greek Cypriot community toward disaster.

Denktas said: We are determined to continue with the bilateral negotiations with good will. The UN secretary general has stressed once again that the intercommunal talks are the only way and that results can be obtained from them if there is good will.

Denktas called on the Islamic world to follow the developments in Cyprus more closely. He said: The Greek Cypriots seem determined to go on with their struggle to usurp the rights of the Muslim Turkish Cypriot people who have protected their culture in Cyprus for centuries. That is why the Greek Cypriots are arming themselves. That is why they have been imposing an economic embargo on us for years. Unfortunately, certain Islamic countries are unwittingly supporting this embargo.

Replying to a question, Denktas said that the issue of border adjustments would be discussed during the debates on the territorial issue and, therefore, today the problem of Maras [Varosha] did not exist.

DENKTAS ON GREEK-GREEK CYPRIOT COMMUNIQUE

[Text] Commenting on the joint Greek-Greek Cypriot communique issued following the visit of Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou to Athens, President Rauf Denktas has said that the communique stresses the (?determination) of Greece and the Greek Cypriot leadership to remove the Cyprus issue from the framework of the intercommunal talks. Noting that the policy of taking the Cyprus issue to the nonaligned summit and making unilateral decisions incompatible with the realities of Cyprus, is dangerous from the viewpoint of the soundness of the intercommunal talks, Denktas added that seeking the approval of the UN General Assembly on a unilateral decision to be adopted at the nonaligned summit would adversely affect the intercommunal talks. Denktas said that in the event such an initiative is taken, in contradiction to the views and proposals of the UN secretary general, then we will have to reasses the situation. Referring to the section of the communique which states that priority wi-l be given to the missing persons issue, Denktas stressed that if there is a party which should give an account to the world of the missing persons issue, that party is the Greek Cypriot one. Denktas said that obstructing the activities of the Missing Persons Committee, which also has a UN representative, instead of facilitating it and diffusing false information to the world, were not compatible with humanity and good will.

In reply to a question by various press officials, Denktas said that the comparison made by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou in Kuwait between the situation of the Palestinians in Lebanon and the disaster faced by the Greeks in Micro Asia [Kucuk Asya] as well as the "invasion" -- as Papandreou called it -- of Cyprus in 1974 was, to put it mildly, demagogy. Denktas said that comparing the incident which he called the "1922 Izmir tragedy" with the sacred struggle of the Palestinians was the greatest insult to the Palestinians on the part of Papandreou. Denktas said that the Palestinians are struggling for their rights, land and people, and striving not to fall into the (?traps) of Western imperialism. Denktas added that the Greeks, who wanted to stab the Turkish nation with British (?armored vehicles), arms and money and who were the tools of British imperialism in 1922, learned a historic lesson. Denktas recalled that the time has come for the Islamic countries to put a stop to Greece's policy of expansion in Cyprus, bearing in mind that Papandreou [words indistinct] from the Islamic world to annihilate the Muslim Turkish Cypriot community. Denktas added that the true face of Greece should be revealed.

O AGON SCORES LACK OF COMMON LINE ON ISSUE

[From the "My Opinion" column: "This Is the Common Line: - Kiprianou, Rolandhis, Ziartidhis Against Papandreou"]

[Excerpts] "There is no dialogue. It is only figurative, because there is no dialogue between Kiprianou and Denktas or between the two interlocutors. It is a dialogue between Nicosia and Ankara, which maintains a modern military presence over 36.4 percent of Cyprus; in other words, it occupies one-third of Cyprus. Without bad faith, but sincerely, I do not believe that the current dialogue can lead anywhere. It is only a waste of time. Eight years have already passed and if the dialogue is continued at the current rate, then another 8 years will pass." (A. Papandreou)

"Even if dialogue is discontinued 1,000 times, we will request its resumption." (A. Ziartidhis)

"The cooperating parties declare that the process of the intercommunal talks within the framework and under the aegis of the United Nations is, under the current facts, the most appropriate for the peaceful, just, mutually acceptable and viable solution to the domestic aspect of the Cyprus issue." (Minimum program of the Democratic Party and AKEL)

"Dialogue is something provided for under UN resolutions. Naturally, we do not want a fruitless, protracted dialogue but we have every obligation toward this country and toward this people to exhaust all margins in order to ascertain whether progress is possible. If we exhaust all margins, then most certainly other methods will be undertaken." (Spiros Kiprianou on 11 November 81)

"Despite all difficulties, the method of dialogue is the most appropriate course in the sector of our national issue. We must continue to strive and we must even protect this process, because if just views on the Cyprus issue ever prevail in Ankara, then dialogue will be the vehicle toward termination and a solution." (Nikos Rolandhis on 15 May 1980)

President Kiprianou is due to return to Cyprus today. He will once again speak to the people with the usual and stereotypical statements about "absolute agreement," "close cooperation," "a joint line" and "identity of views."

Perhaps he will also reiterate that the opposition and the press undermine relations between Athens and Nicosia. However, the statements of the Greek prime minister the other day -- made while Kiprianou was in Athens -- are unquestionable proof of total disagreement between the two governments on the course to be followed to promote the national issue.

So long as this different evaluation, coupled with the different philosophies of the two leaderships, remains, then the Cyprus issue will not see better days. It is condemned to remain in stagnation and uncertainty. No coordinated effort will be undertaken, no appeal to the United Nations is likely to succeed and in no case will the cause of Cyprus be promoted.

The parody at the Ledra Palace [Hotel] will be perpetuated without any result; Kiprianou will go on waiting to exhaust all margins; Denktas, in the meantime, will strengthen his faits accomplis and he will proceed with the execution of the projects which will give a substructure to his pseudo-state and on a nice and bright morning we will hear the proclamation of the Turkish Cypriot state, always with the alleged intercommunal dialogue in progress, the dialogue which certain naive people consider as a preventative element to such a tragic development.

It is then that responsibilities will be sought from those in authority. It is only then that it will be proved how harmful and how calamitous are the options adopted by the "salvationist" minimum program....

PAPER SAYS REVISION OF NATO ARTICLES SOUGHT

NC211034 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 20 Oct 82 p 1

[By Nikos Simou]

[Excerpts] According to our information, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou will raise the question of revising certain basic provisions of the North Atlantic treaty at the NATO Defense Planning Committee the beginning of next month. This initiative by the Greek prime minister, which falls within the framework of promoting some solutions to pending foreign issues, aims at widening those cases in which the other NATO member states regard an armed attack against another member as an attack against all of them.

When the text of the treaty was formulated in 1949, it primarily referred to belligerent actions emanating from Eastern bloc countries. Mr Papandreou will ask that it be defined so that it refers to an "armed attack" wherever it may emanate, and that there should be a corresponding reaction by the allies. In this case, acceptance of this proposal would, in a wider sense, constitute satisfying the Greek demand -- which was mainly raised to the U.S. quarters -- for guarantees for the national borders.

At the same time, during the Greek-NATO dialogue on the establishment of the Larisa command, an attempt will be made at the military levels for the alliance to accept the status on the operational control of the Aegean that existed prior to 1974, specifically that the military committee's decision MC36/2 be put in force. According to this decision, Greece is responsible for the air defense of our national airspace within the Athens Flight Information Region [FIR], and also that the limits of advance warning and tactical attack operations coincide with this FIR.

Diplomatic circles have considered the stand that NATO appears to be adopting on these Greek positions as positive and expressed the undoubtedly optimistic forecast that the dispute with the alliance is likely to be resolved by the end of the year. In any case, such a likelihood presupposes the consent of or a passive reaction from the Turkish side, which should be combined with something given by the Greek side in return. For instance, our country would be prepared to proceed with some facilities in the question of flight plans by military aircraft in the Aegean airspace as well as with arrangements in the dispute over the continental shelf.

According to existing indications, these facilities that our country is prepared to offer constitute a section of an informal package deal within which the Greek-Turkish dispute would find its solution.

For this reason, diplomatic circles have described Mr Papandreou's initiative at the NATO Council as a very careful step toward securing some guarantees which, because they would be placed within the framework of the more general functioning of NATO and its purposes, would not directly raise a question of danger from the East -- something that would not incite Turkish intransigence.

Government Denial

[Text] The government spokesman yesterday stated that Prime Minister A. Papandreou will not raise the question of revising Article 5 of NATO [treaty]. The spokesman was referring to a report in yesterday's issue of I KATHIMERINI which disclosed that Mr Papandreou "would ask at the Defense Planning Committee for broadening those cases in which the other member states of the alliance regard an armed attack against another member as an attack against all of them." The government spokesman further said that the prime minister had earlier asked that NATO adopt some decision on the basis of which it would undertake the obligation to confront a danger against a member state from wherever it may emanate.

It is pointed out, however, that the report in I KATHIMERINI did not say that the prime minister would ask for a revision of the article, but would ask that it be defined that "an armed attack be regarded as such from wherever it emanates and that there should be corresponding reaction by the allies." It was merely noted that if the Greek proposal was accepted, NATO -- which is exclusively competent -- would be compelled to broaden Article 5 of its charter.

AKROPOLIS REPORTS PASOK-KKE POLITICAL BARGAINING

NC211013 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 20 Oct 82 p 1

[Excerpt] Mr Panandreou is hardening his stand artifically in order to cover up his negotiations with the KKE in view of the second round of the municipal elections next Sunday. At the same time, reliable information says that progress is being made in the political marriage between PASOK and KKE with the following main elements: participation in the government by two ministers of joint choice, according to the preference of KKE; appointment of six nomarchs of Communist choice and Mr Papandreou's commitment to establish simple proportional representation and not a "system" as the prime minister wants to do.

According to the same information, Mr Papandreou does not reject these conditions set by the KKE.

However, Mr Papandreou would counterpropose that actually Mr Theodhorakis and Mr Glezos participate in his government and not just two ministers whom the KKE would like to participate.

This is done so as to reduce both interparty and broader reaction that he "had surrendered" unconditionally to the KKE and irresistibly yielded to the conditions set by it.

All this took place backstage in complete secrecy.

For this reason, it is not ruled out that for reasons of expediency on the part of PASOK or KKE, this may lead to either party attempting to deny the information AKROPOLIS is disclosing today.

ASSEMBLY OFFICIAL ON GREEK CYPRIOT ARMING

NC220754 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 18 Oct 82 pp 1, 11

[Nur Batur report from Ankara]

[Text] Aydin Tug, spokesman of the Foreign Affairs Commission of the Consultative Assembly, has said: "During the past year, Greece and particularly the Greek Cypriot administration, have indulged in an intensive arming activity."

Tug, who served as the chairman of the Cyprus Coordination Committee for several years, stressed that the policy of patience pursued by Turkey toward Greece does not stem from weakness. Adding that Greece's attempt to extend its territorial waters to 12 miles will give rise to dangerous consequences, Tug reiterated that Turkey would not make the slightest concession on its rights in the Aegean.

Tug also maintained that the Greek Cypriot administration was also engaged in extremely dangerous games, and added: "Allowing the Armenians to turn Cyprus into a nest for terrorist organizations has added a serious dimension to the situation. For the first time this year, the arms purchased have been displayed, also making it known that a vast quantity of these arms are stockpiled.

"We believe in, and sincerely support, the settlement of the Cyprus issue through the intercommunal talks. Nevertheless, Turkey is in a position to cope with unpleasant contingencies. We believe that the Greek Cypriot administration should abandon its long-term, imaginary plans. Otherwise, such perilous games will prove detrimental and not beneficial to the Greek Cypriot community."

RPP'S GUNES CRITICIZES DRAFT CONSTITUTION

NC220944 Ankara YANKI in Turkish 18-24 Oct 82 p 12

[Interview granted by former Republican People's Party [RPP] Interior Minister Hasan Fehmi Gunes to YANKI in Ankara -- date not specified]

[Excerpts] Question: How do you evaluate the preparation of the draft constitution?

Answer: It cannot be argued that a democratic method was adopted in the preparation of the draft constitution. Since constitutions are broadly defined as "collective agreements," they should give priority to the expectations of the communities, organizations and sectors attached to them in their drafting. It is the representatives of these sectors that will reflect the expectations of the community in the constitution. Neither the representatives of the people nor the representatives of the groups or sectors were assigned any task in the preparation of this constitution. This is why the draft prepared by appointed people cannot be considered democratic. Another matter that should be raised about the draft are the restrictions imposed on criticism of it.

Question: Is the draft constitution adequate to secure a transition to democracy?

Answer: It is impossible to answer your question positively. I do not think the draft aims at an immediate transition to democracy. On the contrary, it aims at a specific period without democracy. There are institutionalized indications of this in the draft. The draft has also banned the organizations and institutions from politics. Democracy is a system of institutions and associations, and these organizations constantly influence one another.

Question: How does this situation reflect on the government?

Answer: Certain councils and committees created by the draft constitution through the system of appointments have been given powers over those to be elected by popular vote and national will. The economic-social council and the presidential council have been vested with such powers. In practice, this will lead to governments and political parties which will be unable to implement their programs. In other words, there will be political parties, but there will be no political party programs.

Question: Do you consider the antiviolence measures in the draft constitution adequate?

Answer: Let me first state that I do not share the conviction that the 1961 Constitution was the source of the acts of terrorism which were committed before 12 September. The 1961 Constitution embodied all the measures necessary for dealing with the problems created by violence. For example, the declaration of martial law was possible. Had all the institutions and establishments sharing power in those days, as well as all those entrusted with authority, carried out their mission efficiently, in accordance with the Constitution and the laws stipulated by it, the difficulties could have been resolved. There would have been no need for the above-mentioned institutions to incriminate one another.

Question: How do you evaluate the balance between the employers and the employees as provided by the draft constitution?

Answer: The most appropriate answer to this question would be the adage "Equal freedom to both the wolf and the lamb means death for the latter." I believe that through the draft constitution the workers' unions are rendered so incomplete that they will not be able to function like those in contemporary democracies.

Question: What sort of administration do you believe the draft constitution aims at?

Answer: The new constitution's objective is to institutionalize a militarist administration and to convert it into a constitutional regime.

ALPASLAN ON EXCLUSION OF FORMER POLITICIANS

NC211325 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 18 Oct 82 p 6

[Text] Ankara, THA -- Retired Lt Gen Tevfik Fikret Alpaslan, member of the Constitutional Commission, has stated that it is not possible to hold former politicians entirely responsible for the pre-12 September events and added that depriving these politicians of the right to elect and be elected would run counter to the principles of a state of law.

In a statement issued yesterday, Alpaslan maintained that what Turkey wanted was not "a policy devoid of politics" and added: "It is my conviction that it would be wrong to treat those politicians who try to destroy the state and divide the nation in the same way as those who try with all their might to defend the state, its security forces and the indivisible whole of the fatherland and nation."

Recalling that those who formed illegal organizations, staged demonstrations carrying red-star flags in their hands, and shed the blood of hundreds of fellow countrymen, as well as their inciters, have been detected and prosecuted before unbiased courts, Alpaslan added that the 1961 Constitution was too flexible, it "encouraged some people to harbor treacherous ideas and indulge in militant acts."

Stating that politics is a difficult business and that politicians develop under difficult conditions, Alpaslan added: "Depriving persons -- who have not been proved guilty -- of the right to elect and be elected by brushing them aside, be they party members, party administrators, parliamentarians or ordinary party sympathizers, would be contravening the rules of law and righteousness, as well as the superiority of justice and the differentiation between crime and punishment. If we insist on this decision, we shall be leading the nation to discussions and misunderstandings, which might last for years, when we return to normal democratic order."

Alpaslan finally stated that the nation had already identified those who had led it into dark days and that it would eliminate them at the first elections.

PAHR CRITICIZES BRAZIL'S IMPORT POLICY

AU221055 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0600 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Text] Last night, Brazilian Foreign Minister Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro, who is presently paying an official visit to Vienna, described the relations between the two countries as free of problems but capable of being expanded. In a talk with Austrian journalists, the Brazilian minister declared that the most important reasons for his visit to Austria were to exchange views on the international situation and on development problems. In a working talk, Foreign Minister Pahr among other things, drew attention to the worries of Austrian firms, which are represented in the Brazilian market by subsidiary companies or through license agreements. Pahr complained about Brazil's restrictive import policy.

PALESTINIAN SENTENCED FOR SYNAGOGUE ATTACK

NC221820 Paris AFP in English 1805 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Text] Vienna, Oct 22 (AFP) -- A 29-year-old Palestinian from the Israeli-occupied West Bank was sentenced to life imprisonment today for masterminding the murder of a Viennese councillor on May 1 last year and an attack four months later on a Vienna synagogue that left two people dead and 30 wounded.

The only point Younis conceded [words indistinct] various arms and explosives at Bibumd.

Investigators had found not only the arm used to kill the councillor, Heinz Nittel, at Younis' home but also the [word indistinct] of the two terrorists, caught, arms in hand, outside the synagogue just after the attack.

The trial shed little light on Younis' underground activities here or on the preparation of execution of the attacks.

He told the court he was a member of a Palestinian group called Harkat Fatah and was the victim of a dissident Palestinian group called Al-Asifah that, he said, often blamed other movements for crimes it committed.

The name Al-Asifah has been linked with a dissident Palestinian group led by Abu Nidal [Hassan Al-Banna].

Press Conference Report

NC221930 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Text] Early this evening Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou returned to Athens after completing a 2-day official visit to Belgium. Before departing the Belgian capital, Papandreou held a press conference with Greek and foreign reporters. We will now broadcast relevant reportage that was sent to us from Brussels, shortly before the prime minister's departure, by our correspondent Aris Xipolitidhis.

With the interview he gave at noon at the Brussels international press center, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou completed his official visit to Belgium during which he visited the Europalia exhibition and had talks with Belgian Prime Minister Martens and Chairman of the Council of the European Communities Thorn. Today's interview was watched by numerous Belgian and other foreign reporters and correspondents of foreign news agencies and newspapers in the Belgian capital and by the correspondents of the Greek press who had accompanied the prime minister on his trip.

In his introductory statement, the prime minister analyzed the government's domestic and foreign policy stressing that it aims at protecting the Greek people's interests. Referring to domestic policy, Papandreou described 1982 as a year of great institutional changes and after mentioning the most significant of the laws the Chamber had passed, he said that the government's goal is to modernize Greece within the framework of the socialist transformation of the Greek society.

On economic policy, the prime minister said that the government's goals for 1982 were the arrest of the Greek economy's slide, the redistribution of income for the benefit of the poorer classes and the rekindling of the economy so that in 1983 the national product can increase by 2 or 3 percent.

Then Papandreou referred to his talks with Belgian Prime Minister Martens, which he described as especially useful, and with Gaston Thorn with whom he discussed the course of the communal problems and the Greek aide-memoire. Subsequently, the prime minister replied to reporters' questions and among other things he said:

-- That the Greek Government is profoundly identified with the peace movement and with all efforts to remove nuclear arms from the European continent;

-- that the government will not take any step that will endanger the country's territorial integrity and peac in the area;

-- that Greece has not yet implemented certain of its commitments within the framework of the Rogers agreement concerning its return to NATO because the interpretation that is being given to its implementation is nationally unacceptable and as an example, he cited the existence of ambiquities which allow Turkey to dispute the right of the Greek Armed Forces to be responsible for the protection of the Greek area;

-- that he considers as very positive for the improvement of the atmosphere between Greece and Turkey the recent statement of the Turkish Government spokesman that Turkey has no claims or designs on Greece;

-- that the EEC confronts with good will, friendly disposition and understanding the demands which Greece has put forth in its aide-memoire and that in the spring of 1983, the EEC will give its final reply;

-- that significant room exists for the development of relations between Greece and Belgium;

-- that the present moment is the last and most decisive opportunity for a final solution of the Middle East problem;

-- that he feels special satisfaction at the stance the EEC has taken on the Middle East problem, a stance that recognizes the right of self-determination for the Palestinians and recognizes the PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people; and finally,

-- that he hopes for a great victory for the Socialist Workers' Party of Gonzales in the upcoming elections in Spain so that democracy can be consolidated in that friendly country.

MITTERRAND: RELATIONS WITH FRG REMAIN GOOD

LD220944 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Although economic problems as well as the problems of rebuilding a very sick Europe were talked about yesterday during the 40th French-German summit -- the first between Francois Mitterrand and Helmut Kohl -- it was defense issues above all, which were noteworthy. The talks between the French and German defense ministers were exceptionally long. There was also some talk of jointly building a helicopter rather than a tank.

As to the climate of relations between the two countries, they remain excellent despite the changes of government. Francois Mitterrand stressed this yesterday at the end of the official dinner:

[Begin recording] The Federal Republic of Germany and France are solid democracies in which changes of government are part of the rules of the game. I told your predecessor last year that the change in government in France in no way put in doubt, naturally, the quality of the links between us. And today you have given me the same assurances for the same reasons. Our political choices are there and they are different, but there are so many points on which our policies converge. There are a certain number of values, those of our civilization, and a historical knowledge which has led us to establish our friendship and the feeling that our close agreement can guide our future. Seeks European Deterrent Force

[Text] This morning a second round of private talks was held in Bonn between President Francois Mitterrand and FRG Chancellor Helmut Kohl. After yesterday's broad review of the international situation, the two statesmen will today tackle the issues of security and defense. Following this the two full delegations will begin working. Francois Mitterrand's entourage is saying that France would like long-term cooperation with West Germany. The aim would be a European deterrent force.

Kohl on Talks

[Excerpt] Bonn, 22 Oct (DPA) -- French President Francois Mitterrand has been invited by Bundestag President Richard Stuecklen to address the Bundestag on the 20th anniversary of the Franco-German treaty. Chancellor Helmut Kohl announced this to newsmen today in connection with the 40th Franco-German consultations.

According to the Federal Press Office, a date has not yet been set for the address. The last foreign head of state to address the Bundestag was President Ronald Reagan.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl said he was satisfied so far with the course of the consultations, which end this afternoon. They have done good work in a very open, very friendly and very cordial atmosphere.

The chancellor primarily stressed that for the first time security policy consultations had taken place between the foreign and defense ministers of the two countries. Both countries were members of the Atlantic alliance, and both regarded coordination in security questions as being necessary. The aim of the consultations was to bring opinions on these questions closer together and to reach joint lines. Kohl announced that in the future this body will meet twice yearly. The meetings will be prepared by coordinating groups.

The chancellor took this opportunity to stress that as before, he considers close cooperation with the United States in all security questions to be necessary. There is no "either-or policy" but only an "as well as" policy. For the Federal Republic especially, close cooperation with the United States is of great importance. Despite "occasional disharmony" this also applies to relations between Europe and the United States.

Kohl said that in the consultations, both sides agreed to continue dialogue with the East despite severe setbacks. They are also pursuing joint aims with regard to the CSCE process. He said the actions against the Solidarity trade union in Poland have been strongly condemned. They place a heavy strain on East-West relations.

Mitterrand stressed that there had been no talk in the consultations about the Federal Republic joining in France's nuclear strategy. Nor had there been any mention of a possible transfer of nuclear technology to Germany. Mitterrand also stressed that a financial contribution by the Federal Republic to the development of French nuclear power was not under consideration.

In the consultations there had also been no talk about financial problems that could arise in connection with the stationing of French forces in the Federal Republic. A reduction in the number of French troops in the Federal Republic had also not been a subject of discussion. They had discussed Germany's own security in connection with France.

Naturally, there was discussion of the economic aspects of bilateral relations, with all the questions linked to this, including the industrial sector. Agriculture should also not be forgotten.

Mitterrand expressed his thanks that he would be able to address the Bundestag to mark the 20th anniversary of the signing of the Elysee treaty. This would give him an opportunity to speak directly to the German people. He said Kohl would also be invited to Paris, but he gave no details of this visit. He said France-German friendship is becoming stronger and stronger.

No FRG Nuclear Association

LD221432 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Text] The FRG will not be associated with French nuclear strategy. This is a denial of certain rumors which Francois Mitterrand made clear at the close of the 40th French-German summit. The question was not even mentioned, the head of state stressed. He also pointed out that he had never thought of asking for financial assistance from the FRG to develop our nuclear force.

The talks with Helmut Kohl primarily concerned the security problems peculiar to West Germany and the modernization of tactical French forces.

Talks End

[Excerpt] Bonn, 22 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl and President Francois Mitterrand ended the Franco-German summit in Bonn today with a final personal talk. This was followed by a full meeting of both government delegations in the federal chancellor's office.

Kohl Statement

[Text] Bonn, 22 Oct (DPA) -- After the end of the German-French consultations, Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl made the following statement:

"Mr President, Mr Prime Minister, ladies and gentlemen: We are holding this press conference at the end of the German-French consultations. It is the 40th German-French consultation following the adoption of the German-French friendship treaty.

"It is to me a great pleasure and above all a great honor that I, only a few days after taking over the office of federal chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, can preside together with you, Mr President, over this press conference. Indeed, a favorable situation has arisen for us in that I was your guest at the Elysee Palace within hours of my election and we were able to prepare for yesterday's and today's session in that preliminary talk.

"Together we have done good work in a very open, very friendly and, I felt, very cordial atmosphere. It has been shown that German-French friendship over the past decades has grown and deepened in such a way that the government changes that took place in France a year ago, and in the FRG quite recently, had no effect on the steady continuation of friendly relations. I think this is a magnificent result of the policy of our two countries, but it is also an important contribution for Europe.

"The 20th anniversary of the German-French friendship treaty is in a few weeks' time, in January. We, the president of the republic and I, have decided together to celebrate this event both in Paris and Bonn in a fitting manner. It is a great pleasure for me to announce that Herr Richard Stuecklen, president of the German Bundestag and the president has accepted this invitation.

"Ladies and gentlemen, naturally, in the course of the talks we have also discussed the internal development of our countries. We have discussed our common concern for achieving progress in the fight against unemployment, especially youth unemployment. For both governments these are the central questions, pure and simple.

"Another important topic to me, in the runup to the German presidency of the EC as of January next year, was of course the developments within the European Community — developments with which we cannot be pleased and which give cause for a number of concerns. In my government statement last week I pointed out that we intend to make a fresh start and that we think it important that European concerns also progress at the half-time stage of the European Parliament. [sentence as received]

"Particular prominence was given in our talks to security policy questions. After 19 years we have activated for the first time an agreement under the German-French friendship treaty which very pointedly refers to the development of a common security policy.

"I can announce to you that in execution of the mandate given by the heads of state and government at the German-French summit in February 1982, the foreign and defense ministers of the two countries met yesterday for a first extensive exchange of views on questions of defense and external security. The FRG and France are both members of the Atlantic alliance. Although their situations concerning defense problems are different, they do have common concerns regarding their security and are therefore of the opinion that closer coordination in these questions would be in their common interests. These talks permit the application of the regulations of the 1963 German-French treaty concerning defense, which aim at bringing the views of the two countries closer together and formulating common concepts. The two sides adhere to the view that both parts of the twin decision of 1979 are of equal significance in the interests of common security. They also agree that the inclusion of the French nuclear armed forces in the American-Soviet arms control negotiations will not be considered.

"The president of the republic and I have agreed to the proposal of the four ministers -- the two foreign and the two defense ministers -- to continue the extended exchange of views. We have also arranged for the ministers to meet twice yearly. We have also arranged for a coordinating group consisting of high-ranking representatives of the four ministries to get together between these meetings and to prepare for these meetings. This coordinating group will convene subgroups for special questions.

"For us this is a very important continuation of the spirit and contents of the German-French friendship treaty because here, an important step is taken with our French neighbor in a particularly direct manner. However, to guard against any misunderstanding, I should make it quite clear that close cooperation with the United States in all questions relating to this area is just as necessary and is a matter of course.

In security questions -- especially as regards the questions just mentioned -- the Federal Republic does not have an either-or policy, but rather one of, not only-but also.

"Within the framework of our talks we have had intensive talks on East-West relations. We discussed the need to continue the dialogue with the Eastern bloc countries despite the serious setbacks in the recent past. We intend to work together to continue the CSCE process and we pursue common objectives in the impending resumption of the Madrid review conference.

"We especially agree in condemning the banning of 'Solidarity' in Poland by the trade union bill of 8 October. These oppressive measures, which are also a violation of existing agreements and promises, are, we both believe, a continuing heavy strain on East-West relations.

"We are both agreed that the close cooperation with the United States, above all the import of European-American relations, continue to be of great importance in our every day politics. We are also convinced that despite broad common interests and occasional dissonances that cannot be overlooked, the common relations between the Europeans, but also those between the individual European states and the United States -- and I am thinking here not least of the FRG -- are of the greatest importance.

"As a last item I should like to point out that we are agreed that cooperation in the industrial, technological and cultural areas, which has witnessed a positive development over the years, will continue to play an important role. On behalf of the FRG let me clearly state that I have asked Dr Lenz, the new coordinator for German-French affairs, to undertake special efforts in this direction, together with his French counterpart."

AFP Reports on Talks

[Excerpt] Bonn, Oct 22 (AFP) -- Some differences remained between the two countries regarding France's hope of reducing its trade deficit with West Germany, which could reach 30,000 million francs (4,285 million dollars) this year, reports said.

But on defense matters both leaders announced that French and West German foreign and defense ministers would meet twice annually to discuss mutual security matters.

Mr Mitterrand also announced the creation of a permanent bilateral defense and security committee of senior officials from both governments that, he said, would prepare work for the twice-yearly ministers' meeting.

The committee was planned for under a 1963 French-German treaty designed to bring about a "rapprochement of defense doctrines" but was never activated because of what experts here said were West German, reservations at the time.

Mr Mitterrand today said France and West Germany "must give prior consideration to security problems" relating to West Germany alone and to both countries.

But he specified that nuclear cooperation and transfer of French nuclear technology to West Germany were "out of the question", and that West Germany would not finance French nuclear development.

He added that security questions had focussed essentially on the modernization of French tactical forces and that the financing or trimming of French forces in West Germany had not been raised.

While Paris has also authorized more research into the neutron bomb, both Mr Mitterrand and Mr Kohl ruled out the use of any such French-made weapon on Germany's border with the East. Colonel Jurgen Reichardt, spokesman of the West German Defense Ministry, said that the U.S. nuclear arsenal remained the foundation of "West Germany's security policies". Despite the special relationship with Paris, he added, Bonn would strive to maintain balanced relations with all the allies of North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Mr Kohl, meanwhile, disclosed that Mr Mitterrand would address the West German Bundestag (parliament) next January on the 20th anniversary of the Franco-German peace treaty.

On economic issues, both leaders said priority must be given to the fight against unemployment, which has affected nearly four million people in France and West Germany.

Mr Kohl also reaffirmed his country's determination to support the French franc in the European monetary system.

But Bonn made it clear that there was nothing it could do to reduce France's trade deficit with West Germany.

Economy Minister Otto Lambsdorff said it was a question of industrial competition and that West Germany remained firmly opposed to any protectionist measures.

Mitterrand on Talks

[Text] The 40th Franco-German summit ended this afternoon in Bonn. Chancellor Kohl and President Mitterrand agreed to maintain the dialogue with the East bloc countries while condemning the banning of the Solidarity trade union in Poland.

Problems of defense and security appeared to dominate the Franco-German summit. Much was said about weapons and strategy, and in this sphere the two countries will be cooperating very closely, more closely than at present, without however France's losing the slightest degree of its independence.

In his talks with Helmut Kohl, Francois Mitterrand carefully weighed every word:

[Begin Mitterrand recording] In order to avoid any confusion, I noted that these discussions did not, and could not, deal with any possible association of the FRG in France's nuclear strategy with any transfer whatsoever of French nuclear technology to Germany, or with reaching any agreement on financial assistance from the FRG to the French nuclear force.

All right, you will say, what did the talks deal with? They dealt with what is essential, that is, a reciprocal exchange of information, and how the French force, how our strategy would apply to Germany both on the ground and in the air, how this strategy relates to German security, arising as it does from decisions made by France which are a matter of our national sovereignty. [end recording]

The talks also indicated a palpable rapprochement of the staffs of both countries. Here is Dominique Souchiez on the line from Bonn:

[Souchiez] This is perhaps a tiny step towards a European defense. For the moment, and doubtless for a long time to come, the phrase will not be used. There is no question of associating the Germans in French nuclear strategy: the security of Federal Germany has always been based on American nuclear might, and it continues to be based on that.

Nevertheless, twice a year the ministers of defense and of external relations will meet, and a permanent mixed commission will be entrusted with these questions of security. This means that they will talk together, for example, about the (?Ades) missiles, which are to replace the Pluton missiles in the 1990's, which are deployed on the Federal German border.

A reciprocal exchange of information, they say, but in practice it is quite definitely a question of bringing the military doctrines closer together, with a view of arriving at common defense policies. In order to better stress continuity, Francois Mitterrand pointed out that this aim was featured in every clause of the 1963 Elysee treaty signed by Konrad Adenauer and General de Gaulle.

Mitterrand Departs

LD221616 Hamburg DPA in German 1545 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 22 Oct (DPA) -- The 40th German-French summit ended in Bonn on Friday afternoon. Immediately after a dinner given by him in honor of Chancellor Helmut Kohl at Ernich Castle near Bonn, French President Francois Mitterrand returned to Paris by air. Earlier, the two politicians had once again underlined the importance of German-French friendship. Both Mitterrand and Kohl had emphasized in this connection that the close relationship remained unaffected by the change of governments in the two countries. Change is one of the rules of the game of democracy.

GENSCHER EMPHASIZES ARMS CONTROL, DISARMAMENT

[Text] Bonn, 24 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) has emphasized that arms control and disarmament are "indispensable components" of German foreign and security policy. In addition to the talks underway between the United States and the USSR in Geneva, an arms control forum should be created within the framework of the CSCE, Genscher said to mark the "week of disarmament" which begins worldwide on Sunday. To help build up confidence and secure peace, a working conference, to be held in 1983 in the Federal Republic, is also being prepared. Scientists and experts from all over the world will be invited.

The Federal Government advocates a total ban on chemical weapons. "These weapons should be dismantled on a worldwide basis and thus in Europe, too, through a reliably controllable agreement," said Genscher. Together with the disarmament talks in Geneva and the Vienna talks on troop reductions, there is also an opportunity for making important contributions to stability between East and West and hence to world peace. An arms control forum should cover all of Europe "from the Atlantic to the Urals." The goal is to convene a conference on disarmament in Europe which, in its initial phase, should work out new and militarily significant measures which will build trust. Genscher recalled Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl's (CDU) government statement which underlined the priority security policy goal as being to establish military balance by way of concrete, balanced and verifiable negotiation results at the lowest arms level possible.

LAMBSDORFF, ERTL ADDRESS MUNICH FDP CONGRESS

[Text] Munich, 24 Oct (DPA) -- Economics Minister Count Otto Lambsdorff has strongly supported Hans-Dietrich Genscher's reelection as FDP chairman. Speaking at a special congress of the Bavarian liberals in Munich today, he asked who would vote on 6 March for a party that sends its chairman, under such circumstances as at present, "into the desert." He sharply attacked the Schleswig-Holstein FDP leader and rival candidate, Uwe Ronneburger, for wanting, in the event of his election as FDP federal chairman, to give up the Economics Ministry within the Bonn coalition.

The Social-Democrats' slander campaign, which can be read in the diary of former government spokesman Klaus Boelling, is not only aimed at finishing Genscher politically and morally, but also "at destroying his existence as a citizen," Lambsdorff continued. Genscher had worked for 10 years within the party for the integration of the minority, to such an extent that it had even agitated the majority. "It is this very minority which today is kicking him in the shins," Lambsdorff said.

The Bavarian FDP chairman, Josef Ertl, finds it depressing that the SPD's "campaign" during the past few weeks has not been without effect within the FDP itself. Critics in the FDP must ask themselves whether they are "not being drawn into the slipstream of another party," Ertl said at the congress. Ertl hoped that the special Munich congress could be a "clarification process" within the Bavarian FDP. Only unity could lend the party credibility and a new profile. Controversial issues must be dealt with fairly and honestly "right out in the open and without inner reservations." Attempts to fasten political content onto individual persons obscure the problems.

The Bavarian FDP leader again rejected the "myth" that "sinister machinations" on the part of the liberals had led to the breakup of the coalition with the SPD. By means of "campaigns aimed at clouding the issues and apportioning blame," the SPD is trying to divert attention from the fact that the process of decline in the social-liberal coalition had extended over several years in view of the "already latently existing internal differences."

FDP'S RONNEBURGER ASKS GENSCHER NOT TO RUN

[Excerpts] Flensburg, 23 Oct (DPA) -- Chairman of the Schleswig-Holstein FDP Uwe Ronneburger, has called on federal chairman of the liberals, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, not to run again for his present office at the forthcoming federal party conference in Berlin. Ronneburger, who wants to run for the highest office in the party, said today at the FDP Land party conference in Harrislee, near Flensburg, that Genscher's withdrawal "would have been and would still be seen by the party as honorable." In Ronneburger's opinion this would not constitute any admission of "guilt".

DPA REPORTS BAVARIAN FDP CONGRESS' VOTING RESULTS

[Text] Munich, 24 Oct (DPA) -- Today a special congress of the Bavarian FDP in Munich voted by a majority against the immediate resignation of FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher. After over 5 hours of heated debate, a majority of 254 votes were cast in a secret ballot against motions calling for his resignation; 157 delegates supported the motions.

A majority of 257 delegates rejected demands for the resignation of Bavarian FDP Chairman (Josef Ertl), while 146 voted for his resignation and 11 delegates abstained. There was a majority of 213 votes for a motion censuring the Bavarian FDP Executive for expressing complete confidence in Genscher's policy immediately after the collapse of the SPD-FDP coalition, while 181 voted against the censure motion and 16 abstained. A large majority voted against any further consequences for the Bavarian FDP Executive. A clear majority came out in favor of continuing the new coalition in Bonn.

In contrast to the vote on the issue of Genscher's immediate resignation as FDP chairman, 226 delegates voted against a renewed candidacy by Genscher while 182 delegates voted for Genscher's reelection as FDP chairman in Berlin. In the event that he not be reelected, 304 delegates were in favor of Genscher remaining as foreign minister and vice chancellor, with 83 voting against.

By a vote of 218 to 191, the Bavarian FDP congress censured the party leadership's procedure in the coalition change. The majority criticized the fact that the change took place without previous general elections. Three hundred and fourteen voted for, and 98 against a motion criticizing the failure to have a debate on the issue within the party. There was a very close vote on whether the coalition agreements on cardinal points of legal and environmental policy are at variance with the basic FDP positions, with 199 delegates voting yes and 198 voting no.

The congress recommended that the Bavarian delegates to the FDP national congress in Berlin not reelect Genscher if he stood again for the party chairmanship. The vote on this recommendation was 224 to 181.

More on FDP Vote

LD241620 Hamburg DPA in German 1549 GMT 24 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Munich, 24 Oct (DPA) -- The Bavarian FDP has opposed by a majority vote, Hans-Dietrich Genscher's reelection as party chairman. In a vote which served as a basis for debate at the extraordinary land congress of the FDP in Munich, 54.5 percent of the members voted against Genscher's reelection. Nearly 70 percent believed the criticism of the FDP leadership's style in connection with the switch in Bonn, is justified; 65.2 percent, however, were in favour of the FDP remaining in the new coalition. Fifty seven percent of the nearly 8,300 Bavarian FDP members took part in the written questionnaire.

Genscher Reelection Probable

[Text] Hamburg, 24 Oct (DPA) -- FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher can probably count on a clear majority for his reelection at the FDP national congress in Berlin at the beginning of November. This is suggested by a clear vote of the North Rhine-Westphalian FDP delegates for Genscher. Delegates from North Rhine-Westphalia account for over 25 percent of the votes in Berlin. The mood in other regional FDP associations suggests that Genscher is certain to be reelected. The Bavarian FDP congress, while voting against Genscher's immediate resignation, also voted against his being a candidate for the FDP chairmanship in Berlin.

BRANDT VIEWS POSSIBLE SPD COOPERATION WITH GREENS

[Excerpt] Bonn, 23 Oct (DPA) -- SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has urged his party to be more receptive toward new social movements for peace and environmental protection but, at the same time, has set conditions for working with them. There need not be any conflict between these social currents and the SPD, Brandt said on Saturday in Bonn at a meeting between the SPD Executive and young people. He himself has tried to "listen and have an open mind about what is going on now." But there should be no illusions about the possibilities for immediate cooperation, Brandt added, alluding to the Greens.

Brandt underlined his view that there is an electoral majority to the left of the CDU in the FRG in numerical terms. However, he opposes any ideas that encompass SPD cooperation with the Greens. In principle he is not against such cooperation but takes a very skeptical view of it in present circumstances. An essential condition for cooperation between the SPD and the new social groupings is recognition of the principle of nonviolence and the FRG's attachment to the Western alliance as long as there is no European peace mechanism, and a willingness to compromise, without which democracy cannot function and policy cannot be shaped.

Brandt expressed these views at an SPD forum attended by around 130 young people.

CHEYSSON ON EAST BLOC POLICY, ALLIES' EQUALITY

PM220913 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 Oct 82 p 3

[Unattributed report: "Mr Cheysson: We Do Not Accept That the Organization of the State Should Have Priority Over Human Rights"]

[Text] While condemning Soviet policy, notably as regards human rights, respect for which is "the basis of our foreign policy," Mr Cheysson reaffirmed on Monday 18 October, his determination to pursue cooperation with the USSR and the Eastern bloc countries.

That cooperation, the external relations minister added during a lunch given by the Friends of the French Republic, should be "as close and audacious as possible" provided, he added, that "this does not increase their military potential and does not jeopardize our strategy as a whole."

Stressing that he was speaking in the presence of Soviet Ambassador Chervonenko, Mr Cheysson said: "We reject any system which constrains man's freedom and expression. We do not accept that priority should be given to the organization of the state, parties and structures, whatever their nature, over man's right to express himself in complete freedom."

Mr Cheysson then mentioned "elements which surprise and sometimes worry us in the attitudes and behavior of Eastern bloc neighbors." "How can I fail to mention the present events in Poland which, although they are not surprising -- they could be foreseen back in December -- are nonetheless painful, and how can I fail to mention the occupation of foreign countries, Kampuchea, Afghanistan and other countries," he said.

Mr Cheysson also rejected the notion of a "bloc" within the alliance [presumably Atlantic alliance]. Of course, he said, the United States "is our biggest, most powerful ally. We need it. We welcome its military and defense effort," but, "we do not agree to recognize that it possesses any other superiority of any kind at all.

There is no "leader" the minister said. "We are equal partners who should hold discussions on equal terms. The strategies, not only defense, but also political and economic strategies, which we should implement together toward the Eastern bloc countries should be drawn up together in conditions of complete equality, each country having the opportunity to oppose the decision taken by another."

OUSTING OF ISRAEL FROM UNITED NATIONS OPPOSED

AB221518 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 1400 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Text] The Quai d'Orsay spokesman reiterated on Thursday [words indistinct].

"We are categorically and firmly hostile to any move, undertaking, proposal or measure aimed directly or indirectly at depriving Israel of its membership in the United Nations and its attendant rights.

"There are two fundamental reasons, he explained, for France's position: Our attachment to the principle of UN universality and our desire to see everyone recognize Israel's right to existence. As is stated in the French-Egyptian resolution (on the Middle East crisis), we wish for a mutual and simultaneous recognition of the parties and we encourage any progress toward that direction.

"We are totally committed, French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson said to Israel's Foreign Minister Shamir in New York. Ever since that day he has relentlessly said this to his interlocutors, Africans and Arabs in particular. On each leg of his recent trip to Africa he did not fail to appeal for mutual recognition of the parties at his press conferences."

LE MONDE DESCRIBES MAUROY MEETING WITH PALME

[Alain Debove report: "Mr Mauroy Thinks the Social Democratic Experiment Is a 'Permanent Reference Point'"]

[Text] Stockholm -- [French Premier] Pierre Mauroy arrived in the Swedish capital on Monday 18 October, to greet Mr Olof Palme after the Social Democrats' victory in the parliamentary elections on 19 September. During a private meeting, the two heads of government discussed economic problems and particularly the increase in unemployment. They agreed that only the modernization of the industrial apparatus and a return to reasonable growth would make it possible to eventually absorb that underemployment again.

The Swedes are skeptical about the chances of combating unemployment by reducing the length of the working week or lowering the retirement age. Those measures, it is thought here, in fact favor rationalization and perhaps also the use of robots in production systems.

In Mr Mauroy's view, Sweden is still a reference point for socialism and he almost made his counterpart blush by saying in a press conference: "The administration of this country by the Social Democrats for half a century is a constant reference point for us. I have always thought that what has been achieved in Sweden is the best that has been achieved in the world as regards a social justice and welfare policy."

In the foreign policy sphere the two heads of government noted broad agreement on the Near East, Central America and North-South dialogue. Sweden welcomes the fact that the French Socialist Government has decided to considerably increase public aid to the developing countries to reach the goals set by the United Nations in the next few years.

The only real point of disagreement relates to the Scandinavian plans to create a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe. According to Mr Mauroy those disagreements can be explained by the fact that Sweden has chosen armed neutrality to ensure its national defense and France has chosen deterrence and membership in the Atlantic alliance. However, the two countries hope that a conference on disarmament in Europe can be rapidly convened to reduce the arms buildup.

In addition, the two governments expressed their intention of encouraging bilateral trade which has always, or almost always, been in the Scandinavians' favor.

POSTPONEMENT OF MITTERRAND MOROCCO VISIT VIEWED

[Roland Delcour dispatch: "Mr Mitterrand Postpones Visit to Rabat"]

[Text] Rabat -- The fact that Mr Mitterrand's visit to Morocco, scheduled for 28 to 30 October, has been postponed until a later unspecified date is interpreted here as a sign of a "redeployment of Moroccan diplomatic action" which, in other words, has changed the order of its priorities.

Following the Casablanca disturbances in June 1981, and the arrest the following August of Mr Abderrahim Bouabid, secretary general of the opposition Socialist Union of Popular Forces, the Moroccan Government had, at the beginning of this year, seemed to give priority to normalizing relations with France. That normalization now seems to have been achieved: The king's visit to Paris in early 1982 followed by the visit to Rabat by Economy and Finance Minister Jacques Delors and Education Minister Alain Savary gave Morocco the assurance that Franco-Moroccan relations were again "cruising along" to cite the expression used by an editorialist in the AL MAGHRIB newspaper — the organ of the National Assembly of Independents.

In these circumstances, according to informed circles, it could seem less urgent to receive the French president, while at the same time the success of the Fes Arab summit, secured with U.S. help, was placing Moroccan diplomatic action in the Near East at the forefront again in agreement and close cooperation with Washington.

The persistence with which the king wanted to strike while iron was hot and go to Washington, New York and finally London, at the head of the seven-man committee which has been given the job of explaining the Arab peace plan adopted in Fes to Mr Reagan, at the United Nations and then to Mrs Thatcher, reveals that reversal of priorities.

Morocco is officially presenting things in a more neutral way, invoking the timetable excuse: The king will meet with Mr Reagan on 22 October and will not visit the United Nations before 28 or 29 October so that his visit to London, originally scheduled for 26 and then 27 October will be postponed until 1 November. In those circumstances it became impossible to maintain Mr Mitterrand's visit on the planned date.

Aside from this shift in the order of priorites, many Moroccans will recall that Mrs Bourequat's mysterious disappearance [reference to disappearance in Paris of Moroccon oppositionist] showed clearly that the "anti-Moroccan" lobby in Paris, which is still being discussed here, was still capable of exploiting the distrust of the Moroccan regime or even latest hostility toward it existing for instance in the PS.

In regard to Mr Mitterrand's visit to Morocco, and in view of the importance which the two countries attach to maintaining their good relations, it is to be hoped that a date will soon be fixed for the French head of state's visit.

RELEASED CUBA POET VALLADARES ARRIVES 22 OCT

[Text] Paris, Oct 22 (AFP) -- Cuban poet Armando Valladares, 45, released from a Cuban prison yesterday after 22 years following an appeal from French President Francois Mitterrand, arrived here today from Havana via Madrid.

He was welcomed by his wife and by French presidential counsellor Regis Debray, a former collaborator of the late guerrilla fighter Che Guevara.

COMMITTEE URGES MITTERRAND TO SAVE SHCHARANSKIY

[Text] The committee for solidarity with Jews in the USSR has issued an appeal to President Mitterrand asking him to do his utmost to save Anatoliy Shcharanskiy just as he saved the Cuban poet Valladares.

The latest news on the Soviet dissident interned in a camp in the Urals is very alarming. He has been on a hunger strike since 23 September to protest the conditions in which he is being held prisoner and it would appear thathe is dying.

TURMOIL, PROTESTS OVER CANCELLED DEFENSE ORDERS

[Text] A row is brewing following the cancellation of Fr 17 billion of military funds from the 1982 budget. A certain number of orders for equipment will not be placed, and among the orders scrapped are those for 25 Mirage-2000 aircraft, 47 AMX-10 tanks, 26 55-MM cannons, and several reconnaissance and antisubmarine aircraft.

The opposition deputies are protesting loudly, and the majority deputies are not satisfied with this cancellation which was made without their being consulted.

Defense Minister Charles Hernu said today that he will provide details in the National Assembly on 12 November. The Socialist deputies of the Defense Commission have demanded a meeting with Pierre Mauroy next week.

Hernu Issues Statement

LD231434 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 23 Oct 82

[Text] Defense Minister Charles Hernu has issued a clarifying statement. The minister of defense, in connection with his budget and in particular the cancellation of nearly Fr 13 million worth of program authorizations, indicates that contrary to what has been said, nothing has been abandoned in the modernization of the French Armed Forces. Charles Hernu pointed out that certain orders have simply been transferred from one year to the next, that the cancellation of certain items represents less than 6 percent of the Defense Ministry equipment budget, and that despite these movements, its budget will increase by more than 10 percent.

I remind you that Socialist deputies, worried at these budgetary modifications, have asked the government to explain itself on this question. Furthermore, they have demanded a meeting with the premier next Wednesday.

MITTERRAND THWARTED BY PS ON AMNESTY BILL

NC221722 Paris AFP in English 1606 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 22 (AFP) -- French President Francois Mitterrand has been thwarted by his own Socialist Party in an attempt to grant rehabilitation to eight surviving generals who attempted to seize power from France in Algeria in April 1964.

Last night's vote was Mr Mitterrand's most decisive defeat by Socialist deputies in the National Assembly since the left came to power a year-and-a-half ago.

It was an indication of the depth of bitterness lingering in France over the Algerian war that ended 20 years ago.

The bill, drawn up by the Cabinet at Mr Mitterrand's request, would have granted surviving putschists total amnesty and reinsertion in their former military units for purposes of restoring benefits and pensions. Criminal amnesty had already been granted in recent years.

But, during a heated debate on the bill that ran late into the night, the Socialists, attacked by the Communists, made wholesale changes, including two amendments excluding the eight surviving generals, who include Edmond Jouhaud, 77, and Raoul Salan, 85.

The Communists, declaring that "coups d'etats are not forgotten," and the traditional Gaullists led by Michel Debre and Jean Foyer, respectively prime minister and justice minister at the time of the war, had made it clear they would oppose rehabilitation for the putschists.

The law as finally passed, by an overwhelming vote of 413-1 with two abstentions, granted amnesty to a dozen French officers who, taken prisoner by the Vietnamese during the French-Indochinese war, joined Vietnamese ranks.

PCF'S JUQUIN COMMENTS ON TRADE UNIONS, POLAND

PM221001 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 16 Oct 82 p 4

[Unattributed Report: "The Socialist System Needs Real Trade Unionism"]

[Text] PCF Politburo member Pierre Juquin yesterday devoted his weekly report on Europe 1 to the situation in Poland.

First he reaffirmed that it is up to the "Poles and them alone" to "solve the crisis," but he expressed the view that "this crisis poses universal questions, particularly that of trade union rights," because "no society can progress in our time without independent trade unions."

In support of that assertion Pierre Juquin mentioned the situation in Turkey and the harmful trade union practices which are in force in the FRG and the United States.

These attacks on trade union rights, he said, are natural under capitalism. Then he stated that "socialism is the only system which can allow trade union rights to develop fully." "At the same time," he continued, "true trade unionism is life insurance for a Socialist society.... All the countries which are building socialism are faced with that key question."

P. Juquin then "deplored the fact that years of aberrant policy should have placed the Polish Communists in a situation in which the least terrible move was to proclaim martial law." "It is all too true," he added, "that their mistakes have harmed all those who are struggling for socialism in the world."

He then reiterated the PCF's desire to "prevent the crisis from turning into a tragedy." He stated that "Poland will only escape the trap by accepting dialogue, detente and democracy at the same time as work." It will be impossible to build a future, he stated, "without all the workers, and particularly without the millions of people who have chosen Solidarity."

Finally he expressed the hope that "the trade unionists who are still interned might be able to spend Christmas at home" and that the "implementation of the new law might enable the workers to form living trade unions as laid down in the Gdansk agreements."

ARIANE WILL NOT BE LAUNCHED UNTIL APRIL

[Text] Paris, Oct 22 (AFP) -- The next launching of the European Ariane rocket will not take place before the second half of April 1983, the French National Space Studies Center (CNES) and the European Space Agency (ESA) said today in a joint communique.

The rocket will be used to put two satellites into orbit -- a European ECS-1 telecommunications satellite and a ham radio operator AMSAT satellite.

The last Ariane launch, on September 10, was a failure.

The new launch time was decided after a meeting by an enquiry commission set up to probe the failure of Ariane-5. According to its findings this failure was due to a fault in the rocket's [word indistinct] turbine pump but experts were unable to say for sure what caused it.

The commission has recommended dismantling all turbine pumps due to be used in future launches and applying certain measures designed to improve the performance of the pump's gear system.

In order to satisfy Ariane's customers, the ESA and the CNES said that dismantling operations would be speeded up to "reduce repercussions" on the launch calendar.

The sixth version of the Ariane rocket will start undergoing tests in January and should be ready for launch by the second fortnight in April. The communique said no more precise date could be fixed for the time being.

Had the Ariane-5 launch in September been successful, the next launch should have taken place on November 11. It was to have placed an ESA Exosat satellite into orbit. This will now have to wait until the same time next year.

REAGAN STILL UNCONVINCING ON SOVIET GRAIN SALES

[Editorial: "Abundance of Foreign Wheat for Moscow"]

[Text] "I don't care what the Americans think of us as long as they feed us." That remark, which a cartoonist in the CHICAGO SUN TIMES recently placed in the mouth of a Russian soldier on guard in Afghanistan, is more appropriate than ever after Mr Reagan's announcement on Friday 15 October that the United States is authorizing the USSR to buy up to 23 million tons of grain during the present U.S. fiscal year (which ends in September 1983).

The volume, the U.S. president said, will be safe from embargo "unless there are extreme circumstances." The only condition is that the purchases should be decided upon in November and the deliveries made within a period of 180 days. Mr Reagan did not specify what he meant by "extreme circumstances," and he admitted that he could not guarantee that Soviet purchases will reach that level.

According to U.S. Agriculture Secretary Block, the "presidential decision has nothing to do with the elections (Congressional elections in November), it has everything to do with the harvest." Of course, nobody in the United States or in Europe will believe the first statement. But it is true that the midwest farmers, backed by their elected representatives, had recently become more and more agitated due to a record harvest leading to enormous surpluses and hence to falling prices and numerous bankruptcies. U.S. agricultural income in 1982, taking inflation into account, is the lowest it has been for 50 years.

Mr Reagan stressed once again, for the benefit of his European allies, that the grain sales have nothing to do with the purchase of gas: "We are making the Soviets pay for the food they buy from us. We are not giving them any subsidy or any Western currency," he said.

That argument is no more convincing now than it was before. The Soviet leaders probably need currency, and the gas contract ultimately renders them a considerable service in that respect, but their population's supply difficulties pose them a much more acute problem -- an immediate problem -- whose "crucial political importance" was stressed by Mr Brezhnev this year. And it is that problem which Mr Reagan is solving for them.

He is even solving it so well that the same leaders, whose grain deficit will, according to some estimates, pass the 45 million ton mark this year, can afford to pick and choose among the offers made by other supplies. [Agriculture Minister Edith] Cresson has ended a visit to Moscow, apparently without obtaining a firm promise on the sale of 3 million tons of French grain per year as she hoped. Moscow will apparently not go above 1.5 million tons although France's trade deficit with the USSR is likely to treble this year.

As can be seen, it is not so easy to "extract currency" from the Kremlin and the latter is spoiled with choices in the face of "capitalists" falling over each other at its gates to make good the deficiencies of its "Socialist" agriculture.

AL-JUMAYYIL WANTS PEACEKEEPING FORCES EXTENDED

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 23 -- Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil named as his priority objective clearing his country of all foreign forces before the end of the year in an interview carried in today's edition of the big Rome daily, IL MESSAGGERO, in which he also confirmed his request for strengthening the United States, French and Italian contingents in the peacekeeping force in Beirut and expanding the force's role.

In connection with his requests to the three nations to beef up their troops' strength in the Lebanese capital, the president said, "Aside from the campaign of slander, the Lebanese Army has given a good show of itself, shown itself capable. But now it is not sufficient to guarantee order in the entire country! There is the need for someone to help us so that new brigades are not [as received] set up and trained. I believe that we must immediately apply a military draft in Lebanon" he added.

Al-Jumayyil said that before the multilateral force can be strengthened, it must operate more incisively and extend its role throughout the country, including Christian East Beirut, if necessary.

"The American Marines, for exmaple, should have been deployed in (Baabda) (East Beirut) around the Presidential Palace but this has not been possible yet because the Israelis have refused to withdraw."

Speaking about his talk here with the Italian president, Al-Jumayyil described it as "a meeting between friends which strengthened the ties of friendship which already existed between our two countries." He added that during his visit to Italy, he had attained the goals he had set for himself.

Colombo Agrees

[Text] Beirut, October 23 -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo confirmed that Italy is in favor of extending the multinational peacekeeping force's mandate in Beirut to other parts of Lebanon. The statement was made in an interview with the Lebanese daily AN NAHAR Thursday. The request was made by Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil who wound up his official visit to Italy on Thursday.

Colombo told the interviewer that "in principle, we agree to expanding the mission of the multinational force on the condition that the other two participating countries (the United States and France) also agree."

Al-Jumayyil Departs

[Text] (ANSA) - Rome October 22 - Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil flew home to Beirut today after a two-day visit to the Italian capital.

His talks in Rome with chief-of-state Sandro Pertini, Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini, Foreign Affairs Minister Emilio Colombo and Pope John Paul II dealt with problems connected with Lebanon's reconstruction effort.

Press on Visit

[Text] (ANSA) - Rome, October 22 -- Leading Italian dailies highlighted Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil's request for "soldiers and arms" and his unstated invitation to the Pope to visit Beirut in their coverage today of the "young and suave" Lebanese leaders' visit to Rome.

Arriving from Paris, Al-Jumayyil conferred here Thursday with Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, chief-of-state Sandro Pertini, Premier Giovanni Spadolini and had an audience with Pope John Paul II at the Vatican.

"Soldiers and arms is what Al-Jumayyil asked for in his talks with Italian leaders," Rome's IL TEMPO daily reported. The Lebanese president basically asked Rome authorities to send more troops to bolster the Italian contingent of the multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut. The impression he made on Italian leaders, the daily added, was that of "a skillful and cautious man who has made a careful assessment of his country's delicate situation."

Italy's readiness to grant his request and boost its role in the peacekeeping force was reported on the front page of Rome's LA REPUBBLICA daily. "(Italy) laid only one condition -- that a decision (to expand the role and size of the peacekeeping force) be made jointly with the other partners to the force, France and the United States," LA REPUBBLICA said. "In Rome too, therefore, Al-Jumayyil got what he was after when he set out on his 'thanks-giving' trip," which wound up in Italy after a series of talks in Washington with U.S. President Ronald Reagan and in Paris with French President Francois Mitterrand, the daily concluded.

The conservative IL GIORNALE daily of Milan described Al-Jumayyil as "young and classy" who, with a black tie in mourning for his slain brother Bashir, displayed a mixture of "shyness and determination" in pursuing his mission.

Al-Jumayyil's message in Rome, the Christian Democratic Party newspaper IL POPOLO said, was the same as in the United States and France: "The Beirut government needs an army of at least 50,000 to 60,000 men to defend Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity. At present, it has no more than 15,000 men."

As for the aid Lebanon will need to re-build the war-shattered nation, Rome's PAESE SERA reported today that the Italian Government "committed itself... mainly in the fields of electricity, telecommunications and transportation."

Turin's LA STAMPA daily dwelt on the possibility of Pope John Paul II making a visit to Lebanon, picking up on an Israeli press report that the church leader will be going to Beirut for Christmas. The report, LA STAMPA noted, however, has not been confirmed by the Vatican.

The "visible emotion" on Al-Jumayyil's face when he left the Vatican after meeting with the pope was described by the Italian Communist Party newspaper, L'UNITA: When asked by a reporter if he had invited the pope to visit Lebanon, L'UNITA' said, his reply, "the pope is at home in our country, he needs no invitation," was implicitly affirmative. His only other reference to the invitation was the answer he gave reporters at the airport as soon as he arrived, "I'll discuss it (the invitation) with the pope."

Al-Jumayyil's statements apart, the fact is that no announcement came yesterday on the pope's plans to make the visit, either to Beirut or to the whole area of the Holy Land, Rome's IL MESSAGGERO said. The daily wondered whether the Vatican's reluctance stemmed from "a cautious stance towards the often intransigent Christian Maronites" or a decision "to wait for the Israelis to leave and see Lebanon regain its full independence."

Milan's IL GIORNO daily measured the full hour the pope granted to Al-Jumayyil against the twenty minutes he gave Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yasir 'Arafat in mid-September. The pope, the daily said, showed his approval of Al-Jumayyil's style as "a president who stands above factions". According to IL GIORNO, the church leader may very well make a trip to Beirut at Christmas and visit the Palestinian camps there.

EGYPT'S 'ALI ARRIVES IN ROME, MAKES STATEMENT

[Text] Rome, 21 Oct (MENA) -- Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali arrived in Rome from Geneva this evening. Upon arriving in Rome, Kamal Hasan 'Ali made a statement in which he explained that his visit to the Italian capital is in response to an invitation from Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo to attend the meeting of the higher joint Egyptian-Italian committee for cooperation between the two countries. He said that this visit is also within a more general and comprehensive framework related to the dialogue between the two countries -- a dialogue which has acquired new dimensions since President Muhammad Husni Mubarak's last visit to Rome.

Kamal Hasan 'Ali added that his visit also falls within the context of the policy of constant coordination and consultation between Egypt and Italy on the basis of the increasing interest we always give to Italy's important role in both the Middle East and the Mediterranean Basin as well as its being a link between Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

Kamal Hasan 'Ali pointed out in his statement that he will hold talks with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo on the latest developments in the Middle East, the new changes that have occurred in this respect as well as the strengthening of the bilateral relations between the two countries in the various fields. He said: On this occasion, I would like to address a greeting of appreciation and respect to His Excellency Italian President Alessandro Pertini and Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini, whom we will have the pleasure of receiving in Cairo next month.

He added: I am delighted to come to the immortal city of Rome for the second time in 1982. My first visit was last January during President Husni Mubarak's official visit to Italy.

He said that this visit will confirm the strong cultural and historical ties that have always bound the Egyptian and Italian peoples throughout the ages as well as the strong relations between our two countries. He also lauded the pioneering role Italy is playing with regard to the Middle East issue.

[Text] Rome, 22 Oct (MENA) -- Political talks began in Rome today between Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali and Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

The talks dealt with the situation in the Middle East in light of the recent developments, Italy's distinguished role in Lebanon and in the area in general, and ways of bolstering bilateral relations in various fields.

Following the talks, the joint higher Egyptian-Italian committee held a meeting attended by a large number of experts and specialists in economic and technical cooperation from both countries. The committee will hold another meeting tomorrow. 'Ali and Colombo will meet again to agree on specific decisions regarding bilateral cooperation.

Details of Talks

[Text] (ANSA) - Rome, October 22 -- Egypt's relations with Italy were described as "a cardinal point" of Cairo government foreign policy by Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali, who conferred here today with the Italian diplomatic chief, Emilio Colombo, before the opening of two days of meetings of the Italo-Egyptian mixed commission on economic cooperation.

Hasan 'Ali, who arrived in Rome last night to co-chair the commission sessions, held an unscheduled meeting in the morning with Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil arranged through Colombo's offices shortly before Al-Jumayyil was slated to have returned to Beirut at the end of a twenty-four-hour stay in Rome. The Italian foreign minister commented that this encounter will lend "wideranging political significance" to the first meeting of the mixed commission, intended to relaunch Italo-Egyptian economic and commerical relations.

The Egyptian diplomatic chief, speaking of his country's ties to Italy, said that Egypt recognized Italy's "leading and constructive" role in the European Community and in the Mediterranean. Referring to precise Rome government initiatives, Hasan 'Ali said that Italian participation in the multilateral peacekeeping forces in the Sinai and in Lebanon "represents" a guarantee for stability in the Middle East with positive repercussions also on European security."

During his talk with Colombo, Hasan 'Ali provided the foreign minister with a detailed rundown of the Egyptian position on Middle East issues after referring to Egypt's "sincere good will." [Words indistinct] continuing relations with Israel, the minister declared that episodes such as Israel's unilateral annexation of the Golan territory, the declaration of Jerusalem as the capital of the Jewish state, along with the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, have left "[word indistinct] impression on the people of Egypt" and indistinct] degree of chill toward the Government of Israel." [Passage indistinct]

Relations With Israel

[Text] Rome, Oct 22 (AFP) -- Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali today said public resentment in Egypt over the actions of the Israeli Government had strained relations between the two countries. Mr 'Ali, in a meeting with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, said the freeze in relations was in response to Israel's 1981 attack on the Iraqi nuclear reactor, the annexation of East Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, and the invasion of Lebanon.

He said Egypt had "shown all the goodwill possible" toward the government of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Mr 'Ali also met here today with Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil. It was the first official diplomatic contact between two countries since 1979 when Egypt was ousted from the Arab League for its involvement in the Camp David peace process.

In a 20-minute session shortly before Mr al-Jummayyil left Italy to return to Beirut, Mr 'Ali said Egypt was prepared to participate in efforts to restore peace to Lebanon.

A communique from the Italian Foreign Ministry said the encounter had been arranged through the good offices of Mr Colombo.

Mr 'Ali, who is expected to remain in Italy until Sunday, is scheduled to meet Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini and President Sandro Pertini.

Joint Communique Issued

NC231722 Cairo MENA in English 1655 GMT 23 Oct 82

[Text] Rome, Oct 23 (MENA) -- Egypt and Italy today called for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon the presence of which is not approved by the Lebanese Government.

In a joint communique, the two countries said that the resumption of the Palestinian autonomy negotiations in the future is contingent on Israel's pull-out from Lebanon, and the expansion of the peace process so as to include other parties.

The communique contained the outcome of the joint Egyptian-Italian committee which convened here under Egyptian Deputy-Premier and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali and Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

The Egyptian and Italian foreign ministers exchanged views on the main world issues, notably those pertaining to the Mediterranean region and the latest Mideast developments, the communique said. It stated that the two sides' viewpoints were identical on a large number of issues that were discussed. The two sides also expressed the wish of continuing their cooperation and friendly consultations in the future. The communique characterised contacts between Egypt and Italy as a key factor in realising peace and stability in the Mediterranean Basin region.

The two sides paid special attention to the Lebanon issue, the communique said. It stated in this connection, that they both condemned the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in June, and underlined the need for the pull-out of all foreign troops whose presence is not (not) approved by the Lebanese Government.

The Egyptian minister expressed deep appreciation for the active and positive role played by Italy in the search for a just and durable Mideast peace, particularly through its participation in the Sinai multi-national peace keeping force and observers (MFO) and its contribution to the multi-national peace-making force in Lebanon, the communique said.

During the talks, the Egyptian deputy-premier and foreign minister also expounded in detail his government's views and assessments of the latest Mideast developments, specially as regards the Reagan peace plan and the Fes Arab summit conference results, the communique added. The Italian foreign minister expressed deep appreciation for the clear-cut analysis of the Mideast issue made by the Egyptian ranking official, emphasising Italy's undertaking to bring about a positive development in the region through its close relations with all countries in the region and its constant consultations with its EEC partners.

The Italian side reviewed during the talks, the intensive contacts undertake by Foreign Minister Colombo in connection with the Mideast issue, the communique said.

The significance Italy attaches to the EEC declaration regarding the Mideast, issued on June 19, 1982 and Italy's positive assessment of the Reagan peace plan were also underlined in the joint communique. The Italian side pointed out the new encouraging elements discussed at the Fes summit in connection with Lebanon.

In this regard, the Italian minister briefed the Egyptian deputy-premier and foreign minister on the high-level contacts that took place between Italy and Lebanon, emphasising his country's undertaking to provide Lebanon with means of overcoming its difficulties, the communique said.

About Egyptian-Italian relations, the communique stated that the Italian minister confirmed his country's commitment to dealing with problems of joint cooperation within the framework of the existing close and friendly political ties binding the two countries.

PCI EXPELS PUBLISHER ON EVE OF ZAGLADIN TALKS

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 25 -- The Italian Communist Party announced Sunday the expulsion of Roberto Napoleone, publisher of the newly-formed periodical INTERSTAMPA which offers a forum to pro-Soviet Italian Communists who do not follow the policies of Italian Communist Party (PCI) Secretary Enrico Berlinguer. The announcement was made in the PCI daily L'UNITA' Sunday edition and charged that Napoleone "wanted to foment a press campaign" against the PCI.

The time chosen to expel the publisher has fueled speculation among Italian political observers. The announcement in L'UNITA' made no mention of other authoritive PCI members who write for INTERSTAMPA such as historian of religions Ambrogio Donini and philosopher Ludovico Geymonat and came on the eve of today's meeting between Berlinguer and Soviet Communist Party official and Foreign Affairs Deputy Chief Vadim Zagladin.

Observers have pointed out two specific political implications of the move: the party considers the contributors to INTERSTAMPA not lost causes and therefore not heretics; and at the same time the party is sending a specific warning to the Soviet Communist Party should the Zagladin visit be directed at a change of course by the PCI.

INTERSTAMPA was created in February as a "periodical for documents and information on peace" and followed the PCI's harsh condemnation of the Soviet Union after the military crackdown in Poland in December. The periodical started off with eight thousand subscriptions and its other contributors included the late Communist veteran Paolo Robotti, who had lived in the Soviet Union through the Stalinist purges, and Senator Nino Pasti, former deputy supreme commander of NATO for nuclear affairs and a major figure in the pro-Soviet "movement for peace." The periodical also intended to help create "Leninist centers" throughout Italy to stimulate the study of Marxism-Leninism.

INTERSTAMPA was immediately criticized by the PCI. In July, L'UNITA' carried an editorial which warned that the periodical's goal was the creation of "support organizations" in conflict with the PCI.

In September, Napoleone was quoted in an interview with the Milan daily IL GIORNO as saying that he had received from Paolo Robotti, who had died the previous month, documents which proved the "specific responsibility" of several Italian Communist officials for the death of 99 people killed in the Soviet Union in the Stalinist period. The PCI denied the charges and Napoleone said he had never made the statement. A few weeks later, Napoleone reiterated the original statement in an interview with the Rome daily IL MESSAGGERO, hence the PCI's decision to expel him from the party.

RED BRIGADES MURDER GUARDS IN REVENGE FOR 'SPY'

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome October 22 -- The Red Brigades' ruthless slaying of two bank guards during a holdup in Turin Thursday left a stunned Italy wondering today what the terrorist organization was up to next. Five assailants entered the bank, made the guards and customers lie face down on the floor, forced the cashier to empty the safe and, before fleeing, shot the two guards dead. They left a document on the scene of the crime saying that this was the Red Brigades' revenge against Natalia Ligas, recently arrested in Turin as one of Italy's most wanted terrorist suspects.

According to the written tirade against the woman, Ligas was a police spy who had infiltrated Red Brigades ranks and was responsible for the arrest of many guerrillas. She allegedly got herself "arrested" on purpose, to flee the death warrant the organization had issued against her.

The revelation took most of the press by surprise. Milan's IL CORRIERE DELLA SERA, for example, suggested that the action indicated a deep split in the Red Brigades organization. "The terrorist Natalia Ligas, captured last week at a Turin train station, suspected of no less than eight murders, is no longer 'Comrade Ligas'...now she's 'a beast' and a 'police spy'" IL CORRIERE noted in its account of the Red Brigades "explanation" for yesterday's assault. IL CORRIERE remembered that when Ligas appeared at the trial for the 1978 kidnap and slaying of Aldo Moro she refused to enter the same courtroom "cage" with the terrorists who had turned state's evidence. That move, and yesterday's assault, the Milan daily concluded, show that the Red Brigades have not gotten over the deep splits that have divided their ranks.

Rome's IL MESSAGGERO, admittedly bewildered, could not figure the "why" of "the ruthless, absurd execution" of the two guards and said the document left on the scene was "hard to figure out, and especially hard to believe." "Every limit was broken yesterday," the Communist Party mouthpiece L'UNITA decried. "No adjective to describe the barbarous massacre of the two poor patrolmen is adequate." The Nazi SS was said to be 'perhaps' the only other organization in history capable of that kind of "gratuitous ferocity," [quotation marks as recorded] the daily added.

The assassins, Turin's LA STAMPA daily said, unmasked themselves as "death emigrants in the violated city" of Turin, whose "only surety is a growingly tighter solitude with their demented and troubled dreams." "Winter is back, the season of crisis is back and the Red Brigades are back," Rome's IL TEMPO daily announced bitterly, adding that "they are back in Turin, the industrial giant, the city-factory." "And they are back killing," the paper said, "because that's the language they speak, that's their profession."

PAESE SERA of Rome reported that Natalia Ligas will be questioned in a secret place by Turin's investigation judges today. "If she is really an 'infiltrate,' the paper indicated, "she may be able to supply precious tips for further investigations." The same daily recalled that Ligas is due to appear at the Moro trial again on Monday and indicated that there may be some big surprise in store. "Once her diguise has been lifted," PAESE SERA said, "Natalia Ligas may decide to 'empty the sack' and her revelations could bring about a sensational turn in the proceedings."

[Excerpts] [unidentified correspondent] Lebanon radio said this morning that President Amin al-Jumayyil will ask Spain, Greece, Britain and Morocco to send troops to strengthen the multinational peace-keeping force there. Al-Jumayyil believes that he needs at least 30,000 foreign troops.

[Announcer] With regard to the report from our Tel Aviv correspondent on the Lebanese Government's request to the Spanish Government for troops to be sent to Lebanon as part of the peace-keeping force, the Diplomatic Information Office of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has said that no such request has yet been made, although it says that such a request would be studied with the utmost interest if it were made.

BASQUE AREA TENSE FOLLOWING BOMBINGS, ARREST

[Text] San Sebastian, northwest Spain, Oct 23 (AFP) -- Tension continued to grip Spain's troubled Basque region today after overnight bomb blasts at three banks, five days before the general election. There were no casualties.

The blasts were reported by police at Vergara and Mondragon. The Basque separatist organisation ETA-Military began a campaign last June against banks which refused to pay a "revolutionary tax."

The blasts came after the wife of the suspected head of ETA-Military was arrested yesterday in Guipuzcoa Province, near the French border, according to reliable sources. Ana Maria Abrisketa was taken to police headquarters in Madrid, where she would be charged under the anti-terrorist law, the sources said. Her husband, Jesus Abrisketa Korta, was arrested recently in southwest France. No details were given on the reason for Mrs Abrisketa's arrest.

LEFTWING COALITION VOWS TO WIN ELECTIONS

PA250235 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2237 GMT 24 Oct 82

[Text] San Sebastian (Spain), 24 Oct (EFE) -- During an electoral rally of the extreme leftwing United People (Herri Batasuna -- HP) nationalist coalition, a group of hooded men posted the ETA initials and a poster of the stand which read: "Organized, we will win."

The electoral rally, at which several coalition candidates spoke, was held in the Andeta bicycle drome in San Sebastian, filled with people who on several occasions chanted slogans supporting Basque Fatherland and Liberty (ETA) and amnesty and opposing the Lemoniz nuclear plant and the state security forces. HP leaders reiterated their "democratic breakaway" position and harshly criticized the rest of the political organizations.

A few hours earlier Xavier Arzullus, president of the Basque Nationalist Party -- the leading political force in the Basque region -- had attacked the HP at a party meeting in the same location. Arzullus had said: "We do not understand those who, shouting 'long live the ETA' and favoring armed struggle without condemning bloodshed, refuse to engage in the civilized politics for which they are participating in elections."

FELIPE GONZALEZ CALLS SANTIAGO CARRILLO 'DUMB'

PM221301 Madrid El PAIS in Spanish 15 Oct 82 p 13

[Bonifacio de la Cuadra report: "Harsh Attack by Felipe Gonzalez on Santiago Carrillo in Industrial Area of Asturias and Leon"]

[Excerpt] Leon -- "When Santiago Carrillo asserts that I am no socialist, he is saying what he was saying 40 years ago about his own father," Felipe Gonzalez stated yesterday in one of his few electoral attacks on the Communist leader, precisely at the gateway to one of the few Spanish areas in which the PCE could "bite away" voters from the Socialists: the industrial areas of Asturias and Leon.

At a press conference en route to the rallies at the Carlos Tartiere Stadium in Oviedo and the Leon Sports Pavilion, the Socialist leader denounced Carrillo's intention of helping the right to prevent the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] achieving a majority, and described this attitude as "definitive and as defining" the Communist role in this election. Felipe Gonzalez referred to Carrillo's accusation against the PSOE, which was based on a document presented as confidential but of which, however 600 copies have been published. The Socialist leader linked the manipulation concerning this document -- to which the PCE secretary general has attributed a PSOE stance especially hostile to the Communists -- to ignorance or malice on the part of that "little bagful of nastiness," an expression with which he described Santiago Carrillo, whom he excused on the grounds that in the school where he learned democracy perhaps he was not taught the electoral techniques used in the above-mentioned document, which considers that both the center parties and the PCE, in view of their proximity to the two sides of the political area occupied by the PSOE, are the Socialists' electoral opponents.

The use of this document in a distorted manner by Santiago Carrillo as a pretext for attacking the PSOE earned the emphatic condemnation of Felipe Gonzalez, who accused him of being "not only a malicious but also a dumb political leader," incapable of reading a document of the above-mentioned characteristics. When expressing these criticisms of Carrillo, Felipe Gonzalez announced that he was making an exception, since he usually prefers not to concern himself with him during the election campaign.

As regards a possible coalition of all the center right forces to counter the majority minority which the PSOE will probably secure, Felipe Gonzales pointed out that the idea of this coalition is one which Manuel Fraga is advocating, but not other leaders of that political area such as Landelino Lavilla and Adolfo Suarez. He asserted that the aim of some of the traps which are being set for Landelino Lavilla during his election campaign is precisely to strengthen that rightist coalition, whose sole political purpose is to oppose the Socialist triumph.

PALME DISCUSSES TOUGHER STANCE ON SUB VIOLATIONS

LD221344 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Press conference by Prime Minister Olof Palme in Stockholm on 22 October with reporters (Staffan Ekendahl) and (Thomas Hempel) — recorded]

[Text] [Palme] Regulations for the investigation of violations by submarines will be examined by a commission for adoption. We have already pointed out that the Swedish Government has the option of ordering the military to sink a foreign submarine in Swedish waters. Whoever is considering a violation of Swedish territory must take into account that the government will in the future use this option.

It has been said in various quarters, above all in our own country, that what has happened has reduced the credibility of the Swedish policy of neutrality. I am convinced that this is not the case.

[Reporter] Doesn't it matter then how many submarines come into Swedish waters? Is the Swedish policy of neutrality not harmed?

[Palme] What I have now said means a toughening of [word indistinct] reminder, for purposes of prevention, that the government has the possibility of intervening and ordering the military to sink a foreign submarine in Swedish waters. (?There are) greater possibilities to do that than to expel a submarine or force it to surface.

[Reporter] But if we cannot prevent submarines from coming here, must not the Swedish policy of neutrality still be questioned?

[Palme] Not at all. This is a total misunderstanding of the content of a policy of neutrality. What can be expected from us is that we have the will and ability to react as well as possible against these types of actions. But it is a misunderstanding to believe that the policy of neutrality means that one should be able to prevent all violations of Swedish territory. To be able to manage that we would have to turn our country into a fortress.

[Reporter] But there are those who lately have questioned our policy of neutrality for this reason in particular. Is this not of any importance?

[Palme] No, because [words indistinct]. (?I) think it is [word indistinct] regrettable that it is chiefly in Sweden that this happens. And this indicates [words indistinct], should I say, a lack of national self-esteem, which I think is regrettable. [Words indistinct] merely because we have not been able to force this submarine to surface when no other country has succeeded in doing so, and then to say, look, now our policy of neutrality has been called into question.

[Reporter] Olof Palme, can one in fact make the superpowers believe that you are serious about sinking a foreign submarine in Swedish waters in peacetime?

[Palme] Yes, we shall do that if we think it necessary. This announcement that much tougher measures may be considered is important to those who are considering such violations.

LD221120 Stockholm International Service in English 1100 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Text] Sweden is to adopt a tougher attitude now to violations of Swedish territory. The Swedish Government is prepared in future to give the Armed Forces orders to sink foreign submarines in Swedish waters. At a press conference in Stockholm today, Friday, Swedish Prime Minister Mr Olof Palme said that he wished to give foreign powers this reminder as a precautionary measure.

The government also disclosed the directives to the parliamentary commission that is to review the submarine incidents and draw conclusions from this chain of developments. The commission will, for example, study what motives there may be for using submarines to violate Swedish territory and also shed light on the Swedish defense system's possibilities of discovering, identifying and expelling foreign vessels in peacetime.

WHITEHALL CITED ON SOVIET 'TOP AGENT' DEFECTOR

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] The KGB, the Soviet intelligence agency, is expected to move quickly to try to defuse the value of one of its top agents who has defected to Britain. Vladimir Andreyovich Kuzichkin was listed as a vice-consul at the Soviet Embassy in Iran. He fled the embassy in June and arrived in Britain a few days ago. He is now being debriefed in a secret house near London. Whitehall took the unusual step of highlighting that Kuzichkin was a major catch for Western intelligence. "This is not an ordinary run of the mill affair," an official said.

Officials however are refusing to say just in what respect he is valuable -- whether he can provide a background to Soviet intelligence activities in Europe, or, more likely, give details of KGB activities in the highly sensitive Middle East. If this is just a ploy by British intelligence to boost morale of intelligence agencies, the Soviet will quickly be able to discount claims. It is assumed, however, that the value of Kuzichkin will lie in identifying Soviet agents in the Middle East, and the operations of the KGB in the volatile Iran.

American intelligence agents are expected in London to seek to interview Kuzichkin. The Soviet Embassy in London was informed that Kuzichkin had been given permission to stay in Britain, and immediately asked for consular access. This request was passed on to Kuzichkin but there is no indication yet that he has agreed.

The listing of Kuzichkin as a vice-consul in Iran is regarded as normal in KGB operations. His job was to act as the linkman with the communist Tudeh Party. Iran, because of its strategic position in the Middle East, is now more than ever a battlefield between Western and Soviet intelligence.

Since the revolution which brought Ayatollah Khomeyni to power, Iran has added a new element of instability to this crucial oil producing area. Because of its new importance only top agents are assigned to operate there. Kuzichkin is assumed to have brought valuable documents with him when he fled from his embassy. So far Whitehall is reluctant to say where Kuzichkin has been since he fled from the embassy in June. The moves to highlight his importance to Western intelligence will cause a stir in the Middle East, in particular in Iran itself.

This could represent a setback to the Soviet efforts to strengthen its position in Iran and will help to make Eastern diplomats more suspect under Ayatollah Khomeyni's regime. Diplomatic observers felt that this might be one of the objectives in Western intelligence thinking. Kuzichkin, in his middle thirties, is married without children. His wife has apparently not chosen to accompany him to the West.

RADIO CITES DETAILS OF KIPRIANOU'S VISIT TO USSR

NC231822 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 23 Oct 82

[Text] Today the government spokesman in Nicosia stated that the upcoming visit to Moscow of the President of the Republic of Cyprus Spiros Kiprianou will be a working visit. The spokesman added that Kiprianou will have talks with the Chairman of the Supreme Soviet Leonid Brezhnev which will cover the Cyprus issue. The program of Kiprianou's visit to Moscow will be announced next week.

Spokesman Terms Visit 'Regular'

[Text] Yesterday the government spokesman disclosed to the press that the visit President Kiprianou will pay to Moscow at the end of the month will not be an official state visit but a "regular" -- as he described it -- visit. Despite the persistent questions by the press representatives, the government spokesman refused to say anything more on the nature of the visit or about its program. He only said that the program includes talks between Kiprianou and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

In reply to a question as to who will welcome Kiprianou on arrival in Moscow, the spokesman said that he did not know and added that details of the visit will be made known later. As is well known, the visit will begin on 28 October.

The spokesman disclosed that the visit is not official when the journalists, who will accompany the president on his trip, asked to learn the program so that they could prepare themselves accordingly.

Commenting on this development, political and diplomatic observers expressed the viewpoint that it is a downgrading of Kiprianou's visit, given the fact that there will not be a presentation of arms for him nor will the leader of the Soviet state meet him. According to protocol, honors are presented only to official visitors.

Government Denial

NC251022 Nicosia O AGON TIS DHEVTERAS in Greek 25 Oct 82 p 12

["Text" of 24 October statement by Cyprus Government spokesman]

[Text] Under banner headlines, a section of the opposition press is talking about the downgrading of the president's forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union while Democratic Rally leader Kliridhis has even reached the point of alleging that the visit will merely acquire the nature of a visit by a community leader.

The allegation that Mr Kiprianou's visit to the Soviet Union has been downgraded is absolutely wrong because no mention has ever been made about an official visit (state visit) either in the official announcement on Mr Kiprianou's visit or in pertinent announcements that followed. A mention was simply made about a visit to the Soviet Union.

Mr Kliridhis' interpretation that President Kiprianou's visit to the Soviet Union has been downgraded to the level of a community leader's visit is absolutely arbitrary and could only be given by the Turkish side. It is pointed out in this connection that the invitation of the Supreme Soviet is addressed to Mr Kiprianou as president of the Republic of Cyprus and that Mr Kiprianou -- again as president of the republic -- will hold talks with Mr Brezhnev, president of the Soviet Union. He will attend a dinner to be given in his honor by the Supreme Soviet which will also be attended by Mr Brezhnev, and a joint communique will be issued on the talks.

Because Mr Kliridhis seems to doubt the usefulness of the president's visit to the Soviet Union, it is recalled that Mr Kiprianou has also paid similar visits, that is, visits which did not have the "state visit" character, to other countries. However, Mr Kliridhis never claimed that those visits had the character of a community leader's visit.

From all this, it is deduced that -- although there is no question of President Kiprianou's visit to the Soviet Union having been downgraded -- an attempt is being made to create the impression that this is the case and all this is done within the framework of tactics by certain circles to view everything, even matters connected with the Cyprus issue, in light of partisan interest.

REASON FOR KIPRIANOU, KARAMANLIS NOT MEETING

[Text] In answer to a question why the meeting between President Kiprianou and Greek President Karamanlis did not take place and whether the fact that the meeting was not realized indicates Mr Karamanlis' disapproval of Mr Kiprianou's policy as has been alleged by a newspaper, the government spokesman has made the following statement:

The allegation about the disapproval of President Kiprianou's policy by Greek President Karamanlis causes consternation. As is well known, Mr Karamanlis returned from his visit to Canada at noon last Tuesday. The day before yesterday Wednesday, President Kiprianou was visiting Tinos [Greek island]. Yesterday, President Kiprianou had a telephone contact with Mr Karamanlis and had a long conversation. After that, it was not necessary to have a personal meeting. The two presidents agreed to meet during the next meeting visit to Athens by Mr Kiprianou. In his statement yesterday, on arrival in Cyprus, President Kiprianou said that the Greek president had asked President Kiprianou to convey his warm greetings to the Cypriot people.

Besides, Greek Ambassador Zakharakis has issued the following statement: I am authorized to state that the reports in today's press about the nonrealization of a meeting between Greek President Karamanlis and President Kiprianou are absolutely false.

KLIRIDHIS OUTLINES PARTY POLICY AT NICOSIA RALLY

NC222120 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Text] The Democratic Rally [DISI] Party held a pan-Cypriot rally at Elevtheria Square in Nicosia tonight. In his speech at the rally, DISI Chairman Kliridhis criticized the Democratic Party [DIKO]-AKEL cooperation and said DISI is launching an unyielding struggle for democracy and change. Kliridhis reiterated DISI accusations about attempts to factionalize the state machinery and about favoritism. He also criticized the decision to discontinue live relays of the House of Representatives sessions by the Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation, describing such a decision as a blow against democracy.

Kliridhis went on to say that the decision to run for the office of president in the forthcoming presidential elections is irrevocable and announced 20 points of a program which, he added, aim at consolidating and safeguarding democracy.

Among other things, Mr Kliridhis said that if he is elected president, he will immediately resign from the DISI chairmanship because he cannot have two roles at the same time. He also said that the program provides that the right to vote be given at the age of 18, that the Ministry of Interior and Defense be divided into two separate ministries and that the Ministry to the President be abolished. Mr Kliridhis added that any jurisdiction for the dismissal of public servants by the Council of Ministers for reasons of public interest would be abolished and absolute competency enjoyed by the Public Service Commission.

Mr Kliridhis also suggested that the institution of government commissioner be established and proposed that the proportional representation electoral system be applied in the municipal and communal elections. He also said that legislation regarding the Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation should be radically revised so that, among other things, representatives of political parties may participate in the body that would determine the corporation's policy.

NONALIGNED COMMITTEE ON PALESTINIANS MEETS

[Text] The nonaligned ministerial committee on the Palestinian issue met in Nicosia this morning. Cyprus is participating in the committee. The meeting was held in view of the meeting the committee members will have in Tunis with PLO chief 'Arafat.

Cuban Foreign Minister Malmierca chaired the meeting, which was attended by Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Yugoslav Foreign Minister Mojsov, Nicaraguan Foreign Minister d'Escoto and representatives of the Indian, Guyanese and Sri Lanka foreign ministers.

Addressing the members of the committee, Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis said the basic mandate given to the committee was to visit Beirut and to work out ways of further supporting the Palestinian cause. We were prevented from implementing the basic part of our mandate because we were prevented from visiting Beirut.

Rolandhis then said that after the consultations in Nicosia, the committee members will visit Tunis where, tonight and probably tomorrow morning, they will meet with 'Arafat and exchange views on methods and types of aid and support which the committee and the Nonaligned Movement could offer the Palestinian people.

In conclusion, Rolandhis stated that after meeting with 'Arafat, the committee members will once again have consultations among themselves on future action to be undertaken.

In his statement, Cuban Foreign Minister Malmierca thanked the Government of Cyprus for making the meeting possible in Nicosia. This meeting, he added, will give us the opportunity to reassert the solidarity of the Nonaligned Movement toward the Palestinian people's inalienable rights and to once again request the unconditional withdrawal of the Israeli forces from Lebanon.

Malmierca also mentioned that during their meeting with Palestinian leader 'Arafat, they will analyze the current situation and the consequences of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and discuss the necessary steps to be taken to allow the committee to conclude the work entrusted to it.

Committee Meets Kiprianou

[Excerpts] The nonaligned ministerial committee on the Palestine issue, which met in Nicosia this morning, has reaffirmed that a solution to the problem must guarantee the complete and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from occupied Palestinian and other Arab lands, including Jerusalem, which will allow the Palestinian people to exercise their inalienable rights to return to their homes and for self-determination, national independence and establishment of an independent and sovereign state of Palestine.

A communique issued following the meeting states that the committee studied the developments which have intervened since its last session in New York and evaluated the extremely serious situation created by the Israeli invasion.

After its meeting, the committee was received by President of the Republic Kiprianou, whom it briefed on its activities in accordance with its mandate. The committee also exchanged views with President Kiprianou on the latest developments in the Palestinian issue.

DAILY LINKS POLICE CHIEF WITH ESPIONAGE CASE

NC240851 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 24 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] On the basis of exclusive reports, O KIRIKAS is in a position to disclose the allegations that were put forth for the dismissal of the deputy policy chief, Pavlos Stokkos.

Specifically, the government acted as a result of reports it received on an alleged responsibility by Stokkos for leaking government documents to the Israeli Embassy. Stokkos explicitly denies these allegations and considers himself to be the victim of a frameup.

According to our reports, the Israeli Embassy in Nicosia equally strongly denies the allegations. However, the government does not attach great significance to these denials because in cases like this no "admission" is usually expected.

Meanwhile, according to our reports, the documents that were leaked concern the movement of Palestinians -- not Armenians, as mentioned in the first reports. The documents in question consist of many typed pages which, among other things, contain about 400 names of Palestinians who had either passed through or are in Cyprus. All the names are in a confidential dossier which, according to our reports, for some reason -- still unknown -- was photocopied by a person about whom reports and claims are still disputed.

The government considers Stokkos responsible for this because he allegedly did not take measures to stop the photocopying. It still remains a mystery what happened to the photocopied list.

According to our reports, when Minister of the Interior Veniamin asked for the photocopy, it could not be found. The explanation given by the responsible people to the minister is that the photocopy was "destroyed" as useless on the same day that, by coincidence, it had been demanded by the minister.

The government's reports are that the photocopy of the document was leaked to the Israeli Embassy.

AKEL CENTRAL COMMITTEE ISSUES RESOLUTION

NC241140 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 24 Oct 82 pp 1, 11

[Text] The second regular AKEL Central Committee and Central Control Committee plenum, which convened in Nicosia on 19 October, discussed the Politburo's report "Political Developments After the 15th AKEL Congress and Our New Duties" and the report of the party's secretary general, E. Papaioannou, and resolved the following:

A. Internal Developments

1. The main axis around which all internal political developments revolve is the presidential elections and the cooperation of the patriotic democratic forces Democratic Party [DIKO]-AKEL on the basis of the joint minimum program and the joint declaration for the support of Kiprianou as the joint candidate for president in the next presidential elections.

The plenum of the Central Committee and the Central Control Committee firmly believes that the DIKO-AKEL cooperation and the minimum program correspond to the demands of the tough and difficult liberation, antioccupation, anti-imperialist struggle of our people as well as to the vital socio-economic interests of the working people.

The plenum considers the minimum program to be a historic political act for the benefit of the Cyprus people, the significance of which extends beyond the Cypriot area. This program springs from Cypriot objective reality itself, serves the needs of our people's struggle against imperialism and the Turkish occupation, the peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem, survival and vindication and democracy, internal normality and outlines a popular socio-economic financial policy for the rise of the Cyprus people's living and cultural standards.

2. The plenum ascertains that the DIKO-AKEL cooperation and the minimum program have been approved by the people and have met with broad response among the masses of the Cypriot people. At the same time, however, this cooperation has become the target of a blunt attack by imperialism, local forces of the reactionary extreme right and the representatives of the reactionary big capital, the chief coupists of EOKA B, the leadership of EDEK, the archbishop and other reactionary circles.

Bitter because of the significant success of the patriotic democratic forces, imperialism and the reactionary right are frenziedly assailing the parties of the cooperation and the minimum program. This unprincipled frenzied attack by the party of the reactionary extreme right and EOKA B is explained by the evaluation of the fact that the DIKO-AKEL cooperation impedes the Democratic Rally Party rising to power, foils imperialism's plans for the imposition of its own solution to the Cyprus problems and rids the patriotic democratic forces of the center and national bourgeois class of the oppression and guardianship of the reactionary extreme right.

3. The plenum ascertains that in addition to the reactionary extreme right and its party, forces and situations, which normally should have joined an almighty common front with democratic cooperation for the country's salvation, are at odds with it. Unfortunately, the leadership of EDEK and of the other parties as well as the archbiship and various personalities, motivated either by narrow partisan interests, personal aspirations, petty partisan aims or personal passion against President Kiprianou, the cooperating parties' joint candidate for president, have united and are assailing, with the same intensity as the reactionary local and foreign forces, the cooperation and the joint minimum program.

From the day following the announcement of the DIKO-AKEL cooperation, all these forces embarked on an unprecedented campaign of distortion slander and mudslinging against the cooperation and the minimun program and against the leadership of our party and DIKO.

In their blind attack, both the Rally Party and the leadership of EDEK and their press pay no respect either to principles or to institutions. Without the slightest sense of responsibility, egoistically motivated, they are following a policy for the undermining of every institution, the destabilizing and undermining of the Cypriot state's existence. Their stance in the House of Representatives and their various manifestations outside it confirm these aims and goals.

In their attack against the cooperation of the patriotic democratic forces, its enemies exploit relations between Athens and Nicosia and exert every effort for the creation of a rift between the two governments so that they may serve their narrow partisan interests.

The plenum once again declares that, with a profound sense of responsibility, it will continue and intensify its efforts for the consolidation and strengthening of the close friendly relations between the Governments of Cyprus and Greece in order to serve the tough and difficult liberation, antioccupation, anti-imperialist struggle, the struggle for a peceful, just, mutually acceptable and viable solution of the Cyprus problem on the basis of UN resolutions and the summit agreements of 1977 and 1979.

4. The Central Committee and Central Control Committee plenum reaffirms the position of a previous plenum regarding the next presidential elections in accordance with which:

"Our party's principal strategic aim in the presidential elections is to block the road of the reactionary right to power" and repeats that: "Our party will strive to elect a democratic president from the patriotic democratic forces." The Central Committee and the Central Control Committee declare that the party's main, central duty and that of every democrat and patriot is the triumphant election of the candidate of the patriotic democratic forces, Kiprianou, as president of the republic in the presidential elections of 13 February.

The plenum calls on all party organizations, the party aggregate, every democrat and patriot, to work with faith, enthusiasm and optimism for the victory of the cooperating patriotic forces in the presidential elections and the defeat of the reactionary extreme right and of those who have joined it. It calls the party aggregate, all the democrats and patriots and every progressive Cypriot to a constant activation, to a constant rally for the victory of democracy, for the triumph of the joint candidate of the patriotic democratic forces, Spiros Kiprianou.

The plenum stresses that in the battle for the presidential elections, in addition to the practical organizational measures, enlightment, propaganda and our press will play a decisive role. Our press should publicize and defend even more courageously and decisively, with dynamism and persuasiveness, the line and positions of the party, the DIKO-AKEL cooperation and the minimum program.

5. The plenum ascertains that the DIKO-AKEL cooperation and the joint minimum program has endured this tough ordeal despite internal and external attacks by all sides that oppose it. The runoff election in Famagusta of 22 August was a kind of plebiscite and poll of public opinion for the DIKO-AKEL cooperation and the minimum program.

The plenum assesses the result of this election as an approval and ratification by the people of the cooperation and the minimum program and as an answer and condemnation of the attack by the reactionary extreme right, the leadership of EDEK and other parties against the cooperation and the minimum program.

6. The Central Committee and the Central Control Committee plenum reaffirms its devotion to the need for unity among all patriotic democratic forces of the Cyprus people. Our party believes that in view of the critical international and domestic conditions and in view of these serious dangers that loom for Cyprus and the world, the most urgent duty for every patriot and democrat is to work for the achievement and forging of the unity of all patriotic democratic forces.

AKEL sincerely believes that the minimum program can and should constitute the result of the unity and cooperation of all forces of the Cyprus people, who place the interest of the tough and difficult struggle of our people for survival and vindication above partisan and narrow personal egoistic interests. Despite all difficulties, our party will continue to exert every effort for the broadening of unity and cooperation among all patriotic democratic forces and the creation of a pandemocratic patriotic front. We call on all these forces to proceed with democratic cooperation.

7. In the period under review, the Cyprus people continued their struggle for the implementation of the UN resolutions, the withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops and of all foreign forces, the return of the refugees, the tracing of the missing persons' fate and of rapprochement between Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots. They continued their struggle for a just, peaceful and mutually acceptable solution of the Cyprus problem on the basis of the UN resolutions, the summit agreements and the correct course and tactics of the struggle.

Once again, our party declares that the Cyprus problem never was an issue of irreconcilable differences between the Turkish and Greek Cypriots. The Cyprus problem was and will remain an issue of the Cyprus people's opposition to imperialism and its broader plans for the Middle and Near East, and since 1974, an issue of invasion and occupation of 37 percent of Cyprus' soil by the Turkish occupation troops and of rapprochement between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

The plenum ascertains that the talks, which continued during this entire period, have not marked substantive progress. This lack of progress in the talks, which prolongs the stagnation and immobility of the Cyprus problem with unpredictable dangers for Cyprus, is due: (A) First of all to the U.S.-NATO imperialist factor's reaction against a solution to the Cyprus problem which would serve the vital interests of all of the Cyprus people -- a reaction that after the recent developments in Lebanon is expected to become even stronger. (B) To the intransigent course which -- with the encouragement and principal support of leading U.S. Government circles -- the military junta of Ankara is obstinately continuing, followed faithfully by the chauvinist Turkish Cypriot leadership. (C) To the international tension worldwide and especially in the area near Cyprus, the Near and Middle East, which has become dangerously explosive as a result of the Israeli Zionists' aggression in Lebanon.

Despite the existing serious difficulties for progress in the talks, the Central Committee and Central Control Committee plenum stresses that everything possible should be done to overcome the current stagnation and that substantive and constructive talks be held to open prospects for a just and peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem. The recourse we are planning to the United Nations should aim at guaranteeing the more active support and role of the international organization so that the necessary prerequisites can be created for fruitful and effective talks for the Cyprus problem's solution. With our recourse to the United Nations, we must also seek to promote the necessary convening of a special international conference for the implementation of UN resolutions on Cyprus and the solution of the international aspect of the Cyprus problem.

Undoubtedly, the withdrawal of the Turkish occupation forces and of all foreign troops from Cyprus constitutes an indispensable prerequisite for a permanent and stable solution of the Cyprus problem and for the smooth democratic evolution and peaceful coexistence of the Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

9. The Central Committee and Central Control Committee plenum applauds the recent visit to Cyprus of the Secretary General of the Socialist Unity Party Central Committee and Chairman of the State Council of the People's Democratic Republic of Germany Honecker as well as the upcoming visit of President of the Republic of Cyprus Kiprianou to Moscow. It considers these visits and talks between the state leaders of the two countries as a significant contribution to the struggle for the further internationalization of the Cyprus problem and the just, peaceful and mutually acceptable solution of the problem.

10. The Central Committee and the Central Control Committee plenum ascertains that despite the painful consequences of the coup and the Turkish invasion and the continuing occupation, despite the unfavorable consequences of foreign factors, the Cypriot economy continues -- albeit at a reduced rate -- its ascending course. Its situation favorable compares and is much better than the situation of many capitalist countries. Contrary to most capitalist countries -- with their economies in recession, stagnation or experiencing a reduction in production -- and which have a high percentage of inflation and unemployment, Cyprus' economy shows an increases in production, although at rates which are lower than those of previous years, a significant drop in inflation and a minimal percentage of unemployment.

Taking these facts into consideration, the AKEL Central Committee and Central Control Committee plenum believes that the noise raised by the party of the reactionary extreme right and the coupists, the circles of reactionary big capital, the leadership of EDEK and other political and economic personalities, who put forth unfounded and outrageous claims that the Cyprus economy is on the threshold of collapse and bankruptcy, constitutes a distortion of reality aimed at serving preelection demogogic objectives and the creation of panic among the people, especially among businessmen and industrialists. These claims are being deliberately put forth for the sole purpose of a policy that is barren and without principles and which serves the more general political aims of Cyprus' implacable enemies to undermine the Cypriot state's enity.

11. Despite the ascertainment that the Cyprus economy is not in a crisis and that it continues its ascending course, it nevertheless faces certain serious problems the most important of which are:

a) The increasing financial deficit and public debt.
b) The large deficit in the balance of trade.
c) The tendency to reduce investments and
d) Unemployment, even though to a small extent.

To deal with the problems of the Cypriot economy and to attain a new ascending course with faster rates of development, the economic and financial policies set out in the minimum program must be followed and the specific and practical measures included in it, which will encourage investment activity and will contribute to the rise of development rates, the reduction of unemployment and the general improvement of the Cypriot economy, must be implemented.

B. International Developments

12. In the field of international developments, the main characteristic remains tension in international relations, the revival of the arms race with U.S.-NATO imperialism obstinately follows and tries to impose and the steadfast and persistent struggle of the people and the international peace-loving forces against the policy of tension, for the defense of detents, the arrest of the dangerous arms race, the avoidance of a thermonuclear war and the safeguarding and consolidation of peace throughout the world.

13. The main responsibility for the dangerous tension in international relations is to be blamed on the Reagan administration, which is the representative of the most reactionary bellicose circles of international imperialism. Following a policy of international hegemony and sovereignty, the Reagan administration has engaged in an unprecedented arms program (wasting billions of dollars), thus seeking the guarantee military supremacy against the Soviet Union and against the countries of the socialist community in general in the vain hope that it will impose its will and the interests of U.S. imperialism on an international scale from a position of strength.

By following such a policy, the most reactionary imperialist circles, headed by U.S. imperialism, are utilizing every opportunity and excuse to create disturbances in various parts of the world, intervene in various ways in the internal affairs of other countries, promote and impose their own policy and support facist and reactionary regimes and governments submissive to the orders of U.S. imperialism.

As a result of the inflammatory and adventurist policy of U.S. imperialism, the international situation has become much more complex and dangerous than in the past.

Contrary to this policy of the most reactionary bellicose forces of imperialism, the Soviet Union, at the head of the socialist countries, follows with complete to consistency a peace-loving, Leninist policy and decisively struggles in the frontline of the world's peace-loving forces for the defense and safeguarding of peace and the salvation of humanity from the danger of thermonuclear war.

The Soviet Union's offer not to be first to use nuclear arms as well as its realistic and concrete proposals at the United Nations and at the Geneva and Vienna talks show the correct road for the consolidation of detente, gradual and controlled disarmament and the prevalence of the principle of peaceful coexistence and of peace in the entire world.

15. The Soviet Union's peace-loving policy in conjunction with the fact that all peoples are increasingly feeling more and more the serious dangers for the transformation of humanity into the holocaust of a thermonuclear war -- toward which the leading circles of U.S.-NATO imperialism are pushing through their policy -- constitutes a source of inspiration and encouragement for the people in their struggle for safeguarding peace. The people are rising in movements unprecedented in their militancy and massiveness against the misanthropic policy of U.S.-NATO imperialism.

In conditions of very sharp competition and the exacerbation of the international situation, the development of the socialist countries' economies and the strengthening of their defense potential in conjunction with the struggle of the peoples constitutes a guarantee for the bankruptcy of the unholy bellicose imperialist plans.

16. The Central Committee and the Central Control Committee plenum applauds the important successes of the KKE in the recent municipal elections. The results of these elections constitute a triumphant victory for the forces of progress and change.

The principal message which the election results address to the Greek people is that the Greek people have determinedly rejected the reactionary right and its policy. With their votes, the Greek people have declared that substantive change in the interests of the workers and the working people of Greece is possible only through the contribution and active role of the KKE and a sincere understanding and cooperation on the basis of principles by all democratic progressive forces who are the agents of change.

17. During the period we are reviewing, international tension and especially tension in the Near and Middle East dangerously deteriorated as a result of the U.S. inspired aggression of the Zionists in Lebanon.

The main aims of the joint policy of U.S. imperialism and the Israeli Zionists with their aggression in Lebanon were: (A) To crush the Palestinian fighters and destroy their vanguard -- the PLO -- and the imposition of a solution on the Middle East problem on the basis of Israeli and U.S. interests in the areas. (B) The elimination of the Lebanese patriots and the handing over of power to the Phalangists, the collaborators of Israel's Zionists; (C) The withdrawal of the Syrian troops from Lebanon and the preoaration of the ground for aggression against Syria at a later stage. (D) The installation of U.S. and more generally NATO troops in Lebanon under the cloak of "peace makers" and Lebanon's transformation into a U.S. base against neighboring peoples and the Soviet Union.

The barbarian aggression of U.S. imperialism and Israel's Zionists and the crimes of genocide which they committed against the Palestinian fighters and the Lebanese people caused the indignation and protests of international public opinion and were repeatedly condemned by almost all the governments of the world and by the UN General Assembly.

The Central Committee and the Contral Control Committee applaud the majestic and mass support and solidarity of the Cyprus people with the Palestinian fighters and the patriotic forces of Lebanon which were manifoldly manifested, especially through strikes and militant protest marches, during which our people condemned the aggression and demanded the immediate withdrawal of the Israeli aggressors from Lebanon, the implementation of UN resolutions on the Palestinian problem and the settlement of the Middle East problem.

The 2nd AKEL Central Committee and Central Control Committee plenum, fully aware of the critical situation through which humanity is passing as a result of the inflammatory and dangerous bellicose policy of the most reactionary cricles of international imperialism, headed by the leading circles of U.S. imperialism, considers that the most urgent duty is the struggle to frustrate the misanthropic plans of the bellicose imperialists for the safeguarding of peace, gradual full and controlled disarmament and humanity's salvation from a thermonuclear war.

In these critical moments through which Cyprus is passing, and in view of the increasing dangers from developments in our neighboring area of the Near and Middle East, our party appeals to all patriotic democratic forces of the people to rally to an almighty patriotic front in the struggle for the confrontation of any plans by imperialism against Cyprus, for the safeguarding and strengthening of Cyprus' state entity and for the success of the tough and difficult struggle for survival and vindication.

The 2nd AKEL Central Committee and Central Control Committee plenum asks the party aggregate, all the patriots and democrats to mobilize and activate all their forces with faith, enthusiasm and optimism in the battle for the presidential elections, which is of huge political significance, the principal goal being:

-- To triumphantly elect to the presidential office the joint candidate of the cooperating parties, DIKO-AKEL, Spiros Kiprianou.

O AGON CALLS UPON AKEL TO HELP CONFRONT DANGERS

NC221024 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 22 Oct 82 p 1

[From "My Opinion" column by "The Observer:" "Existing Danger -- the Lebanization of Cyprus"]

[Text] It is an absolute correct assessment and there is justification in the concern that "what the American imperialists have done in Lebanon -- to employ the Zionist Israeli neo-Nazis -- could also be done in Cyprus by using the Turkish occupation troops."

We have no reason to describe this statement by Mr Papaioannou as danger mongering. On the contrary, we agree that the danger indeed exists and we cannot possibly disregard or diminish the importance of this danger. Furthermore, this column recently pointed out precisely what Mr Papaioannou said and stressed the need for serious consideration of the situation so that we may not find ourselves in Lebanon's tragic position.

In a few words, this is what has happened in Lebanon:

The Americans, through the Israelis, have returned Lebanon -- by means of steel and fire -- to their absolute control because they deemed that that country, as a result of the presence of Syrian troops and Palestinian fighters, was being removed from American control and influence and was about to fall into the arms of the other superpower.

Now Lebanon is back in the orbit that the Americans want; Mr Papaioannou admits this. "With the barbarous Zionist aggression against Lebanon," Mr Papaioannou said, "The American imperialists have succeeded in putting the Lebanese Phalangists in power..." However, we add: Now Lebanon has a pro-American government, it is under the absolute control of the Israeli occupation troops; the Palestinians are gone; the Syrian troops can no longer control the situation; and the leftwing elements of the country are being persecuted. This is Lebanon today: desolated, destroyed, under the control of foreign troops and a cemetery. But it is an American bastion!

It would not cost the Americans anything to do the same thing here. In Lebanon, they had the Israelis; in Cyprus, they have the Turks. And being ruthless when they must serve their political-military interests, they would not think twice about moving Attila against us if they say that Cyprus was getting out of their control.

It is fortunate that AKEL sees the emerging serious dangers to our country and is conscious of the fact that our future hangs from a thread that is actually in the hands of one of the superpowers.

But it is not enough that AKEL should see this; it has a duty to act as well, or rather not to act in a way that would provide the Americans with the opportunity to do in Cyprus what Mr Papaioannou fears.

This paper would be the last to say that national dignity must be sacrificed or that everything must be surrendered to the Americans so that our people may become a sad and lamentable servant of the Western powers in order to appease the Americans and serve American interests.

However, we have a duty to see international realities, the harsh realities, the position of Cyprus, its surroundings, its ties, and then proceed carefully, with clear vision and caution through the reefs of conflicting international interests.

We can preserve our independence, we can continue to belong to the nonaligned world and we can be friends with the Eastern countries, but we cannot push Cyprus toward other directions or put our fate and our people's future at stake.

The way things have developed, one mistake is enough to push us to catastrophe. And AKEL, which is the main political force in Cyprus, must constructively contribute to facing the major dangers that are threatening Cyprus and to refrain from actions or mistakes that could lead Cyprus to what it fears -- the Lebanization of Cyprus.

PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION DEPARTS FOR FRANCE

[Text] An interparty parliamentary delegation headed by House of Representatives President Ladhas left this afternoon on an official visit to France at the invitation of French Senate President Boher. In a statement at Larnaca Airport, the house president praised the relations between the Cypriot House of Representatives and the two French legislative bodies and expressed the conviction that the delegation's visit will contribute to the further strengthening of these relations as well as the Cyprus-French relations in general. Mr Ladhas also said he will meet with the French foreign minister and other members of the French Government. He also added that France will be asked to help in tracing the fate of missing persons. The difficulties in Cyprus' association with the EEC as well as Cyprus' relations with the Council of Europe will also be raised.

The delegation consists of Deputies Petas, Lordhos, Psillidhis and Katsounotos.

DENKTAS' CLAIMS ON UN RECOURSE, ARMS REFUTED

NC231930 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1700 GMT 23 Oct 82

[Text] In response to statements made yesterday in New York by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas, the government spokesman has reiterated that the Cyprus Government is obliged to again bring up the Cyprus issue at the United Nations because the hopes for a change in the unyielding Turkish stand, as well as for an attempt to lift the deadlock, have been dashed. The spokesman has also described as absolutely unjustified Denktas' allegation that recourse of the Cyprus issue to the United Nations is harmful to the course of the inter-Cypriot talks.

The spokesman also once again refuted Denktas' allegations that the Greek Cypriots are feverishly arming themselves and intend to launch an attack against the Turkish Cypriots. Nevertheless, the spokesman added that nobody can question the Cypriot Government's right to strengthen the defense of the republic's free areas in view of the Turkish aggression and the continuing occupation of a considerable part of the republic's territory.

The spokesman said that the government has given instructions to the republic's permanent delegate at the United Nations to denounce to the secretary general and the Security Council members the threats that have been expressed in a Turkish Cypriot paper calling on Turkey to bomb Cyprus.

DENKTAS DEPARTS NEW YORK FOR LONDON 22 OCT

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the Cyprus problem would be solved through a federal framework in accordance with the agreement he reached with Makarios in 1977. Denktas departed New York last night for London after he completed his contacts there.

In a statement to the Turkish Cypriot news agency [TAK] correspondent before his departure, Denktas expressed satisfaction over his contacts in New York. He said that despite the intensified propaganda carried out by the Greek Cypriots, he reminded representatives of interest organizations and countries of the suffering caused by Greeks and Greek Cypriots to the Turkish Cypriot community from 1963 to 1974. He added that he also explained the efforts being exerted by the Greek Cypriots to eliminate the Turkish community's partnership rights in Cyprus.

Denktas continued: In accordance with the 1977 agreements, the Cyprus problem will be solved within a federal framework, and to present the Cyprus issue as a problem that began with the Turkish peace operation of 1974 will never be successful.

Commenting on his visit to New York, Denktas said that during his stay he was witness to the means the Greek Cypriots used in their propaganda campaigns and the issues they tried to highlight. He added: We must exert more efforts in a bid to spread the truth. The strengthening of our Foreign Ministry and our information efforts have reached a crucial point.

Defining the Turks living abroad as the voluntary emissaries of both Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot community, Denktas said these must be provided with the necessary information so that they can be of use in the propaganda efforts. He added that measures to this effect must be taken immediately.

Denktas visited New York for talks with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar on the latest developments in the Cyprus problem. Foreign Minister Kenan Atakol, as well as the Turkish Cypriot negotiator at the Cypriot intercommunal talks, Umit Onan, also attended the talks. During the talks, an identity of views was reached to the effect that the Cyprus problem can be solved only through peaceful negotiations. During his stay in New York, Denktas had occasion to meet representatives of various countries in order to brief them on the Turkish Cypriot views on the problem.

NC242126 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 2050 GMT 24 Oct 82

[Text] We have just been informed from the main studio that we have a videotape with a statement by Prime Minister Papandreou to our political correspondent Thanos Oikonomopoulos:

[Begin Oikonomopoulos recording] Mr Prime Minister, the situation is practically completely clear and the results fully justify your forecast of last Sunday. What new statement do you have to make today?

[Papandreou] I must state that I am deeply touched. With their vote, the people gave another crushing victory to PASOK, to the forces of change. It is true that the vote of 1981 once again and with much greater emphasis stresses the faith of the people in the work we have undertaken -- to create a new Greece that will come up to the expectations of the Greek people and the nation.

It is a crushing victory, and one could say that the map of Greece has turned green [PASOK colors].

[Oikonomopoulos] Permit me to make an observation. The results so far show certain peculiar, to say the least, alliances between the various political coalitions. How do you see these alliances, Mr Prime Minister?

[Papandreou] I would like to say this: In any confrontation between PASOK and the KKE, New Democracy decisively gave its vote in support of the KKE; in other words, when faced with the option between PASOK and the KKE, it opted for the KKE. For this I believe that New Democracy no longer has the right to talk about a popular front in this country.

There is something else. The leader of New Democracy has led his party into a course leading into an impasse both ideologically and politically. I would say that it has suffered not only an election defeat, but also a moral defeat of the first order. I would like to know what New Democracy truly is, what it represents on the political map of our country. Mr Averof ought to think about this. [end recording]

Averof on Results

NC242301 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 2200 GMT 24 Oct 82

[Text] New Democracy leader Evangelos Averof made the following statement:

As can be seen from an analysis of the election results, the electorate places New Democracy as the leading self-supporting party with a percentage of approximately 41 percent. This is a great and very important political development. Efforts are already being made through the radio and television and through the distortion of numbers to alter the true picture of the results. This cannot be done. Numbers speak their irrefutable language.

The political conclusions from the municipal election could be deduced from the first round and are very clear: PASOK's strength was perceptibly weakened and, by contrast, New Democracy's strength increased considerably. These conclusions emerge further strengthened after the second round of the municipal election.

In no case did the candidates supported by the front receive the total votes which PASOK and the KKE received separately a week ago. Many of the forces joined under the broader, democratic and liberal area represented by our great front.

There is special significance in the fact that in Athens and Thessaloniki, as can be deduced from all previous elections, the results show that the candidates supported by New Democracy each received approximately 44 percent.

Another conclusion is that since PASOK took power, it has paved the way for the KKE in such a way that in only one year the KKE has increased its forces perceptibly. The first to be concerned over this ought to be the leader of PASOK, particularly because in many of his overtures he was outflanked and overrun by the KKE.

The confidence of the Greek people in New Democracy, despite an unprecedented climate of terror, is a mandate for our great front to continue the battle for restoration of the genuine democratic institutions. We were also given this mandate by a great percentage of our vital youth, which once again proved its faith in democracy. I assure the Greek people that we will respond to this mandate.

KKE's Florakis Comments

NC242302 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 2200 GMT 24 Oct 82

[Text] KKE Secretary General Kharilaos Florakis made the following statement in which, among other things, he said:

The second round of the municipal election is a real popular plebiscite in support of unity, democracy and progress in our country. The first conclusion, he stressed, is that the forces of change were jointly superior to the conservative forces, and that this is a victory achieved thanks to the contribution of the KKE as well.

The second conclusion is that the slates supported by the KKE had great success and won important municipalities in the country.

Athens Mayor's Remarks

NC242140 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 2110 GMT 24 Oct 82

[Text] We have just been given a recording of the statements by Athens Mayor Dhimitrios Beis:

[Begin recording] [Announcer] The balance has tilted and the Athenians are celebrating. We are expecting the mayor of Athens to make his first statement. Mr Mayor, the Athenians await your first statement. What do you have to say?

[Beis] My colleagues and I are deeply touched. The people of Athens truly won. For the second time, they gave their mandate to the forces of change so that they can complete their task and all of us, united -- the municipal authority, the people and the democratic forces -- with the support of the government of change, will proceed toward change.

[Announcer] We have a statement by Mr Tzannetakis which I will read:

Candidate mayor of Athens Tzannis Tzannetakis released the following statement on the election results: The result of yesterday's election in Athens most certainly does not offer itself to celebrations by those who won. On the contrary, it gives pride to all who opposed stark party bargaining. Only a simple comparison of the figures demonstrates that the slate of "new spirit for Athens" [the Tzannetakis slate] has won the confidence of the greatest majority of Athenians while Beis relied on the concocted majority of the parties. [end recording]

I KATHIMERINI Analysis

NC191714 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 19 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] It is estimated that PASOK has lost 10 percent of its following in the country during its year in office. This percentage has been approximated from the results of yesterday's municipal elections. More accurate and precise figures are not possible because of the peculiarities of alliances, the dispersal of party forces and the effect of candidates' personalities on many municipalities and communities.

It is equally difficult to accurately estimate PASOK's loses and the gains of the other parties, specifically of New Democracy and the KKE. In any eventuality, in the great cities the party of the extreme left [KKE] appears to have gained a larger percentage than that of New Democracy. This fact has, since yesterday, become important in PASOK-KKE relations, because the extreme left is increasing its pressure for "broader" collaboration with the government while the majority party is demonstrating an increasing inability to resist KKE demands.

On the part of New Democracy, it is indicative that this party was unable to exploit its noticeable election gains by having more mayors and community leaders elected compared to 1978. On the contrary, it lost many municipalities, and this has allowed PASOK to boast about an increase in the municipal authorities affiliated to it and gloss over the loss it has suffered in total election strength.

New Democracy's inability to exploit its percentages was primarily due to two reasons: 1. To bad choices and the dispersal of its strength in many cities where two or even more of its candidates ran for election. 2. The PASOK-KKE cooperation in many of the municipalities and communes through the nomination of joint candidates for the first round of the election.

In giving analytical facts to the press on who was elected, the government spokesman, in summarizing, stated:

"A total of 89 mayors were elected from among PASOK candidates either with PASOK's own votes or through cooperation 'with other democratic forces.' New Democracy elected 34 and the KKE elected 10."

He added: "In the runoff elections on Sunday (for 140 mayors), PASOK will have candidates in 127 municipalities, New Democracy in 92 and the KKE in 25. In 40 municipalities where New Democracy-supported candidates were elected in 1978, 'candidates supported by PASOK' and 'other democratic forces' were elected in this election. The opposite -- a New Democracy candidate elected in a municipality held by a PASOK candidate -- did not occur anywhere."

The spokesman continued: "In respect to the communes, PASOK increased its influence from 695 communes in 1978 to 1,993; New Democracy dropped from 2,134 to 951 communes; and the KKE dropped from 114 to 109. The results from 3,000 communes are still not in."

During the discussion which followed with representatives of the press, the government spokesman was unable -- or he did not want -- to provide facts to demonstrate in exactly how many municipalities "members or friends of PASOK" were elected by votes cast exclusively by the ruling party's electoral supporters.

The fact that this information was not made available on the municipalities and, particularly, on the communes, where the government is presenting the election result as proof of the broad acceptance of its policies, has drawn the attention of political observers, as this is the only clue to the self-sufficiency of the ruling party and, conversely, of its dependence upon the KKE, which is already advertising its own contribution to the election results.

The KKE is attempting to present the election results as popular approval of its basic line, with participation in government policy with the "true change" as the goal.

BOMB FOUND IN AMERICAN UNION IN ATHENS

NC221648 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 22 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] Because PASOK did not implement its preelection announcements regarding the abolition of the U.S. bases in Greece, Greece's withdrawal from NATO and so forth, an anarchist organization under the name "Autonomy" decided to place bombs in various points in Athens, principally those of U.S. interest.

The above is mentioned, among other things, in the organization's leaflets which were found last evening behind the statue of Elevtherios Venizelos.

Earlier, unidentified people had telephoned newspaper offices and had said that the organization "Autonomy" had placed bombs in the U.S. Embassy in Athens and the offices of the American Union, which is housed in the building at No 22 Massalia Street. The newspapers informed the police and during the search that followed, nothing was found in the U.S. Embassy, whereas in the offices of the American Union a homemade dual firing [as published] bomb was indeed found. It had been placed under a table in the lounge of the American Union on the 6th floor. The bomb was handed to a bomb disposal expert while the Athens general security began investigations.

PAPANDREOU LEAVES MEETING WITH EVREN OPEN

[Text] During a press conference before 300 Greek and foreign (by four fifths) reporters in Brussels yesterday, the prime minister indirectly extended an invitation to Turkey for a dialogue -- a dialogue with Evren.

Considering that the "moratorium" has produced positive results (he made a pertinent statement), and obviously in a hurry to proceed into negotiations with NATO for the settlement of outstanding issues (the establishment of the Larisa headquarters and the definition of control boundaries in the airspace), in reply to a question by a Turkish reporter, Papandreou gave full explanations on the conciliatory stance which he as the government has now adopted regarding Turkey.

In fact, during these explanations, he went as far as to turn indirectly against almost all European parliamentary governments.

"I would like" -- he said verbatim -- "to make it clear that there are some misunderstandings. I never said that I will not meet or have a dialogue, when a dialogue is necessary, with the Turkish Government. Our positions, of course, my positions, those of my advisers and of my party, are well known. We waged a battle against the Greek dictatorship, but this does not mean that our relations with countries that do not have parliamentary democracy should be suspended because were we to proceed on that basis I think that in the end we would remain alone or almost alone. Truly the world is somewhat far from the ideals of popular sovereignty, democracy and social justice. Consequently, it is wrong to say that we are awaiting a change in Turkey in order to proceed on any dialogue."

In addition, increasingly smoothing his positions on NATO from interview to interview he disclosed that in meetings with the alliance's military leaders, he is trying to find solutions in order to "implement some commitments which the country has undertaken within the framework of the Rogers' agreement."

[Text] Romanian Foreign Trade Minister [as heard] Ion Stanciu accompanied by Romanian Ambassador in Athens Brad today called on Deputy Communications Minister Konstandinos Aslanis and discussed matters of cooperation between the two countries in the fields of transport and communications. PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER RETURNS FROM IRAQI VISIT

[Text] The Greek-Iraqi interstate economic committee will meet by the end of this year to decide on the specific sectors in which technical and economic cooperation between the two countries will be developed. A decision to this effect was taken during the four-day official visit to Iraq of Public Works Minister Apostolos Tsokhatzopoulos. The minister returned to Athens on Friday following a series of what have been described as "constructive talks" with senior Iraqi Government ministers.

At his meeting with the Iraqi foreign minister, Mr Tsokhatzopoulos handed him a letter for the Iraqi president from Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou. The Greek minister and his Iraqi interlocutors exchanged views on developments in the two countries, and discussed matters of common interest. The Iraqi side reaffirmed its deep appreciation for Greece's policy towards Arab problems, with special regard to the Palestinian issue. Mr Tsokhatzopoulos expressed the Greek Government's wish for a quick end to the Iraq-Iran war and for success of the efforts of the Iraqi leadership and people for the development and reconstruction of their country. The Greek minister briefed Iraqi officials of the forthcoming operation of an agency which will be responsible for the overseas activity of Greek technical firms, and both sides expressed appreciation of the work being accomplished by such concerns operating in Iraq.

EVREN SPEAKS ON CONSTITUTION IN ANKARA 24 OCT

[Speech by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren on 24 October in Ankara, carried on radio and television -- recorded]

[Excerpts] My dear citizens, more than 2 years have passed since the day I addressed you on 12 September 1980. During that time, I announced, in speeches I made in various places and at various times, a timetable for moving on to a democratic parliamentary order. You have seen that we carried out the stages of that timetable even before the dates we had set earlier. We have fulfilled every single one of our promises. Now, we are before our dear nation with the new constitution that will be submitted to the public.

After this constitution is accepted and approved by the Turkish nation, a new party law will be prepared, and thus political parties will be established in our country once again. Immediately after that, a new election law will be passed and general elections will be held in the autumn of 1983, or at the latest, in the spring of 1984. Thus the Turkish Grand National Assembly will be established and in this way a new period of democracy will begin in the life of our nation.

Undoubtedly, the things I told you from this loudspeaker and this screen 2 years ago, on 12 September 1980, are still fresh in your minds. I told you then and during the speeches I delivered in my news conferences and trips within the country that a very frightening future was being prepared for our nation and country; that by creating a power vacuum, certain circles had brought the Turkish state face to face with a very grave and vital threat.

The reasons and conditions which made the 12 September operation inevitable should not be forgotten even for a moment, because if we forget the past, we cannot understand the present satisfactorily. If we do not draw lessons from the past, from our history, then we cannot organize the future. History should be known well and lessons must be drawn from it. If we do not draw lessons from it, that history can recur. Those who do not want the recurrence of the past must draw lessons from the past. Otherwise, they cannot save themselves from the recurrence of history.

Unfortunately, some of us seem to have forgotten the disasters of the pre-12 September period. Yes, my dear citizens, some of us have forgotten the past since the day the present peace, tranquillity, law and order were restored. Either these people have weak memories, or they were not faced with a personal tragedy before the 12 September operation. Some of them, however, are trying to pull the measures we are trying to take -- to prevent the recurrence of history in the life of our state and nation -- toward their own personal or class interests in the belief that the Turkish Armed Forces will save the country from renewed disaster anyway. There is yet another group which is trying to make our citizens reject the measures we are trying to take for the future of our state, nation and country and thus prevent a recurrence of history. This group is trying to make our citizens reject these measures by making them forget the hell, suffering and desperation of the period prior to 12 September 1980. All this is with the aim of bringing Turkey to the point it was at then.

However, you my dear citizens, must not forget the reasons of the past if you do not want to relive those dark days of bloodshed, fire, death, suffering and desperation, those days of fear for your lives and desperation that the country was slipping through your fingers, those days of fear and worry for your homes, children, yourselves and your motherland. If you do not want to relive those dark days of bloodshed and fire, then you must not forget them.

We believe that a constitution is successful if it ensures the country's and nation's unity, the presence and power of the state and the citizens' maximum happiness.

We are confident that our dear nation agrees with us that the holy duty of truly protecting the Turkish Republic can be considered fulfilled only in this way, and that our nation will interpret the meaning of the armed forces' main duty along those lines in an approving manner.

I know that every Turkish citizen will ask himself the following questions in order to say yes to the constitution, which we prepared together with the Consultative Assembly and which we are submitting to the acceptance and approval of our dear nation: Is our state becoming stronger with this constitution? Will this constitution bring power to the state, peace and tranquillity to the country? Will our children be able to go to school without fear for their lives? Will our children be educated in a school in peace and tranquillity? Will they be able to study in peace and tranquillity? Will we be able to work in peace and tranquillity in our offices, shops and other work places under the protection of the state, the law, the rules and regulations so that we can earn our living? Will there be or will there not be persons who will shoot us while we go from home to work and back? Will we be able to sit in front of our windows in the evening without fear of being shot? Will we be able to sleep in our beds in our homes without having anarchists break down our doors, raid our homes or throw bombs into our homes?

Will our factories and other installations which have a great place in our country's economy be able to operate productively without raids, occupation by certain groups or without damage?

Our citizens will ask: Will we be able to live in complete Islamic brotherhood, regardless of our sects, as Muslims believing in the same and only God, without any sectarian provocations? Will we be able to carry out the requisites of our religion, rites and worship? Or will those who used to condemn and provoke us for our sectarian differences still find it possible to spread their evil?

Our citizens will ask: Will the unity of our nation, which is thousands of years old, be protected? Or will our nation be divided into such subgroups as classes and turned against each other as enemies? Will the unity of our motherland of 1000 years be protected? Or will there be persons who will try to divide our country -- which gives us life and bread -- and establish new states, fiefdoms or 'liberated' areas? Will there be people who will raid our villages, set fire to our towns, throw bombs in our cities and shoot at our houses in order to divide our country and give it away to our enemies, in order to leave us homeless, landless and without a country? Will we once again have "liberated" streets, "liberated" quarters and "liberated" cities where even state forces were afraid to enter? Will our young sons shoot each other daily with various weapons given to them? Will they kill each other in civil strife? Will we go to the funerals of 20-30 youths every day, the victims of terrorism and anarchy?

And lastly, our citizens will also ask: Will the order and tranquillity of our society be disrupted once again by internal and external enemies and, in that society, will we once again see the emergence of shortages, high cost of living and inflation in a collapsing economy?

These will surely be the first questions our citizens will ask themselves. These will be the first questions they will ask themselves -- and very justifiably -- us -- although we will not be there -- when they go to vote for the constitution. I answer these questions with confidence: My dear citizens, if you are careful in protecting this constitution, if you follow up to see that the laws that the constitution says must be passed are passed and if you patriotically and with love of the nation support the states and governments to be established with this constitution, then you will not relive those dark days of the pre-12 September period.

This constitution has become the target of unjustified, unnecessary and unfair criticism. On the other hand, certain circles are doing all they can to confuse the citizens.

You might be displeased about one or two points in the constitution which concern your profession. However, if you stop and think and assess well why those points were written the way they were, you will see they are right. You must appreciate that it would be wrong to reject the entire constitution just because you do not like a few of the 177 articles.

Trusting your love of the country and of the nation, your loyalty to the state and the republic, I vouch for this constitution. Close your ears to provocations and to deliberately confusing and erroneous allegations about the constitution.

A counterpropaganda campaign was started against this constitution even before its articles were announced. Furthermore, an opposition was started 3 to 4 hours after the preliminary draft of the constitution was announced by the Consultative Assembly Constitutional Committee on 1? July. A campaign was thus started without reading the preliminary draft, without understanding it, without having time to grasp the interrelations of and reasons for the articles. That campaign was started to frighten the Constitutional Committee, the Consultative Committee and even us.

We can divide the reasons for this opposition propaganda in the following manner in accordance with the various groups. Some groups are trying to get the citizens to reject the constitution, thus having them reject the legitimacy of the 12 September operation as well, and therefore making it appear as if the Turkish Armed Forces were defeated. All this is done in order to leave the country without a government. If they succeed, they think they will be able to divide the country into who knows how many parts, divide our nation, unsurp its independence and freedom, establish certain small (?slave) and puppet states on this eternally Turkish land and wipe the Turkish Republic from the face of the map. These are the sweet dreams they plan to achieve by means of their counterpropaganda. To divide the Turkish nation and enslave it, to divide the Turkish land and establish certain puppet governments is to wipe Ataturk's Turkish Republic from the face of the world. We gave them our answer on 12 September and after that. Let us repeat it once again: Even if one single patriotic Turk remains on this beloved land, these enemies of the Turks, these brainwashed traitors, will not be able to touch even one inch of Turkish land. They must know this full well and forget their treacherous aims.

Another group of people that started another anticonstitutional propaganda campaign in a bid to have it rejected are those who think that the interest of their circles and their class will be damaged by the provisions of this constitution, that they will lose their immunity and their superiority over all the other citizens, that their interests based on usurping the nation and the state will be damaged, that they might have to give an account of the illegal profits they have made and that their activities might be hindered. These persons have no interest whatsoever in the unity of the nation, the indivisibility of the Turkish nation, the future of the Turkish children, their future happiness and prosperity. They are only anxious about being able to continue their illegal profits and robberies. They are well aware of the fact that if a period of strong administrations begins and the administration of an impartial and powerful president is launched, the past period of profiteering will not be able to continue as before. The most beneficial atomsphere for these people is one in which the nation is divided, in which the government in a so-called position of power remains a confused spectator of incidents, anarchy and terror reign, and the organizations of anarchy remain on their payroll. This is why these persons have taken a stand against the constitution and against us and have launched an opposition campaign with all their might. They are under the impression that if the constitution is rejected, impotent and confused governments will return and they will be able to continue their treachery, robberies and profiteering while continuing their liens on these governments. No. Definitely no. I advise them to forget that life of treachery, robbery and profiteering they are so used to as soon as possible.

A third group of people are the politicians who could not have imagined even 10 percent of this constitution we present to the nation and who could not even have dreamed about such a constitution. The primary goal of the opposition campaign that they launched some time ago and which they are trying to slyly and secretly continue is not this constitution. It is the Turkish Armed Forces, which have presented this constitution. What the opposition campaign actually wants is not the rejection of this constitution. What they want is it to be adopted, but for us to be rejected. If we are rejected, they will come to power and presumably they will have the country in their hands and will govern it as they wish through this constitution, whose perfection they could not even dream of, and through the new powers granted to the executive branch.

My dear citizens, the Turkish Armed Forces was forced to intervene in the administration on 12 September 1980 for the third time in the last 30 years. Each time the Turkish Armed Forces returned to the barracks, and it is about to return this time as well. However, if those who derail the regime, democracy, the state once every 10 years and who brought the state to the brink of a destruction unprecedented in the history of the republic this last time tell us "You came, you eliminated anarchy, terror and secessionism. However, now your job is done. Return to your barracks and leave our state to us" instead of apologizing to the Turkish nation, we cannot see this logic and accept it. This state and this nation is not without owners. This state and this country has always belonged and will continue to forever belong to the Turkish nation. The Turkish Armed Forces, which is an indivisible part of this nation, serves this nation through its willpower. We have prepared and submitted to the nation a new constitution through the trust and beliefs we have derived from our beloved nation. However, it is beneficial to point out a fact. We will not abandon the future of the state, the country and the constitution and the life and future of the Turkish nation to the whims of certain ill-intentioned individuals and the enemies of the country. We could not prepare a constitution they wanted and aspired for.

Actually, there will always be those who criticize the constitution no matter what it entails. It is also a fact that those who criticize this constitution cannot agree among themselves. Therefore, it will be no surprise to us if there are a certain amount of negative votes. The important thing is that the constitution be accepted by a great majority of the Turkish nation. One should vote in favor of the constitution if one does not wish to relive the period prior to the 12 September operation, if one does not desire the state, the country and the nation to be divided, if one expects all citizens to live in tranquility and security and, as a consequence, if one wants a strong state, a happy nation and a regime in which democratic rights are used in a way compatible with individual, national and state concepts and if one wants to look to the future with hope and security.

My dear citizens, I will explain to you the various aspects of the constitution at the same time over the radio and television every day beginning tomorrow when I start my tour of various provinces. I wish you a happy future of security and tranquillity and extend my love and respects.

TURK-IS LEADER COMMENTS ON MINIMUM WAGE

TA231121 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1105 GMT 23 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, 23 Oct (AA) -- Chairman of the Turkish Confederation of Labor "Turk-Is" Sevket Yilmaz said the level minimum wage and severance indemnity could not be frozen.

Referring to current budget talks in the Consultative Assembly committee, Yilmaz said statements made in committee were not binding on his confederation, which had recently presented "package proposals" on these topics to the government. Yilmaz made the statement before meeting with members of the Turk-Is administrative board Saturday morning.

On reports that certain union leaders affiliated with Turk-Is intended to form a new political party, Yilmaz said political activity and setting up a political party were different things. The administrative board had not taken any decision on the matter, he added.

EVREN ISSUES MESSAGE ON OCCASION OF UN DAY

[Text] The 27th anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations is being celebrated. Head of State Gen Kenan Evren has issued a message on the occasion. He recalled that 51 states, among them Turkey, united 37 years ago with the aim of creating a happier future and a just and peaceful world at the international level.

General Evren said: Today, the United Nations, with its 157 members, has attained the character of a universal organization which has collected almost all of the countries in the world under its roof. These states which have united within the UN framework aim at ensuring international peace and security, developing human rights and fundamental freedoms, putting an end to racism and colonialism, realizing a balanced disarmament and securing better living conditions for humanity through economic and social development. We believe that the member countries should act in full realization of the great responsibilities that befall them if the historic goals set by the organization are to be attained.

Noting that the efforts exerted by the United Nations in ensuring peace and security were being appreciated, Evren added: In addition to efforts to secure world peace, detente and disarmament, the United Nations is continuing its activities aimed at establishing a more just and equitable new international economic system. We hope these efforts yield results in a short while and contribute to solving the problems of developing countries.

Turkey, which is proud to base its policy on great leader Ataturk's principle of "peace at home, peace in the world," is determined to continue its constructive and effective contributions to the organization's activities in line with the UN Charter and fully aware of the duties and responsibilities that befall the member countries.

Ministers On Anniversary

[Text] The UN-Turkish Association has organized a meeting in Ankara on occasion of the anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations. Speaking at the meeting, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said that the world wants peace and tranquillity but that great pessimism is currently reigning in the world. Noting that it was primarily armament, which has reached a very advanced stage, the rapid population increase, environmental pollution, consecutive wars and various economic problems which were among the reasons for this pessimism, Turkmen said that the United Nations is exerting efforts to dissipate this pessimism. Turkmen added that the United Nations is not sufficiently successful in its efforts because the organization does not have a willpower separate from the states that form it.

Also addressing the meeting, National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken said that the arms race and technological developments in this field have reached dimensions threatening human life. Bayulken added that, under these conditions, it has become inevitable for the United Nations organization to be transformed into a universal peace and joint defense system. Noting that many years ago Ataturk had succinctly expressed the UN goals through his principle of "peace at home, peace in the world," Bayulken added that Turkey has always made sincere contributions to the organization in line with this principle.

President of the UN-Turkish Association Prof Cahit Talat reported on the establishment and activities of the United Nations. He added that in accordance with a resolution adopted by the United Nations, the week following 24 October will be celebrated as disarmament week in Turkey as well.

GOVERNMENT SUPPORTS CYPRUS INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

[Text] Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Nazmi Akiman has said that Turkey supports the intercommunal talks which aim at finding a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem and which are held under the auspices of the UN secretary general as well as the secretary general's duty of good will.

Asked to comment on the reports that the EEC had drawn up a plan envisaging the establishment of a European peace force for Cyprus, Ambassador Akiman said that Turkey had no information about this issue. He added that the Community members, outside Greece, supported the intercommunal talks which aimed at finding a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem and which were held under the auspices of the UN secretary general.

Ambassador Akiman recalled that the Danish foreign minister had addressed the UN General Assembly on behalf of the Community on 28 September and had explained the EEC's policy regarding Cyprus along those lines.

Akiman said: Turkey's policy is obvious. The negotiations which aim at finding a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem have a certain established framework. Turkey supports the intercommunal talks which are held within this framework and under the auspices of the UN secretary general, as well as the secretary general's duty of good will.

TURKMEN SCORES GREECE'S BEHAVIOR TOWARD NATO

[Text] Ankara, 22 Oct (AA) -- Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said the behavior of Greece under Premier Andreas Papandreou within NATO was a "question mark" not only for Turkey, but for all the allies.

Answering questions on his ministry's budget during discussions on the draft budget for 1983 at the Consultative Assembly committee, Turkmen said NATO member countries were aware that from the viewpoint of its foreign policy in general, Greece behaved like a "non-aligned country." He told the committee on planning and the budget that Turkey had not set any pre-conditions for starting a dialogue with Greece, while Greece had proposed that both sides refrain from "provocative statements." Unfortunately, Turkmen said, Greece had not complied with its own proposal recently.

The foreign minister said, in response to a question from a committee member, his government supported the right of the Palestinian people for self-determination and to establish their own state, but added, "We are displeased, to say the least, with some activities of certain organizations affiliated with the PLO".

Turkish missions abroad were better protected through measures now being taken, Turkmen said, expressing satisfaction with the recent indications that international organizations were taking the problem of terrorism more seriously. He called for international cooperation against terrorist attacks on Turkish diplomats.

FORMER MINISTER ON AEGEAN, CYPRUS ISSUES

[Text] Bursa, 23 Oct (AA) -- Former Defense and Foreign Minister Hasan Esat Isik said in Bursa if the West is to discuss the questions of the Aegean and Cyprus, it should do so within NATO, and not in the EEC or during Greek-U.S. talks.

Isik said apparently unilateral acts of goodwill by Turkey, such as lifting of Notam 714 over the Aegean, saying yes to the return of Greece into the military wing of NATO and agreeing to a moratorium on adverse comments or acts, had been "insufficient to curb Greek ambitions."

If the United States has to give any kind of guarantee, it should be for the demilitarization of the Aegean Islands held by Greece and not for seconding Greek fait-accomplis carried out in the Aegean.

Apparently, Isik said, neither unilateral patience nor unilateral concessions and goodwill were of any use.

PAHR ON RELATIONS WITH U.S., POLISH SITUATION

AU251145 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 15-16 Oct 82 p 1

[Special DIE PRESSE report: "Relations With United States Untroubled"]

[Excerpts] In Sunday's "TV Press Hour" program Austrian Foreign Minister Pahr denied that the relations between Austria and the United States are troubled [gestoert]. To him, neither the fact that no ambassador to Austria has been appointed for 8 months nor the noninvitation of Chancellor Kreisky to the United States constitute negative peculiarities in these relations.

The foreign minister declared that the neutrals and nonaligned countries could not put up with the conditions in Poland. In reply to critical questions regarding Austria's introduction of obligatory visas for Poles, Pahr referred to the U.S. visa policy. He declared that it was necessary to keep entries under control, and assured that no one could leave Poland without an exit visa, anyhow.

BRAZILIAN FOREIGN MINISTER DEFENDS ARMS EXPORTS

[Special DIE PRESSE report on Brazilian Foreign Minister Guerreiro Vienna press conference -- no date given]

[Excerpts] Vienna -- "Austria is playing an important part in East-West relations, and also in the North-South dialogue." This is how Brazilian Foreign Minister Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro, who is paying an official visit to Austria, paid tribute to his host country at a press conference. He said that he discussed with his counterpart Pahr problems of an economic and political nature.

Asked to comment on the fact that Brazil is one of the largest arms exporters to the Third World, Saraiva Guerreiro declared that the Brazilian arms exports to these countries were "ridiculous compared with what the superpowers are supplying." However, he stressed in this context that Brazil never supplies arms if the balance of power between states would thereby be disturbed.

He does not see any problems in the relations between the Brazilian state and the church. Saraiva Guerreiro stressed in this context that "it is only natural for the government to be criticized sometimes." Brazil, he said, has 330 bishops, some of whom happen to hold critical opinions.

The Brazilian foreign minister finally turned to economic questions. In this context, he indicated the possibility of further import restrictions for 1983, designed to get the country's debts under control.

OPEC Projects Discussed

PA250135 Vienna OPECNA in Spanish 0534 GMT 23 Oct 82

[Text] Vienna, 22 Oct (OPECNA) -- The preliminary phase of the Mucanha Vuzi coal development project in Mozambique -- considered a worthy example of South-South cooperation -- is progressing according to plans, it was officially disclosed today in Vienna.

The OPEC Fund for International Development and the Brazilian Government are financing the project. Brazilian Foreign Minister Ramiro Elisio Saraiva Guerreiro received a report on the project during his visit to the OPEC Fund office in Vienna.

OPEC Fund General Director Ibrahim Shihata welcomed Saraiva Guerreiro and praised Brazil's role in South-South cooperation and expressed the hope that cooperation between Brazil and the OPEC Fund will increase.

Shihata talked about Mozambique's coal development project and Cape Verde's telecommunications project, which the OPEC Fund and Brazil are financing.

The coal project will determine the technical, economic and financial possibilities of coal exploitation in the Muchanha Vuzi region. They are also interested in improving Cape Verde's telecommunications system.

Shihata said that "South-South solidarity and cooperation can help increase developing countries' self-sufficiency and develop more equitable international economic relations."

There are other areas of cooperation in which they can participate, such as commercial exchange, joint production and development of energy, scientific, technological, food and agricultural resources.

The Brazilian foreign minister said that the OPEC Fund is an important asset to international cooperation which agrees with Brazil's philosophy.

Saraiva Guerreiro expressed his gratitude to the OPEC Fund. He said that "he could not visit Vienna without calling on the OPEC Fund office."

Shihata was accompanied by other joint directors of the OPEC Fund and Saravia Guerreiro by Geraldo do Nascimento de Silva, Brazilian ambassador to Austria.

A Brazilian official told OPECNA that "for Brazil, Mozambique's coal project is a model example of South-South cooperation."

DREDGES FOR SOVIET GAS PIPELINE PROJECT

AU221906 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 22 Oct 82 p 2

[Excerpt] Linz -- On the occasion of a visit by [Austrian Communist Party Chairman] Franz Muhri to the Linz shipyard, Board of Directors Chairman Wild gave an outline of production and sales of the Austrian shipyard corporation. In this context, he referred to the good connections with the Soviet Union, stressing that in the past few years the corporation has succeeded in securing additional Soviet "customers." In addition to the 165 ships which have already been delivered to the Soviet Union or are still under construction, orders for large dredges for the construction of natural gas pipelines and for grain elevators were obtained. A project providing for the delivery of refrigerator ships for vegetables is now under discussion.

NUCLEAR SAFETY AGREEMENT WITH CSSR REPORTED

DW251203 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 25 Oct 82 p 14

[Text] Austria is to be the first West European country to receive protection against reactor accidents in an Eastern state. During his state visit to Vienna in November, Czechoslovak party chief Gustav Husak will sign an agreement according to which both states will guarantee the mutual exchange of information on planned construction work, safety regulations, warning plans and fallout data in the vicinity of nuclear powerplants. The CSSR currently has one nuclear powerplant in operation and one under construction. Two additional plants are planned in south Bohemia and south Slovakia. According to information from the "Charter 77" civil rights movement, two serious nuclear accidents occurred in the CSSR in 1976 and 1977, as a result of which radioactive gas entered the atmosphere and two workers died. Power output statistics for 1979 indicate that real power production was less than 50 percent of technical capacity. This shows that the reactors were in limited operation for long periods or were even shut down.

PAHR CRITICIZES SFRY'S TRAVEL-CURBING MEASURES

[Excerpts] Vienna (AZ, APA) -- The latest measures taken by the Yugoslav Government contradict the decisions of Helsinki. This was stated by Austrian Foreign Minister Pahr on Sunday in the "TV Press Hour" program [carried by Vienna Domestic Television Service at 1000 GMT on 24 October]. He declared that Austria would take appropriate steps to protest the travel obstructions.

"If Austria has adopted a very reserved attitude on this matter to date, then this has been because Vienna is interested in stability in this neighbor country," Pahr said. Asked about the latest developments in the United Nations, Pahr declared that they give cause for concern about the future of the United Nations and its affiliated organizations. In regard to obligatory visas for Polish citizens, Pahr pointed out that the United States, although surely being very open-minded regarding the immigration of refugees, nevertheless has not abolished obligatory visas for such refugees.

Exceedingly rigorous checks are currently being carried out by the Yugoslavs at the border. Controls are mainly focused on coffee, of which no more than 0.75 kilogramms may be imported, and on Yugoslav dinars, the importation of which is also restricted.

Gas Coupons Withdrawn

AU251252 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Text] The Yugoslav authorities today unexpectedly withdrew the authorization of the Austrian Automobile Club [OeAMTC] to issue gas coupons for persons traveling to Yugoslavia. New instructions must be awaited, it was said. The measure is obviously connected with the most recent 20 percent devaluation of the dinar as a result of which gas coupons became cheaper in Austria.

According to an OeAMTC spokesman's statement, there is some risk in traveling to Yugoslavia until the situation is clarified.

Since the OeAMTC is forbidden to sell coupons and foreigners can only acquire gasoline with coupons in Yugoslavia, there is now virtually no possibility of obtaining gasoline in the neighboring country.

The ARBOe [Socialist Motorists Association] points out in a press release today that there is an opportunity for motorists to purchase Yugoslav gas coupons at the border crossings on the Yugoslav side. These coupons can only be paid for with foreign currency, however. The amount of 13.3 liters of premium gasoline can now be purchased for a 500 dinar coupon; 143 schillings must be paid for this coupon.

KREISKY ON AUSTRIAN ARMY FALL MANEUVERS

AU251617 [Editorial Report] Vienna Domestic Television Service in German at 2050 GMT on 22 October carries a 20-minute report by Reserve Major Walter Selevec on the Austrian Army's fall maneuvers held 17-21 October in the Woergl region of Tirol. According to the moderator introducing the report, the maneuvers were the second largest in the history of the Austrian Army, with 14,000 soldiers, 165 armored vehicles, 1,600 other vehicles and 60 horses participating.

Selevec analyzes the maneuvers in great detail, arriving at the following conclusions: The morale of the soldiers was surprisingly high; small firearms -- "assault rifle 77" and "machinegun 74," both made by the Austrian Steyr Company -- are fully up to international standards, although there are still some old weapons -- such as the Russian "MP 410 submachinegun" -- in use; heavy infantry weapons are inadequate, heavy mortars are lacking; artillery is outdated -- some guns dating back to the Korean war -- range and firing speed are inadequate, and so are ammunition stores in some cases.

There are no antiaircraft and antitank missiles; available antitank weapons have an inadequate range (400-800 meters as against 2,000 of modern antitank and tank weapons); the Austrian "Cuirassier" tank destroyer is good, but its weapon's range is only 1,000 meters, and the Army has 100 fewer than it should have (owing to lack of funds); Austrian air defense weapons consist of 72 3.5-cm antiaircraft guns with a range of only 3,000 meters, so that there is virtually no defense against planes flying above that altitude; the Army has no interceptors -- its 23 Saab jets are usable only as training planes or as close-support fighters, and they will have to be decommissioned by 1986; there are some 400 groups of pillboxes but it will take another 25 years before all required fortifications are completed; there are difficulties in maintaining the militia structure of the Army because three-quarters of the draftees prefer to serve 8 months in one stretch, so as not to have to participate in militia exercises in subsequent years; the interim target of a 186,000-man militia army by 1986 will thus only be reached by the early nineties, when the militia army is scheduled to reach its full strength of 300,000 men.

Noting that Defense Minister Roesch refused to comment on the maneuvers, Selevec stresses that Chancellor Kreisky — for the first time in 5 years -- took a stance on national defense: In reply to the question of what the Austrian Army is capable of doing today, Kreisky said: [Begin recording] Our army is not capable of going up against a superior enemy -- we are not capable of that, whether in terms of equipment or otherwise, but this holds true not only for us but also for other small countries which are better armed than we are. However, wars are not only waged by superior powers but often by proxy; military conflicts are provoked on the periphery of politics, so to speak. And a country like Austria must be able to defend itself against such military actions by proxy, and that is indeed feasible, expecially when the defense can rely on the support of the people. Surely it would be conceivable for us to spend more money on national defense, but in view of the many tasks facing us I believe that the amount we are spending now on national defense is relatively adequate. Nevertheless, I believe that certain endeavors will become necessary in the future so as to equip the Austrian Army as well as possible. [end recording]

Asked about the possibility of buying interceptors, Kreisky said: [Begin recording] These proposals for buying interceptors all entail a tremendous amount of money which runs into the billions, and at the moment we are not in a position to allot such amounts for this purpose. Naturally, it is argued that the French are ready to buy Austrian goods in turn, -- I won't deny that -- but the revenues for such goods will go elsewhere while the federal treasury must pay for the interceptors from taxpayers money, and I believe that we do not have these funds at the moment. The question is whether there are any interim solutions -- I am not in a position to judge that -- but other countries do not have the latest interceptor models either. [end recording]

Asked whether he could conceive of any government initiative regarding the use of antitank and antiaircraft guided missiles by the Austrian Army, Kreisky said:

[Begin recording]: I did try — long ago, when I was still foreign minister — to bring about a change in the allies' attitude in this respect, but the Soviet Union always very vehemently rejected any modifications of the relevant State Treaty article, and apparently its attitude has not changed to date. [end recording]

Summing up, Selevec says that 98 percent of the Austrians support national defense in principle, the soldiers are well motivated, and with the "zone defense concept" Austria for the first time has a realistic defense doctrine, but the constant shortage of funds prevents these sound prerequisites from being adequately transformed into military strength. After the big fall maneuver, military experts are agreed that "Austria could handle military defense only to a limited extent," he says.

CHANCELLOR KOHL INTERVIEW ON ECONOMY, EUROPE

PM251307 Paris LE FIGARO in French 21 Oct 82 pp 1-2

["Exclusive" interview with FRG Chancellor Helmut Kohl by Jean-Paul Picaper in Bonn 20 October]

[Text] Question: How much importance do you attach to Franco-German relations?

Answer: Franco-German relations are one of the foundations on which our policy rests, one of the great results of postwar European history.

You will feel that when we welcome President Mitterrand and his delegation here in Bonn today and tomorrow, just as it was perfectly natural for me to visit Paris first in my capacity as new FRG chancellor. As the Palatinate and former minister-president of a land which borders on France, I have always attached particular importance to Franco-German relations.

What Adenauer and De Gaulle started more than 20 years ago, and has been developed since not only between the governments but between the populations of the two countries, is cooperation and reliable friendship irrespective of changes in the people who assume political responsibility in our countries. The Elysee treaty sealed that cooperation.

The fact that Europe is now closely united is largely due to the fact that our two peoples showed that they were capable of cooperating and reconciling their interests not only at the bilateral level, but primarily in the EC framework, and also in the framework of the Western alliance and during economic summits.

In my government declaration I stressed the special importance which Franco-German cooperation, with its great tradition, has for Europe.

It is certainly not just a question of cooperation at the government level. It also applies to the several thousand sister cities which now exist, exchanges between universities and, above all, meetings between young people. For instance, the Franco-German Youth Office has already enabled more than 4 million young Frenchmen and Germans to become better acquainted and understand each other better.

That also applies to the economic sphere: Today each of our countries is the other's most important trade partner. The same is true of common security. We are still extending and developing our exchange of opinions in that sphere.

French and German enterprises also want to join together to meet the technological challenges by increasing industrial cooperation. We have already been practicing that cooperation for years in the sphere of space and flight navigation, and we are having preliminary discussions in other spheres.

Contributing to Europe's Growth

But a great deal still needs to be done: One important condition which is necessary for mutual understanding between our peoples is that each should know the other's language. Above all, we must make our younger generation understand the opportunities offered to it by learning and mastering the other country's language. I, for instance, am very happy that one of my sons is able to study in France.

The celebration of the 20th anniversary of the Elysee treaty next January and all the events which will be held on that occasion will enable our peoples to pay tribute to the work accomplished and to give new impetus to cooperation in all spheres.

Question: Some French observers fear a strengthening of the German currency and hence a weakening of the franc. Is that hypothesis justified? Will you maintain the European Monetary System [EMS]?

Answer: The FRG Government regards the EMS as a major step toward European monetary integration. Over years characterized by disruptions in the international economy, the exchange rates among the currencies of the participating states have been able to evolve in a relatively stable manner thanks to the EMS and that has facilitated the process of adapting balances of payments in the EC. Thus, the FRG Government is determined to pursue close cooperation with its partners in the EMS.

The priority objective of German economic policy is the return to appropriate economic growth and the elimination of unemployment. The FRG Government is, therefore, not pursuing any restrictive or even deflationary policy. Quite the reverse: By our growth and employment policy we also want to contribute to a healthy growth in Europe. Those objectives are shared by the French and German economic policies.

Thus, the FRG Government does not see how dangerous tension could subsequently arise in the development of exchange rates between the mark and the franc. Our new government program creates the necessary margin for new interest rate reductions to encourage new investment and, at the same time, help the exchange rates to calmly evolve within the EMS.

Question: Are you determined to implement the two parts of NATO's dual decision?

Answer: There is not the slightest doubt about that. The Soviet leaders must realize that the negotiations now going on in Geneva offer them a great -- but also the only -- chance of preventing the deployment of the U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe. But for that to be achieved the Soviet Union must in turn abandon its medium-range missiles which are already threatening us.

Strengthening the European Parliament's Role

We want to establish and stabilize the military balance at the lowest possible arms level. Thus, the United States would first like to achieve a reduction in the Soviet lead in the arms sphere through practical results from the negotiations. That is the aim of the Western proposal for a "zero option" to which the FRG Government remains firmly committed. But if the negotiations do not succeed, we will also implement the second part of the dual NATO decision by accepting the modernization of the U.S. weapons.

Question: You have expressed the hope that Europe will speak with one voice at the end of our century. What will you do to step up European integration?

Answer: European integration is one of our most important future tasks. What we must do now is give it new impetus, draw new paths leading to unification, including political unification. That requires, for instance, an improvement in the existing EEC institutions' capacity for action. The Council of Ministers must once again regard itself more as a community institution and allow itself to be guided by common European interests. Moreover, the European Parliament's role must be strengthened.

The German-Italian initiative for a Europe act aims to help give a new perspective to the process of European unification.

When our turn comes to chair the EC on 1 January, we will work particularly for the adoption of that Europe act, which will increase the Community's cohesion and European political cooperation, and for progress in the negotiations with Portugal and Spain to expand the Community in the interest of the security and stability of West Europe as a whole, and above all, to strengthen the economic bases which will enable the Community to pursue its development at the political level.

Europe-United States: Restoring Confidence

I am aware that the Community alone cannot solve the serious unemployment problems with the means at its disposal. It is primarily the member states themselves which must accomplish that task through their economic policies. But in cases where the Community is called upon to make decision, the risk of each country being placed in a minority will probably exert a beneficial constraint which will encourage compromise.

In my view, it is a priority political task and an absolute necessity to find joint answers to the challenges posed by the difficult international economic situation. We ought to develop that feeling of solidarity.

Question: What kind of relations will this Europe have with the United States? What do you think of the trade conflict between the United States and Europe?

Answer: The Europeans and the Americans agree that the Western alliance is "a community of equal partners" in which nobody dominates or is dominated. Such a community of equal partners will develop all the more naturally if the voice of the West European countries carries more weight. And that is the reason why not only are the West European countries trying to speak with one voice as often as possible, but also why the United states has from the start also given its support to that process of West European unification. There has recently been some friction on both sides in the Euro-American friendship. Mutual confidence must come back into its own and for that to be achieved, the two sides must become fully aware once again of the prime importance which common interests have. I will visit Washington very soon to contribute to that.

Let us now turn to the second part of your question: The problems which exist in the steel sphere, in agricultural trade and with regard to the Europe-Siberia gas pipeline deal all result from differing economic and regional interests. In the future, there will also be intensive consultations between the Europeans and Americans relating to the commercial sector, the objective being to ensure that differences of opinion on some individual questions do not damage the foundations of a joint political and economic strategy. In that context, I would like to recall, among other things, the consultations which took place in early October in La Sapiniere in Canada at the informal NATO meeting. Those consultations made it possible to reach broad agreement on the need to draw up common lines for the West's action toward the East, including East-West economic relations.

Question: On which main areas will your economic policy concentrate?

Answer: I have taken office as FRG chancellor in the middle of the most serious economic crisis since the FRG was founded. That crisis has a world dimension but it is also due to mistakes made in our own country. The starting points for my economic policy are therefore already given, namely: The struggle against low growth and unemployment by increased effort in our own country and by close cooperation with partner countries on that policy.

I am aware that an economic improvement must begin at the national level. And that is why the FRG Government has adopted an emergency program which gives priority to the stimulation of private and public investment to enable new jobs to be created. We are going to restructure public sector spending and revenue with a view to promoting growth. The main axes will be as follows: increased public spending on investment; tax relief, especially for small and medium enterprises; new incentives in the construction sector; encouraging new technologies; an increase in the availability of apprenticeships; an energy supply which is rational and advantageous as regards cost; and the pursuit of the stability policy. In order to implement this program, it will be necessary to gradually stabilize the state budget and simultaneously reduce subsidies and benefits.

Effective cooperation at the bilateral level with partners within the EEC, in the family of Western industrialized countries and also within the different UN organizations is equally important. We are all dependent on an effective division of labor at the international level and on a stable financial and monetary system.

Kohl Views Talks

DW251349 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2140 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Interview with Chancellor Helmut Kohl by reporter Friedrich Nowottny in the "Report From Bonn" program; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] It seems that the agreed security cooperation was the most important point of discussion between you and the French president. Doesn't this give a completely different emphasis to German-French relations?

[Answer] There are two significant points in our consultations, the 40th since the conclusion of the German-French friendship treaty in 1963. The first point is not concrete, but is the equally significant atmosphere of the talks. We have a new FRG Government made up of different political party relationships -- these are most important points to be considered -- and yet we had an unusually friendly beginning for our cooperation in a very good atmosphere.

Secondly, we took another look at the German-French friendship treaty and did something that has been planned for 19 years, namely, included our common security policy in our considerations and discussions.

[Question] The French president said that geography dominates strategy. In connection with French neutron weapons, does this mean that these weapons will also be deployed on German soil with the French troops stationed in Germany?

[Answer] Regarding the first part of your question, it is a very logical consequence of all policy for geography and geopolitics to dominate tactical and strategic action. The Rhine is barely 300 meters wide in the area of Strasbourg. This means that what affects Alsace and Lorraine naturally also affects those areas of the Federal Republic such as the Rhineland-Palatinate, Saarland or that part of Baden belonging to Baden-Wuerttemberg. What you mentioned in the second part of your question was neither hinted at nor discussed. The issue of neutron weapons didn't play a role at all.

[Question] So there will be no deployment in the Federal Republic?

[Answer] That didn't play a role at all. We didn't discuss it at all. There was no such request and no discussion on the subject.

[Question] Won't security cooperation with France irritate the United States, which has always stressed its special position in the Federal Republic and in West Berlin?

[Answer] I don't think so: I even think the opposite is true. It is a long-standing and very understandable demand of the United States -- of all administrations over the past 30 years -- that the Europeans should kindly -- and I understate that -- come to and do what is good for them. In taking note of today's statement, the United States can be most satisfied that the French, the French Government, have also expressly encouraged the Federal Republic and its government to stand by both parts of NATO's counterarmament decision -- the first part which approves verifiable international disarmament efforts; as well as the second part, which refers to deployment if no progress is made toward disarmament. I much rather think that since the Americans often rightly say to the Europeans: You speak of a division of labor, but what do you actually do? -- then the Americans can only, and certainly will, appreciate the fact that the Germans and French are cooperating more here in the center of Europe. This cooperation is in no way aimed against the Americans -- I want to say that clearly; it is cooperation which compliments cooperation with the United States and which should simultaneously promote the Europeans' efforts.

No 'Bilateral Alliance'

[Excerpts] Bonn, 22 Oct (DPA) -- In response to a DPA inquiry today, Federal Defense Ministry spokesman Juergen Reichardt gave assurances that no agreements on nuclear weapons were made during the Franco-German consultations in Bonn. Reichardt described any such speculation as "absurd and groundless." He said that the French had not made any offer in this connection.

In the talks between Defense Minister Woerner and his French counterprart, Charles Hernu, the subject of a possible reduction in the number of French troops in the Federal Republic, which had been hinted at in press reports, was not mentioned. Reichardt said that no attempts were being made towards a "bilateral alliance" between France and the Federal Republic. Despite the special relationship with Paris, Bonn wanted to cultivate close cooperation with every NATO ally. Reichardt said that there would be no "solo efforts" in German defense policy.

Reichardt told DPA that the nuclear power of the United States remained the basis for the Federal Republic's security. "This cannot and will not change." He stressed that the fact that other European powers -- France and Britain -- were in the alliance "increases our security."

MISCHNICK ON FDP PROBLEMS, NEW ELECTIONS

DW251539 Bonn DIE WELT in German 23-24 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[Interview with FDP Bundestag faction chief Wolfgang Mischnick by reporter Stefan Heydeck; date and place not given]

[Text] WELT: Mr Mischnick, are you afraid that the FDP could disintegrate at, or subsequent to the Berlin party congress?

Mischnick: No. The FDP has stood and overcome graver crises. However, I don't underrate the current convulsions. I want to convince those fellow party members who are making it difficult for themselves that only cohesion can have a creative influence on politics. Those who are seeking their fortune outside the party in their own organizational form are indulging in unrealistic hopes. There is no room for two liberal parties within the political reality of the FRG. They would share the blame for a considerable weakening of political liberalism and for attempts by other, by no means liberal, forces to take over.

WELT: You refused to run as candidate for the party chairmanship although you are considered to be an "integrating figure." How do you intend to achieve agreement among the quarreling wings?

Mischnick: First of all, I see my tasks as lying within the faction. I will devote my strength mainly to this. I expect Berlin to show the direction of further work. I am firmly convinced that the democratic decisions of the majority at the party congress will be respected by most of my colleagues. The FDP Bundestag faction will have to express the full extent of liberal convictions through its parliamentary work. We will thoroughly discuss within the party our program's aims, not only regarding budget and fiscal policies, but also regarding foreign, security, legal, domestic and environmental policies. These must be explained to the voters in an understandable way.

WELT: You are charged with pushing, together with Genscher and Lambsdorff, the FDP to change the coalition. Were you under pressure? What were the reasons for your decision?

Mischnick: During the more than 35 years of my political life, I have never allowed myself to be pressured and I will not yeild to any pressure in the future, let alone exert pressure on others. I try to make my decisions based on facts. This was true in this case.

After Chancellor Schmidt terminated cooperation with the FDP on 17 September, it was necessary to react quickly. We liberals know from our own history that if we don't muster the strength and courage for political action, it will only be to the advantage of others. That was the case, for example, when the grand coalition was established in 1966 in the Federal Government and in Baden-Wuerttemberg. A party caught up in disagreement is quickly caught offside.

WELT: Do you think that new elections will be necessary once the new Federal Government has been set up according to the Basic Law?

Mischnick: I expressed my opinion on 9 September when the first hint concerning new elections was given by former Chancellor Schmidt. Since then, media comment has increasingly shared my reservations. My consistent warning is that we shouldn't interpret the Basic Law according to party political considerations, but that we should act according to its spirit and content. The agreement on new elections suggested by Helmut Schmidt was not in line with the meaning of the Constitution. I have the same reservations regarding 6 March, the date for new elections.

As long as there is a stable majority in parliament, the government should continue throughout the entire legislative period, that is, 4 years. Proposals to change the Constitution so as to make earlier elections easier seem very questionable to me. This would mean changing a basic idea of our Constitution and creating the danger of conditions like those of Weimar.

You must most carefully differentiate between basic reservations concerning constitutional rights and the promise to hold new elections. As matters look today, most of the deputies are for new elections. I will accept this vote as a democratic politician. I expect others, however, to also adhere to democratic rules of the game.

WELT: Isn't there the danger that the FDP, as in Bavaria and Hesse, will remain under the 5-percent mark on 6 March so that conditions like those in Hamburg will exist in the Federal Government, thus making governing impossible?

Mischnik: The FDP still has the task of convincing the voter by its actions of the need for the balancing element of a liberal party. The examples of Hamburg and Hesse demonstrate that if the FDP is replaced by others in parliament, stable conditions will no longer exist. The Alternatives understand very well why the FDP is to be their target. Wherever no liberals exist with their contributions to reasoned progress in our democracy, there is fertile soil for radicalization.

WELT: After losing his office, former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt called the FDP an "annoying coalition partner"...

Mischnik: The former chancellor's transformation seems rather strange to me. For 13 years the FDP was apparently good enough as a partner to the SPD in implementing policy. I am astounded how with such language the Social Democrats are downgrading their own achievements in the government after the fact.

The truth is different. We liberals supported Social Democratic Chancellor Schmidt for 9 years, although the SPD wasn't the strongest faction in the German Bundestag. For awhile we were subjected to the charges of the CDU/CSU. We considered this alliance to be necessary for political reasons -- particularly regarding necessary foreign political action.

Through all these years the FDP stood by the compromises it negotiated. The liberals will not deny their role today. We will not criticize those things which still exist from the social-liberal government. The liberal climate in our country, our peace policy, and progress in legal and environmental policies -- all these are achievements we are proud of. They will remain the bases of our future work.

SCHMIDT REPORTEDLY WON'T BE CANDIDATE ON 6 MAR

[Text] Bonn 26 Oct (DPA) — According to well-informed SPD circles, former Federal Chancelor Helmut Schmidt has decided against standing as chancellor candidate for the SPD in the elections to the Bundestag planned for 6 March. The sources reported today that Schmidt announced his decision to the meeting of the SPD Presidium on Monday evening in Bonn. His decision has not been officially confirmed. Schmidt intends to announce and explain his decision this afternoon before the SPD Bundestag parliamentary group.

During talks prior to the meeting of the Presidium and in consultations of this leadership body, the SPD leadership, including party Chairman Willy Brandt, tried once again to change Schmidt's mind with regard to his decision not to stand as a candidate for chancellor. Schmidt had also held discussions earlier with close colleagues of the latter part of his chancellorship. The government leader, who is almost 64-years old, was unanimously requested by the Bundestag party group and the SPD leadership bodies during the days following 1 October, when he was voted out in the Bundestag, to lead the SPD in fresh elections.

Following Schmidt's refusal, SPD Presidium member Hans-Jochen Vogel (56) and Northrhine-Westphalian Minister-President Johannes Rau (52), who is deputy SPD chairman along with Schmidt, are considered to be the party's most favored candidates to lead the party. It was learned that the SPD leadership intends to make a recommendation for the nomination of the SPD chancellor candidate by the time the "minor congress" of the SPD leading bodies is held on 18-19 November in Kiel. The official nomination will then follow at the 21 January congress in Dortmund.

STRAUSS CONFIRMED AS BAVARIAN MINISTER-PRESIDENT

[Text] Munich 26 Oct (DPA) — Bavarian Minister-President Franz Josef Strauss was confirmed in office for a further 4 years today. Strauss (67), who has been the Bavarian government leader since 1978, received 125 out of 195 votes cast in the Munich Land diet. Sixty-one deputies voted against, four vote cards had someone else's name on them and five were considered invalid.

In the new diet, in which only 2 parties are represented, the CSU has 133 deputies and the SPD 71. Four years ago Strauss likewise received 125 votes, with 71 votes against and 4 invalid.

AID FOR ALGERIAN CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

[Paul Balta report: "France Will Build First Section of Algiers Subway"]

[Text] France will build the first section of the Algiers subway -- 12 out of the network's total 64 km -- and two railroad sections. It will very shortly sign a major sectorial agreement with Algiers on transport similar to the one concluded in June in the sphere of city planning and housing, it was stated on the evening of Tuesday 12 October at the end of the 2-day Franco-Algerian joint commission meeting held in Paris. Algerian circles even specified that French Transport Minister Charles Fiterman will visit Algiers in early November "to complete the agreements and sign the documents."

Indeed, one of the working groups which was still meeting while Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert and Algerian Planning Minister Abdelhamid Brahimi were attending a reception at the National Center for Foreign Trade, reached an agreement on conditions governing the financing of the transport projects. The details are not yet known, but it is known that finance will be credited [bonifie] by the French public authorities. The total value of the subway contract is around Fr 8 billion, of which Fr 4.5 billion is recoupable [rapatriable]. It should be remembered that Sofretu, a subsidiary of the independent Parisian transport system, had already won the contract to design the project (Fr 150 million) and build a tunnel (Fr 76 million). The system should come into operation in 1985 and transport some 20,000 people between Bab el Oued and Maison Carree.

Since Algeria has planned the construction of 1,500 km of railroad for the next 10 years, linking Algiers to the Moroccan border and to the eastern part of the country, France will be entrusted with two 370 km sections. They will be Ramdane-Jael-Jijel and Ain Mlila-Tebessa. The value of the whole project will apparently be around Fr 14 billion. In addition, other projects apparently look favorable, notably Constantine Airport and various port development and road infrastructure works. Finally, discussions are underway in Algiers -- although it is not possible to predict their outcome -- on the sale of civilian and military aircraft and helicopters to Algeria.

In the agricultural sphere, the two sides studied the possibility of achieving a long-term agreement which might make it possible to doube French agricultural and food exports to Algeria. France, whose exports in that sector reached Fr 1.3 billion in 1982, apparently hopes for an annual rate of Fr 2.5 billion starting in 1985.

Five Working Groups

In the construction sphere, the convention signed in June related to the construction of 60,000 houses in 3 years worth a total of 8.7 billion. On 25 October, the sector committee is due to meet in Paris to discuss the content of future programs and the spirit of cooperation in that sector. The Algerians -- who plan to build 100,000 houses per year -- think that the French could build around one-third of them, representing some Fr 10 billion. They apparently want the French authorities concerned to encourage the grouping of medium-sized regional enterprises which could be entrusted with part of the program.

In order to ensure the success of the negotiations, he joint commission had set up five working groups. The first, called the "horizontal group," which had an overall view of the problems, dealt with coordination. It also had the job of defining the new principles relating to the transfer of technology and technical cooperation and of examining finance problems. In addition, it drew up new formulas for ensuring quality work in the interest of both the supplier and buyer. Finally it examined the question of settling disputes.

The other working groups were as follows: agriculture and fishing, energy and industry, transport and infrastructure and construction and housing. The spirit which prevailed in the meetings was that of abandoning the "prefabricated" solution and "viewing cooperation as an integrated operation which goes from the technical study of the project to the use of the product," which presupposes more extensive coordination between the two sides and a real transfer of technolocy accompanied by vocational training.

UGANDAN REFUGEES IN RWANDA TO RECEIVE ASSISTANCE

[Text] Paris, Oct 22 (AFP) -- The French Government is drawing up an aid programme for the 30,000 people who have fled from Uganda into Rwanda since the beginning of the month with accounts of "harassment" by Ugandan authorities.

The Cooperation and Development Ministry has hosted two meetings this week with representatives of other ministries and French humanitarian organisations to coordinate emergency relief.

After a meeting yesterday reliable sources said the government had agreed to pick up the bill for the cost of flying out medical supplies provided by relief organisations.

A first load of medical supplies is expected to leave early next week after a request for help from the Rwandan authorities.

This latest wave of refugees from Uganda consists of people of Rwandan descent, many of whom have lived in what is now Uganda for several generations.

The refugees said that they fled to escape harassment by members of the ruling Uganda People's Congress.

PCF'S MARCHAIS INTERVIEW ON PCF-CPC TALKS

LD251114 Paris Domestic Service in French 0645 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Telephone interview by announcer Arlette Chabot in Paris with Georges Marchais, PCF general secretary, in Beijing -- live]

[Excerpt] [Question] Good morning Mr Marchais, and thank you for coming straight from your lunch with Deng Xiaoping to answer our questions. First, I would like to ask you how, in your opinion, has this Franco-Chinese reconciliation between the two countries' Communist Parties become possible, how do you account for it, is it the effect of time or is it the result of Mao's disappearance?

[Answer] This has been a long process you know. We started discussions with our Chinese friends some time ago, but here the discussion has been frank, friendly and open. We have not tried to (?shy away from) anything. We have examined of course those points on which we have different positions, and of course we have examined all the points on which our views converge. The result of this is a very large field of convergence, both...

[Question, interrupting] I would like to ask you on exactly which points your views converge, and, especially, on which points do the two Communist Parties diverge?

[Answer] Let us look first of all at what seems to me the most important thing, that is to say, the points on which we converge.

[Question] Go ahead.

[Answer] Well, we agree on the need to act in favor of the struggle for peace and disarmament. We agree on respect for the independence of states and for their security. We agree on the struggle for social progress, democracy, socialist democracy, socialist legality and of course we consider the need for a new international economic order to be very important. The third major question, if I may say so, is the nature of relations between our two parties, that is to say, noninterference in internal affairs, respect for each other's positions, acknowledgement of differences where these exist, and on this basis, a large degree of common cooperation.

There is something I can tell you now: We have invited a CPC delegation to come to France. The reply is positive, they have accepted our invitation. We will henceforth have a L'HUMANITE correspondent in Moscow [as heard] and we have now achieved a very large cooperation plan. In other words, I am very very satisfied with the work that we have accomplished after almost 15 hours of discussion.

[Question] And what are the points that separate you?

[Answer] What separates us? We have of course different positions on Afghanistan and Kampuchea. Our two parties maintained their own positions, positions which are well-known. Having said that, both sides have noted the will to find a political solution to these two questions, and we have agreed, of course, as far as we can within the given possibilities. It must not be forgetten that here we are in a socialist state, but we ourselves are not at the head of a socialist state; but let us say that at the level of our parties, everything that we can do for a solution acceptable to all the parties will be done.

[Question] Mr Marchais, in effect both sides have therefore recognized the right to Chinese-style socialism and the right to French-style socialism, each Communist Party being independent and autonomous. In this case, how does proletarian internationalism stand today?

[Answer] As for proletarian internationalism, we defined this at our (?24th) Congress, this is well-known. We do not have the time to expand on this now at any great length but I will sum up the essential points:

First, you have to start with the idea that it is for each communist party to determine both the course and content of the type of socialist society that it wants to build. Second, proceeding from this, it is essential to respect each party's independence of action. Just as there is no model of socialism which we should copy, so there should not be any kind of "father party," that is to say, a party which enjoys prerogative over the others. Every party is on a footing of equality, noninterference and mutual respect, as I said a moment ago.

[Question] So is there after all, Mr Marchais, an international communist movement still remaining?

[Answer] No, there is not. The communist international did exist but it has disappeared. It will be the historians' job to give an account of its activity with both its positive and negative aspects. Today there is no... it is out of the question that there should be a new center of the communist movement either on the world scale or on a regional scale. However, there is cooperation, which is normal between communist and workers' parties; this can be multilateral and it can be multinational. Therefore, there is a communist movement, if I can call it that, in the sense that in the world there are a large number of communist and workers' parties, some of which are in power and some of which are not, but there is no structured communist movement which could work out a single strategy, a single policy to which the various communist parties should be tied.

[Answer, interrupting] Excuse me, I think I may have made a slip of the tongue....

[Question] Yes, please go ahead.

[Answer] I think I possibly made an error in talking about a L'HUMANITE correspondent in Moscow....

[Question] In Beijing you mean?

[Answer] Of course, there is already a correspondent in Moscow, and I meant to say Beijing.

[Question] Yes, it should have been Beijing, of course. Some people here in France have been surprised to hear you paying, so to speak, homage to Khrushchev in Beijing, a man who is not exactly held in honor in China; why all of a sudden have you started talking about a man who has seemingly passed into oblivion?

[Answer] I have never forgotten Nikita Khrushchev. Everybody knows that, not only in may own country but also in the Soviet Union. I believe that Nikita Khrushchev rendered a huge service to the international communist and workers' movement at the 20th CPSU Congress which denounced Stalin's crimes and violations of socialist legality, and I would add, paid a huge service to humanity by advocating a policy of peace and peaceful coexistence between states of different social regimes. In other words, Nikita Khrushchev made his contribution to the development of part of our scientific theory.

While coming out of the mausoleum where Mao Zedong's body lies, I was asked this question. I replied as follows: I believe that my Chinese friends have been absolutely right in bringing to the forefront Mao Zedong's positive contribution — the Long March, the beginning of the building of socialism -- but at the same time they criticized his errors — the Great Leap Forward, but especially the Cultural Revolution. I said I believe that this is a good method, and that this is the method we are using to assess the contribution of all great revolutionary fighters to the development of our theory. I brought up the examples of Maurice Thorez, Gramsci, Mao Zedong, Khrushchev, and I could mention examples like this of other great revolutionary fighters from all over the world. I would further add another aspect, that is, that now experience of the building of socialism already exists. Moreover, you know very well, Arlette Chabot, that this is what led us to renounce use of the Marxist-Leninist formula. It is clear that Marx and Engels played a considerable role -- they are the founders of our theory of scientific socialism -- it is beyond doubt that Lenin made a very important contribution to its development, but 60 years have now passed and we say that to reduce our theory simply to Marxism-Leninism is to forget the role played by great revolutionary fighters, some of whose names I have just mentioned, and above all it is to forget the experience of the construction of socialist society. That is why I spoke as I did when I came out of Mao Zedong's mausoleum.

[Question] Before coming to French affairs, because I think you heard Lionel Jospin [PS secretary] appealing to you directly a few moments ago, I would nevertheless like to ask you briefly how you found China, did you find that the Chinese people are happy?

[Answer] Listen, this is the first time that I have been to China so it is the first time that I have met and had talks with a CPC delegation. I was aware, of course, of the state of underdevelopment in which China found itself in 1949. For example, in Shanghai, I met militants, men and women, who told me that each year thousands of men and women died of hunger, and this is a situation which unfortunately today we know only too well in far too many countries. Moreover, I know what was done at the beginning, immediately after the victory of the Chinese democratic revolution, but I also know the consequences of the errors committed, errors to which the 12th CPC Congress, which has just taken place, returned in the report by Comrade Yaobang.

Taking all this into consideration, and without exaggerating of course, there is no doubt that we cannot compare the Chinese standard of living to that of the French, we cannot compare the situation in Chinese agriculture to that in French agriculture, we cannot...

[Answer] We cannot compare industrial development in the two countries. However I can say that I, and my comrades in the delegation -- so I am not the only one -- have met eminent French noncommunist personalities here and we are extremely suprised at the changes that have taken place since the Cultural Revolution was abandoned, since the 3rd Central Committee session resulting from the 11th Congress. Let us say that in the 6 years which have passed, the results achieved in China in every sphere are absolutely remarkable. The 12th Congress set out new prospects for the next 20 years, and I have the deep conviction that by means of consistent work based on clear political policy and clear targets set out by the 12th Congress, the next 20 years will have a few surprises for those who call the socialist system into question.

FRG PRESIDENT CARSTENS ARRIVES, MEETS PERTINI

AU251941 Rome ANSA in English 1932 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 25 -- West German President Karl Carstens arrived in Rome today for an official visit at a time when Italy and West Germany have never been in such close agreement on a wide spectrum of issues. Carstens, accompanied by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, met with President Sandro Pertini at the Quirinale Palace shortly after his arrival.

Pertini stressed the need to create a Europe "which speaks, which counts, and which occupies the place it has the right to in the dialogue among continents".

While Pertini and Carstens met, Genscher and his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo had a first round of talks on European issues, the East-West dialogue and relations between Europe and the United States.

Tomorrow, Carstens will have another encounter with Pertini together with Genscher and Colombo and later he will meet with Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini. On Wednesday, the West German president will visit Palermo, returning to Rome by evening. On Thursday, he will be received by Pope John Paul II at the Vatican. On Friday, he will visit Milan and then return to Bonn.

Carstens' visit to Italy is in return for Pertini's visit to West Germany in 1979.

Pertini Hosts Dinner

LD251548 Hamburg DPA in German 1245 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Bonn/Rome, 25 Oct (DPA) -- Federal President Karl Carstens has underlined the will for a further unification of Europe so that it becomes "stronger and can place still greater weight onto the scales of international politics." During a dinner which Italian President Sandro Pertini gave on the first day of Carsten's 5-day state visit to Italy, the federal president also emphasized in Rome on Monday evening the close ties between Germany and Italy, above all in the areas of language, culture and law.

Carstens praised his Italian host as a "courageous fighter for freedom and justice" and as an "example for millions of people." The federal president made a point of thanking the over 600,000 Italians living in the Federal Republic "whom we appreciate as excellent workers and fellow European citizens." Carstens also emphasized Italy's role in the preparation of the European Community.

Foreign Ministers Meet

[Text] Rome/Bonn, 25 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Italian counterpart, Emilio Colombo, agreed during a 2-hour meeting in Rome that no consideration can be given to a trade war with the Soviet Union and that this would also be against the interests of stable East-West relations. This was reported by the Foreign Ministry in Bonn. Genscher is accompanying Federal President Karl Carstens on a state visit to Italy.

During the exchange of ideas, Genscher reported in detail on the new German-French consultations on security policy and stressed Chancellor Kohl's statement on "the vital significance of the role of the United States in the Atlantic alliance." This was followed by a detailed discussion of European-American relations. On this occasion, Colombo expressed his satisfaction with the French statement on giving equal significance to both parts of the NATO dual decision, the zero option as well as rearmament.

COLOMBO CALLS SOVIET STATEMENTS 'PARTIAL LIES'

AU252012 Rome ANSA in English 1935 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 25 -- The Soviet Union's position on Afghanistan, and even more so on Poland, is static, according to Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo in an interview appearing in the latest issue of the Milan weekly "OGGI".

"Moscow acts on positions of principle and does not look at reality", Colombo said. "The Soviet Union, therefore, says it is extraneous to events in Poland (and accuses the West of interfering). Moscow claims Soviet troops are in Afghanistan at the request of the Afghani Government to defend it from subversion (fomented from abroad)".

The Italian diplomatic chief continued saying that "diplomatically, one could say these are partial lies. The West does not accept this interpretation. It remains firm in its judgement that those facts are a great obstacle to resuming a constructive dialogue which has no alternatives".

L'UNITA COMMENTS ON PRAVDA 'FRATERNAL' ARTICLE

PM251507 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 20 Oct 82 p 7

[Giuelietto Chiesa Dispatch]

[Text] Moscow -- "Experience shows that attempts to strengthen a proletarian party's positions by denigrating the activities of other sectors of the communist movement, weakening international contacts and replacing them with relations with openly reactionary and anticommunist forces, though they can yield temporary benefits, ultimately lead to the inevitable outcome of harming such a party and its political prestige." This is the most significant part of a lengthy PRAVDA editorial article which broaches, rather transparently, issues under discussion among communist parties.

The headline ("The Foundations of Internationalism") and still more the subhead ("From the Ideological Front") provide no particular indications regarding which "proletarian party" is the subject of the critique, though it seems rather unlikely that the CPSU paper's article, signed by academician Isaak Mints, is without specific references to the present political situation. The topics contained in it are not new, however. Neither is the assertion that within the world communist movement it is necessary to take account of the diversity of conditions under which each party finds itself working and that therefore a differentiation of tasks is permissible, though, ultimately, "proletarian internationalism" as defined by the founders of scientific communism was, and still remains, the cornerstone of that movement and the guarantee of its unity.

Academician Mints' article comes a few days after PRAVDA's publications of the report delivered by CPSU Central Committee Secretary Kostantin Ruskov to an important national meeting of cadres in the Estonian capital, at which there was a discussion of the party's tasks in the present phase of the "ideological struggle" between the two opposed social systems. Even ruling out any fortuitousness in the publication date of Mints' article, however, it is still difficult to establish any kind of link between the two temporally adjacent events. One can only note that the CPSU paper's attention currently seems centered particularly on the topics of the ideological battle, either outside the international workers movement or to "call to order" its components considered less well disciplined.

COSSUTTA COMMENTS ON DEBATE WITHIN PARTY

[Text] Rome -- [PCI Directorate member] Comrade Armando Cossutta has granted an interview to PANORAMA on the occasion of the publication of his book entitled "The Wrench," in which he reasserts his critical stance with respect to the party's international assessments and his statements at the recent Central Committee session concerning the coming congress.

Cossutta says that the book's publication is an element in the deliberations on international affairs still underway among the Communists. Coming to specifics, he says he became convinced that "the wrench took place because of the use of a method anachronistic for a party such as the PCI. In my opinion, there has been little ability to distinguish among the various levels of theory, historical assessments and political proposals." Issues such as the verdict on the exhaustion of the October Revolution's motive force should not be made the subject of a vote and be made binding for the entire party. However, other issues, such as breaking off all relations with the CPSU, can be decided by means of a vote — "though obviously everyone will remain free to decide whether or not to remain within the party." In other words, there should be a better definition of what is subject to party discipline and what can remain open to debate.

The element allegedly lacking in the party's international analysis consists, according to Cossutta, of an underestimation of the imperialist swing that has taken place in the United States since the killing of the Kennedys. Hence the importance of the fact that "despite its errors, the USSR has played the role of a counterweight to this imperialist United States. Without the USSR, recent history would be completely different." With regard to events in Poland, Cossutta says that he does not conceal "the responsibilities of the Polish United Workers Party," but that he does not accept "the generalization, the dismissive verdict on the entire experience of real socialism." He explains that he intends to dedicate his analyses to young people, who are ill informed about the international situation by the newspapers ["L'UNITA," he says, "is certainly a little better, but it could do more, much more"].

With regard to the 16th PCI congress, Cossutta expresses the opinion that "very important issues concerning the very nature of socialism are at stake." He also says that he identifies with the "third way" line, for which, however, "there is no need to cause wrenches with the tradition and reality of the revolutionary and socialist movement where it has become established." Even on the internal substance of the line, "there are differences of assessment outside out party," which can, however, be overcome by means of debate.

The rule of submission to the majority will is valid, but, Cossutta says, "this will has not yet been expressed and the line has not yet been defined." Hence the need for an open discussion and to "provide room for all stances" — a "discussion that will provide a clear picture of the real situation within our party." As for how to achieve this, he says that his ideas are not clear. Last, Cossutta suggests that if his remarks to the Central Committee had been made by another comrade, "nobody would have taken any notice of them." Indeed, according to Cossutta, even greater disagreement was expressed by [PCI Directorate member Pietro] Ingrao — "but Ingrao does not initiate motions; Ingrao is not a struggler."

PSDI SECRETARY SEES THAW IN SINO-SOVIET TIES

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 25 — China looks favorably on a thaw in relations with the Soviet Union, according to Italian Social Democrat Party Secretary Pietro Longo on his return from China today.

Longo said that the conditions set by the Chinese for the recent resumption of talks between Chinese and Soviet officials are considered preliminary and irrevocable by Beijing: Withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, the possibility of creating a free and independent Kampuchea and a lessening of Soviet pressure on its borders with China.

The Social Democrat secretary said he could not say what results have been achieved but remarked that he was told by Chinese officials that this was a first round of talks which may be followed by many more.

[Text] Yuriy Andropov, member of the CPSU Politburo, is heading the Soviet delegation in talks with representatives of the Finnish Social Democratic Party [SDP]. The SDP delegation, led by Chairman, President Kalevi Sorsa, arrived by train in Moscow this morning, and talks with the CPSU delegation will begin in the Kremlin tomorrow. Reijo Nikkilae reports from Moscow:

Speculations about who will be sitting on the other side of the conference table to lead the CPSU delegation after Mikhail Suslov ended today when Sorsa was informed of the composition of the CPSU delegation. It is headed by one of the most authoritative persons in the CPSU, Politburo member Yuriy Andropov, who became Central Committee secretary last May. Besides Andropov, only Brezhnev, Kirilenko and Chernenko are members of both the Politburo and the Secretariat. The talks with the SDP leadership are also attended of course by Ponomarev; Vitaliy Shaposnikov, head of the CPSU West European Department; Vasiliy Konotop, Moscow area party secretary; Aleksandr Rumyantsev, chief editor of EKONOMICHESKAYA GAZETA; and Prof Anatoliy Lukanov from Brezhnev's office.

It is intended to complete the talks tomorrow. On Wednesday, the visitors are to leave for the shores of the Caspian Sea in Azerbaijan, which President Kekkonen visited during his last state visit. So far Sorsa and his delegation do not know whether Brezhnev will receive the delegation. This has happened during Sorsa's two previous visits here as leader of the Socialist International disarmament group.

NORDIC AIDES DISCUSS UN PEACEKEEPING ACTIVITIES

PM251527 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 21 Oct 82 p 9

[Unattributed report: "Nordic Defense Ministers' Meeting: 'Sticking Strictly to the Subject' Also This Year's Motto"]

[Text] Current political questions, possible changes in the military interest in the Baltic and the Swedes' abortive "submarines hunt" were topics not discussed at the meeting begun by the Swedish, Danish, Norwegian and Finnish defense ministers in Helsinki Wednesday [20 October].

At a press conference Wednesday afternoon, Finnish Defense Minister Jahuni Saukkonen asked expressly that the journalists present limit themselves to questions on the United Nations' peacekeeping activities.

"The official talks only dealt with questions to do with the United Nations," Saukkonen said, although he admitted that there were unofficial conversations on other topics.

He also pointed out that at their regular traditional meetings the Nordic defense ministers do not usually discuss current political questions, nor do they intend to do so in the future.

Saukkonen praised the Nordic nations' cooperation within the framework of peacekeeping activities and said that it is hardly possible to find similar cooperation anywhere else in the world. For example, the Nordic system of joint officer training for UN service is unique.

In a communique from the meeting, the ministers devoted particular attention to the situation of the UN peacekeeping force in Lebanon, the so-called UNIFIL. The ministers pointed out that the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in June and the subsequent occupation has meant that today UNIFIL is unable to carry out its mission.

The defense ministers expressed their regret at this development and stressed how important it is that the force be given the opportunity reasonably soon of carrying out its mission in a meaningful way.

The ministers also stressed that the UN peacekeeping activities and their financing must be based on the principle of the member states' collective responsibility.

Danish Defense Minister Hans Engell, Norwegian Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad, Swedish Defense Minister Borje Andersson and Finnish Defense Minister Juhani Saukkonen took part in the meeting.

IRAN'S ENVOY TO SENEGAL REQUESTS ASYLUM

OW251828 Hong Kong AFP in English 1816 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Text] Stockholm, Oct. 25 (AFP) -- The Iranian charge d'affaires in Dakar, Mohsen Eskander, announced here today he plans to request political asylum in Sweden. Mr Eskander, aged 35, said he left Dakar at the end of last week for Sweden and will apply officially for asylum tomorrow. He said he left Senegal for fear of reprisals from the Iranian Embassy after it received his decision to leave the Iranian Foreign Ministry.

He said that in order to fight against "Ayatollah Khomeyni's barbarous and inhuman regime," he plans to join the left-wing Iranian Muhahideen Movement, headed by Mas'ud Rajavi, now in exile in Paris, and the "National Council of the Iranian Resistance." "We helped Ayatollah Khomeyni overthrow the shah in order to establish a democratic regime," he said, "but the present regime is even more insupportable than the previous regime."

He said he had been planning for some time to break with Tehran and that the arrival a few months ago in Dakar of "a Khomeyni regime agent" instructed to spy on him had hastened his decision. Mr Eskander was posted to the Dakar embassy in August 1981. He was also accredited to Mali, Mauritania, Guinea-Conakry, and Gambia. He expressed the hope that he would soon be joined here by his wife and son, who are at present in Tehran.

Recently the Iranian charge d'Affaires in Oslo, Parviz Khazai, requested political asylum in Norway.

NC251333 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Text] Speaking at a press conference today, Soviet Trade Attache Grigory'an stated that trade between Cyprus and the Soviet Union during the first 9 months of 1982 surpassed trade during all of 1981 by 14 percent and totaled $66 million. Mr. Grigory'an also stated that two Soviet experts have discussed with Cyprus Goverment officials the possibility of Soviet-Cypriot participation in the solution of irrigation and water supply projects, particularly in the Karkotis River scheme. Now, he added, technical problems for a number of projects are being discussed. Work for these projects will be concluded toward the end of the year. Mr Grigory'an said that with long-term economic cooperation between Cyprus and the Soviet Union, there are prospects to further develop economic relations and trade between the two countries.

DENKTAS ACCUSES GREEK CYPRIOTS OF WAR PLANS

NC260917 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 20 Oct 82 pp 1, 9

[Dogan Buluc report from New York]

[Text] In an exclusive statement to HURRIYET, TFSC President Rauf Denktas said: "Greek Cypriots are after wrong calculations. I believe that they are planning to carry out a very short and limited military operation against us in Cyprus. They are preparing a very cautious plan which will counter the intervention of Turkey, Greece, NATO and the Soviet Union. We have to be cautious and prepared."

Pointing out that the Greek Cypriot administration has been engaged in an intensive arming activity, Denktas quoted the Greek Cypriots, who have been warning Turkey, as saying: "We have built a wall of rockets. No plane can penetrate this."

Denktas continued: "On 1 October, at a military parade, the Greek Cypriots displayed heavy tanks, antiaircraft guns and antiaircraft rockets. They have purchased various types of war materiel from Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and Brazil, as well as fighter planes from Greece. They are having their pilots trained in Greece. The Greek Cypriots defense minister stated that they did not expect any positive result from the intercommunal talks. He added that all they needed was the time that the intercommunal talks would provide. They are engaged in serious preparations for war."

Denktas stated that Nikos Sampson, the EOKA terrorist leader who carried out the coup against Makarios, was in close touch with the Armenian terrorists in Europe. He has close relations and is in close cooperation with them.

In the special interview we had with him, President Denktas said: "Kiprianou first pardoned Sampson on grounds of ill health and then sent him to Europe to collaborate with the Armenian terrorists. Adopting Paris as his center, Sampson is shuttling between France and Germany in efforts to promote the militant acts of the ASALA [Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia] and other Armenian terrorist organizations against Turkey."

EEC-CYPRUS AGREEMENT REPORTED NOT HELPING TURKS

TA260633 Anakara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Text] It has been announced that the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities on the island should benefit equally from the possibilities granted by the EEC to Cyprus, and from the benefit secured through the EEC-Cypriot partnership agreement. The statement on the issue was submitted to the press prior to the FEC-Cypriot partnership council meeting, which convened in Luxembourg this evening. The Turkish Federated State of Cyprus cannot benefit from the trade possibilities granted by the EEC to Cyprus within the framework of the partnership agreement, because of Greek Cypriot hindrances.

NEW TURKISH CYPRIOT NEWSPAPER BEGINS PUBLICATION

NC251208 [Editorial Report] A new 8-page Turkish Cypriot daily called "ARAYIS," which means "search," began publication on 19 October 1982. It is not stated how often it will appear. Presumably, it will be published biweekly and purports to be the organ of the "Patriotic Intellectuals Union." ARAYIS is published at the Balkin Sesi Printing Press, P.O. Box No 755, Telephone No 72773, Lefkosa [Nicosia], Cyprus. The proprietor is the union itself, with Omer Adal as the chief editor.

According to bureau background information, this union was initiated by Raif Denktas, TFSC President Raul Denktas' son. The Executive Committee of the General Council of the union is composed of Raif Denktas, Oguz Kusetoglu and Husrev Cagin. At a meeting held at the Saray Hotel, Raif Denktas read the program of the union.

An unattributed article in ARAYIS, "Why Arayis?" says: "Our community is in search of something. The outcome of partisan practices in the past 6 years has disillusioned our people. Our people have been left in a vacuum. The parties purporting to determine a direction for the people are devoid of such a direction themselves." The article says further: "The Patriotic Intellectuals Union has voluntarily undertaken, with great moral courage, the task of continuing the search for conditions free from degeneration, far from party intrasigence and free from prejudices. It aims at developing and perfecting these conditions within a scientific framework."

It is painstakingly explained that ARAYIS is not an imitation -- presumably referring to the magazine of the same name published by former Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit, which later banned by the Turkish National Security Council. The article concludes: "ARAYIS reflects the present conditions prevailing in the Turkish Cypriot sector and the views of the patriotic intellectuals who are trying to interpret these views."

[Text] The Pakistani minister of food, agriculture and cooperatives, Mohammad Fazil Janjua, is continuing to hold contacts in Turkey. Today he held a news conference in Bursa. Our correspondent Niyazi Mentes reports from Bursa:

[Begin recording] Turkey and Pakistan agreed to exchange fertilizers within the framework of the bilateral agreement they will sign. In a statement he made in Bursa today, the Pakistani minister of food, agriculture, and cooperatives, Mohammad Fazil Janjua, said that the historical and eternal brotherhood between Turkey and Pakistan would be further strengthened by commercial ties. According to Janjua's statement in Bursa, Agriculture Minister Sabahattin Ozbek will soon go to Pakistan with a delegation of agricultural experts. [words indistinct] helping a brotherly country. While Turkish agricultural experts will train personnel in Pakistan, Pakistani experts will come to Turkey to train Turkish agriculturalists on milk production.

Janjua stated that the two countries agreed to support each other and that at the end of a bilateral commercial agreement Pakistan would become a bridge for the export of Turkish agricultural products to the Middle East and Asia. It is reported that Pakistan will buy large amounts of phosphate fertilizers from Turkey and will sell it nitrogen fertilizers in return. The two countries decided to help each other on similar issues as well.

The visiting minister praised Turkey's industrial [presumably he meant agricultural] efforts, adding that he came to Turkey for that reason and that he was touring agricultural installations. He said that his country needed Turkish agricultural experts for setting up similar agricultural techniques. He added that his visit had been very fruitful.

Agriculture and Forestry Minister Sabahattin Ozbek pointed out that Turkey wants to export agricultural products to Asia in parallel with the Middle East and Europe. That is why, Ozbek added, we will prevent agricultural land from being used residentially or industrially. We have prepared a proposal on this issue and submitted it to the prime minister's office.

Ozbek stressed that due to certain reasons, houses, apartments and industrial installations had been built on some 35,000 hectares of fertile agricultural land during recent years. He added: We are absolutely determined. We will not allow the elimination of agricultural land.

The visiting Pakistani delegation, which had toured Bursa and Karacabey during the past 2 days, left for Yalova. [end recording]

EVREN SPEECH ON CONSTITUTION IN TRABZON 25 OCT

[Public speech by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Trabzon on 25 October, carried on radio and television -- recorded]

[Summary] My dear citizens, the time has come for me to talk about the constitution. A lot has been said and written about the constitution. We took everything into consideration. We gave the constitution its final form and published it. "While doing that, we did not act out of an inferiority complex or an admiration of anything that is foreign. We did not copy the constitutions of other countries. We studied them well and used those ideas which were appropriate. Every country has its own characteristics and there are as many constitutions as there are countries. Our constitution is one that fits us.

"One of the deficiencies of the old Constitution was that it paralyzed the government regarding certain issues. The power and authorities of the state were insufficient. The governments were made somehow helpless before the persons who created anarchy and terrorism and their only solution was to declare martial law. Problems could not be solved even under martial law. All rights and freedoms were granted to those who would use them for evil purposes. The citizens who gave the governments the power to rule them expected the governments to solve the problems, but the Constitution and the law did not give the governments the necessary authority to solve the problems."

At the time, if a policeman or a gendarme shot an armed terrorist who was fleeing, that policeman or gendarme was arrested and convicted. So policemen were not going after the terrorists and anarchists because they knew they would be punished if they shot them. We changed this situation with the new constitution.

A lot has been said about the limitations on basic rights and freedoms. Those who criticized these limitations are those who are afraid that they will not be able to repeat the things they did prior to 12 September 1980. With the new constitution, we brought the following limitations: "The basic rights and freedoms also include the individual's duties and responsibilities to the society, his family and other persons." In other words, a person cannot violate another person's rights just because he himself has such rights.

The old Constitution said that basic rights and freedoms could be limited by law if they were used against the unity of the state, the country and nation, against the republic, national security, public order, public interests, general morals and general health, but that "the law could not touch the essence of the basic rights and freedoms."

"Of course, if you cannot touch the essence then you cannot do anything."

In the new constitution, we first added "national sovereignty" and "law and order" to that list. We also said that the basic rights and freedoms cannot be used against the requisites of a democratic society.

We brought another limitation by saying that "none of the rights and freedoms cited in the constitution can be used to damage the indivisible unity of the state, country and nation, to endanger the Turkish state and the republic, to eliminate basic rights and freedoms, to enable -- and pay attention to this point -- a person or class to rule the state, or to enable a social class to be sovereign over other social classes. This is important because it means you cannot try to establish a dictatorship, communism or fascism." We also limited these rights and freedoms by saying that they cannot be used to create discrimination based on languages, race, religion or sects or to establish a state order based on such concepts.

Another important and new clause in this constitution is the one that says that "none of the constitutional articles can be interpreted to mean that they grant the right to engage in activities aiming at eliminating the rights and freedoms cited in this constitution."

This constitution is being criticized. They can say whatever they like and they can write whatever they want. We will not leave the path we know is the right one. We will do the most appropriate thing for this nation, which has suffered too much, and we will give it what it deserves. " We will do what you citizens want.

I wanted to start my tour from Ordu, but there is no airport there. I wanted to start there because the citizens of Ordu's Fatsa District suffered greatly before 12 September 1980. They were harassed, threatened and used by a group of gangsters who called themselves revolutionaries. In fact, several journalists wrote that these gangsters were indeed democratic individuals working for the good of the citizens. Now the people who wrote such lies claim that they support the 12 September operation. We do not believe them. Those who used to make communist propaganda also say the same. We do not believe them either.

Why did we ban the former political party members from political activities? Because, after 12 September we tried to form a coalition by taking two ministers from one party, another two from another party, and so forth. These people immediately consulted with their leaders, who told them not to take the positions. These party leaders are now spreading news throughout the country to ensure a no to our constitution, simply because they will not be able to take part in politics if this constitution is approved. Do you see their personal interests at work?

We banned these people from participating in political affairs because we want our citizens to be free of them, to rest, for 10 years. Our people have had enough of them. There are many people who can rule our country. Our nation has produced and will produce great men.

BROCHURES, POSTERS ISSUED ON CONSTITUTION

[Text] The National Security Council has published posters and brochures about the constitution. The posters call on the citizens to vote in the constitutional referendum to be held on 7 November. They say: "Come to the ballot box on 7 November for the constitution." They will be posted in places where everybody can see them.

The brochures include some articles of the constitution. One million of them have been printed. They aim at informing the citizens about the basic principles of the constitution.

Also, booklets containing the full text of the constitution have been published. They are to be distributed especially among public institutions and establishments, factories, cooperatives and similar places.

These publications, which were prepared by the National Security Council so that the people can become familiar with the constitution without any misinterpretations, will be sent to all the provinces today.

HURRIYET ON ELECTION BAN ON FORMER POLITICIANS

NC250935 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 20 Oct 82 p 3

[Editorial by Oktay Eski: "Politicians and the Constitution"]

[Text] According to Ankara newspapers the constitution to be submitted to a referendum is about to be revealed to the public. It is reported that the National Security Council has carried out intensive work on the constitution and changed some of the sections.

Naturally, it is impossible to know which sections have been amended and in what form before the text of the draft is published in full. Nevertheless, a report reaching the Ankara bureau of HURRIYET has clarified a question which has been causing concern for a long time.

According to information obtained by our colleagues, one of the sections of the constitution stipulates that those who were "members of parliament on 11 September 1980 will be barred for 5 years from participating in the elections and those who were party leaders on that date will not be permitted to participate in elections for 10 years."

Let us first stress one point: the political cadre in power on 11 September 1980 tops the list of those who should be held responsible for degenerating the democratic regime in Turkey. They are the ones who came forward with the argument that they could "provide a better administration for the country." Contrary to these arguments, it is they -- with the exception of a few -- who have spoiled everything.

Therefore, there is a lot to be said against those who bore "political" responsibility on 11 September 1980. They must be made to pay the cost.

But who is to say these things and who is going to make them pay the cost?

As far as we are concerned, it is directly up to the "nation" to say these things. In other words, only the electorate should be in a position to decide on this issue.

You might argue "our electorate does not liquidate these cadres!"

It is true. The electorate will naturally support those they are used to supporting, those they are in touch with or those who will serve their short-term self-interests. This can be said of other countries as well. This is the general attitude of the electorate. Therefore, no matter how many irresponsible persons may be among such cadres, it is impossible for the electorate to liquidate a political cadre through a single election. It is impossible but it is not "essential" either. In that particular cadre, there certainly are also persons who could be useful in political life through their experience, commonsense and maturity. Their experience is extremely important until the new political cadres get used to the administration and political life of the country. They will be able to contain the impetuosity and the immaturity of the inexperienced politicians, who would probably "seek to rediscover America." They could advise them on problems which they had experienced before. More temperate solutions could be suggested by them.

Turkey experienced these phases in its first parliament after 1961. The political tension had risen so high then because of the elected "amateurs" who, quite unnecessarily, caused Turkey two serious crises in 2 years -- one on 22 February 1962 and the second on 21 May 1963.

It was not said in vain: "Had mankind learned its lesson, history would not repeat itself."

EEC TO ASK ARGENTINA TO RESUME NORMAL TRADING

LD251846 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1757 GMT 25 Oct 82

[By Geoff Meade, PA staff reporter in Luxembourg]

[Text] Argentina is to be asked to resume normal trading with the EEC. A formal approach to Buenos Aires will be made soon, EEC foreign ministers decided today at a meeting here. The initiative was launched by Britain in a bid to normalise commercial relations with Argentina, which are still in disarray in the wake of the Falklands war.

Although the UK has already lifted its trade sanctions against Argentina, Buenos Aires is still discriminating against British exports. Several other Common Market countries also continue to face problems in their commercial dealings with Argentina.

The EEC olive branch will be offered in the form of a letter to the Argentine Government, the text of which has already been prepared, urging the restoration of normal trade relations in the near future.

Foreign Secretary Mr Francis Pym told his colleagues this afternoon that the UK's initiative was a sign of British willingness to get back to normal with Argentina. But the UK is not prepared to restore full diplomatic relations at the moment, and an arms embargo against Argentina will remain in force. Some other EEC members, however, have already resumed arms dealings with Buenos Aires.

SPOKESMAN ON TIMETABLE FOR U.S. BASES TALKS

[Text] The Greek Government considers 6 to 9 months as a reasonable period of time for the conclusion of the talks on the U.S. bases that open tomorrow at 1100 between the Greek and U.S. delegations at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The timetable on the negotiations was included in a statement made by the government spokesman yesterday. The spokesman added that Greece will not proceed with unilateral actions and that the time for the termination of the negotiations will be announced following advance agreement between the two delegations. The government spokesman stressed: The Greek Government is in a position to fully secure, in the best possible way, the country's independence and to clear up what the agreement on the bases would be since, as it is already well known, there are 100 agreement texts to date in connection with the status of the U.S. bases in our country.

FALANGE ESPANOLA DE LAS JONS WITHDRAWS LISTS

LD252330 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Text] Just 3 days before the elections, one of the parties is pulling out. Falange Espanola de las Jons has withdrawn its lists of candidates from the elections of 28 October. According to the party's national leader, Raimundo Fernandez Cuesta, the reasons include the fact that splitting the vote is damaging for Spain and favors a victory for Marxism. Finally, Falange Espanola de las Jons calls on all those who might have voted for it to use their vote freely, recommending that the vote be given to parties that will forestall a victory for Marxism.

SCHMIDT WILL NOT STAND IN CHANCELLOR ELECTIONS

[Text] Bonn, 26 Oct (DPA) -- Former Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt officially announced to the SPD Bundestag group today that he would not stand as chancellor candidate in new elections to the Bundestag. Schmidt gave as his reason that "it would be dishonest to stand as a candidate in public elections for an office which I seriously fear I would really only be able to perform for a fraction of the legislature period because of health reasons."

Schmidt announced that he still wants to represent his constituency of Hamburg-Bergedorf in parliament. His stepping down means "a chance to free the way for younger forces in our party."

CSU's Strauss Views Decision

LD261708 Hamburg DPA in German 1552 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Munich, 26 Oct (DPA) -- CSU Chairman and Bavarian Minister-President Franz-Josef Strauss has described Helmut Schmidt's decision not to stand again as the SPD's candidate for chancellor as an expression of deep political disappointment. Speaking to newsmen in Munich today, he predicted that the Social Democrats would not achieve the same election result with anyone other than his opponent in the 1980 federal election. He said that an analysis of the Hesse and Bavarian elections confirmed that the majority want an end to the Schmidt/Genscher government, but that at the same time, the majority disapproves of the manner in which the chancellor was ousted.

Strauss said that for a long time he thought that Schmidt was in poor health, but he never mentioned it so as not to create any false impression. He said that Schmidt's decision not to stand would bring back to the SPD some of the voters from the "Greens" who had rejected Schmidt's policies but who would be more inclined to accept Brandt, Erhard Eppler or Vogel. Asked whether this means fresh prospects for him in Bonn, Strauss said mockingly: "It's not so very interesting for me any more: Wehner's gone, Schmidt doesn't want to, so what have I to gain anyway?"

No Decision From Rau

[Excerpts] Duesseldorf, 26 Oct (DPA) -- The North Rhine-Westphalian SPD has vigorously opposed the idea of the North Rhine-Westphalian minister-president and deputy party chairman, Johannes Rau, standing as chancellor candidate in the 6 March Bundestag elections. It has also been reliably learned that Rau himself does not want to move to Bonn.

On behalf of the SPD group in the North Rhine-Westphalian diet, and to applause from the group, party group leader Karl Josef Denzer today urged Rau, who was present, to remain as minister-president in this most densely populated federal land. Although the request made by many party friends to Rau to take over the chancellor candidature following Helmut Schmidt's refusal did honor to the Duesseldorf party leader and the entire North Rhine-Westphalian SPD, Denzer said "Johannes Rau cannot, in my view, comply with this request in the interests of North Rhine-Westphalia and the North Rhine-Westphalian SPD." North Rhine-Westphalia, as the largest federal land, as the only state with an absolute SPD majority, and with major structural difficulties, now needs a top man as minister-president "and that man is Johannes Rau," Denzer said.

Rau would not commit himself this morning before the land diet party group. He only said that until Helmut Schmidt had definitely announced his decision to the Bundestag group, he, Rau, would not comment on the situation.

FDP MEMBERS SET UP 'LIBERAL ASSOCIATIONS'

DW261009 Bonn DIE WELT in German 27 Oct 82 p 4

[Wilm Herlyn report]

[Text] Bochum -- In reaction to the change of government in Bonn, "liberal associations" have been set up by FDP members at the municipal level in several federal laender. Their goal is "to fight the Kohl-Genscher government" and are intended to be a collection point for liberals "to hinder the deterioration of a movement which up until now considered the FDP its home." The founders hope, as does Bochum council member Ernst-Albrecht von Renesse, that prominent FDP politicians will also join the association after the national party congress on 7 November. Von Renesse told a press conference yesterday that the association will be based on the Freiburg principles [of the FDP]. Martin Budich, chairman of the Young Democrats of North Rhine-Westphalia, announced that a "liberal association" will be established tomorrow at the land level.

CAR'S KOLINGBA SAYS FRENCH TO INCREASE AID

AB251818 Paris AFP in English 1605 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 25 (AFP) -- France will step up its overall aid to the Central African Republic, Central African leader General Andre Kolingba said today after talks here with President Francois Mitterrand. And he added that there were "certain problems" which the (?French troops stationed) mainly in the western town of Bouar under a defence agreement could help to resolve.

General Kolingba said that the French Army presence was economically important to his country. "We have every interest to maintain it to enable us to resolve certain problems in our remoter regions," he added.

"There has never been any cloud between France and the CAR," General Kolingba said today. "Co-operation remains dynamic, in spite of what the newspapers say."

LE MONDE WARNS OF DANGERS OF PROTECTIONISM

[Editorial: "The Established Pact"]

[Text] A foreign trade balance preserves national independence. Countries like Britain and Italy experienced the reverse of that since they were forced to borrow from and submit to the IMF. So far, France has not been reduced to that extreme but, because it forgot the rules of the game, it must now try to restore a trade balance within the framework of bilateral negotiations.

This is a serious admission of weakness since it makes it necessary to disturb the normal functioning of international trade because the country is failing to profit from it. France is not in the position of the United States, which succeeded in forcing Japan to moderate its exports "voluntarily." Since it cannot follow a policy of force, it must rely on its partners' understanding.

The start of negotiations with countries like the FRG, the United States, Japan or the USSR, with which there are growing deficits, also reflects a return to a degree of bilateralism which is contrary to free trade. With 1 month to go before the GATT ministerial session in Geneva, France, by violating the spirit of the treaty, can already be placed in the dock. On the front page of its Thursday edition, the FINANCIAL TIMES, which, on 19 October, had already secured or even sold the Bank of France's gold [in its writings], mentions fears of revived protectionism in connection with the French measures to improve trade.

Although they are not on the same scale as the problem, the measures announced after the cabinet meeting on 20 October will, it is true, result in a strengthening of customs and exchange controls, which are one of the subtle forms of protectionism.

But every country puts on that kind of show and it is very difficult, if not impossible, to classify the violations of a free trade which, moreover, was always more of a dream than a reality.

The risk is that these dangerous practices will be stepped up throughout the world, since all governments can justify their machinations with apparently good reasons. In France, a whole slew of explanations for the deterioration in foreign trade have been put forward. Some are to do with the economic situation, like the dollar's rise or the aggravation in the world recession, and others are structural, like the production apparatus' failure to adapt, not to mention the bad habits of the public sector and the rather unpatriotic behavior of the French people who are indirectly accused of buying too many foreign goods. Those explanations do not seem very original and it is very late to put them forward.

Although external constraints should not be regarded as inevitable, they exist. Each country must find its own future course that lies between opening up completely and isolation. Such a choice obviously implies great lucidity. But could the foreign deficit, like the tide, be more surprising than predictable?

Views Steel Dispute Resolution

[Editorial: "The End of the Steel Conflict"]

[Text] The final obstacles which existed among the Ten to the signing of the agreement to voluntarily limit steel exports to the United States were overcome on Thursday, 21 October. By means of various arrangements, the Germans abandoned their reservations. The Washington administration then announced that the complaints against the Europeans submitted by the American iron and steel producers had been withdrawn.

The agreement, which covers a period from 1 November 1982 to 31 December 1985, can now be implemented. According to [EEC] Commission Deputy Chairman Davignon, who is responsible for industrial affairs, it will impose a reduction of around 9 percent in European exports compared with 1981 exports. Supplies of steel tubing are not covered by the agreement. But a separate exchange of letters places them under close surveillance: Consultations (whose aim can only be to fix a ceiling on European sales) will take place if Community exports exceed 5.9 percent of the U.S. market.

As Mr Davignon pointed out, the agreement bears a close resemblance to those which the Community is imposing on its own foreign steel suppliers. It is a compromise between Washington's concern to protect an iron and steel industry which is running at less than 50 percent production capacity and to openly avoid protectionist measures which would have increased the risks of a trade war among the Europeans, and it illustrates the trend toward the "contractualization" of international trade in the face of the crisis or even toward a disciplined protectionism.

Relief prevails on the European side. Of course, nobody is crowing: the EEC still thinks that the complaints submitted by the U.S. industrialists were not justified with respect to the GATT rules on subsidies. The Community iron and steel producers are being forced to make an inevitable sacrifice. But the situation would have been much worse for those industrialists if an agreement had not been reached and if compensatory duties had been imposed on European steel imports when they entered the United States, as would inevitably have happened following the complaints submitted. The agreement enables the Community iron and steel producers to sell in good, secure conditions on a profitable market.

Another source of satisfaction is that the EEC states accepted the division of sacrifices drawn up by the Commission. The latter sees its role in administering the iron and steel industry crisis as increased. Unless the European coal and steel community collapsed, which would spark off a major crisis, that administrative role will become more evident over the next few months when it will be necessary to impose factory closures far exceeding those planned in the programs drawn up in each of the producing countries in order to ensure the adaptation of the industrial tool to a markedly falling demand.

Finally, as Commission Deputy Chairman Haferkamp pointed out, the agreement reflects the two sides' desire to settle a whole series of difficult questions by negotiation. It could possibly create a better atmosphere at a time when other aspects of the trans-Atlantic dispute are about to be tackled, such as the gas pipeline and agriculture.

MITTERRAND SUCCESS IN DEFINING FRG MILITARY TIES

[Editorial: "Franco-German Strategy"]

[Text] Cooperation between France and the FRG, in the form it has taken since the Elysee treaty, whose 20th anniversary in January will give Mr Mitterrand the opportunity to address the Bundestag, is still an essential sphere in the two countries' diplomacy. The anxiety which might have been aroused by the French president's alleged intention to strip it of its "preferential" character, and then by the political change in Bonn, never materialized.

At least that was the message which was given out loudly and clearly at the 40th summit in Bonn on Thursday, 21, and Friday, 22 October, by extending this cooperation not so much to the military sphere -- where there has been cooperation for a long time with some success -- but above all to strategic consultation. It is true that in the present state of the French economy, German benevolence is literally priceless.

But at a time when a section of German opinion again seems to be experiencing neutralist leanings in a fairly confused internal political situation, France could also stand to gain from involving Bonn more closely in its strategic thinking. That is especially true since pacifism on the other side of the Rhine is often mainly directed against the Atlantic alliance, to whose military organization Paris no longer belongs. Indeed, it is as if each of the two governments was trying to preserve the other from a harmful temptation: that of neutralism in Germany and that of protectionism in France.

It is true that this strengthening of military and strategic cooperation primarily relates to the exchange of ideas. This makes it particularly significant to see the guarded terms in which Mr Mitterrand felt bound to present this strengthening. While placing himself in De Gaulle's great shadow — was he not the cosignatory of the treaty, one of whose hitherto neglected provisions the aim is now to implement? — the president spelled out the interpretations to which the Franco-German decision should not give rise: The head of state's intention was probably to quash some views that a "Paris-Bonn nuclear axis" was going to be created or that the FRG was going to prefer the French "nuclear umbrella" to that of the United States. But there was also clearly a concern not to revive in France itself a quarrel likely to recall, even if to a lesser degree, the quarrel aroused by the plan for a European defense community in 1954. The debate on German rearmament probably no longer has the same impact today. Nor, moreover, does it have the same legal framework, since the FRG renounced the possession of nuclear arms in 1955. But the head of state was bound to realize that the question is still "sensitive," at least for a section of opinion: for his communist allies who are as vigilant toward the FRG as they are understanding toward the GDR, for the Gaullists but also for a considerable number of Socialists.

Thus Mr Mitterrand had to present the strengthening of strategic cooperation both as great progress in Paris-Bonn relations and as a decision implying no major military change for either country. He seems to have succeeded fairly well.

L'HUMANITE Views Summit

[Yves Moreau editorial: "Community in Distress?"]

Indeed, the days are over when some people went into rapture over the FRG's "economic miracle" and when Giscardian propaganda could strive to present West Germany as a "model." Following 2 consecutive years of recession, with unemployment which has increased 50 percent since the beginning of 1982 and which, it is forecast, will put more than 2.5 million workers on the streets in 1983, the FRG is in the throes of a crisis.

Economic problems were to be discussed at the Bonn summit. In that respect, it obviously would be appropriate to examine France's trade deficit with the FRG, which is a crucial question for our country. That deficit, which increased from Fr 16 billion in 1980 to Fr 23 billion in 1981, is constantly growing worse: it is at Fr 8 billion just for the first 3 months of this year, and that makes it possible to forecast a deficit of around Fr 35 billion to our detriment by the end of 1982. That is an unhealthy situation which makes a major contribution -- a good third -- to our foreign trade deficit.

When the FRG's exports to France exceed French exports across the Rhine to such an extent, how can our currency be defended and unemployment be reabsorbed in our country? Cooperation worthy of the name is only appropriate on an equal footing, and it must be exercised in the two countries' interest.

The present state of commercial relations between France and the FRG seriously jeopardizes our economy. It deserves a serious examination in order to remedy it.

Military questions were also discussed at the Bonn summit. Although West German Defense Minister Manfred Woerner deemed it appropriate to say that the exchange of views on that subject did not mean "the start of a nuclear axis," the FRG press is scarcely making any secret of certain West German ambitions.

For instance, the FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG deplores the fact that the FRG's participation in French nuclear deterrence is still dubious and especially that the Bundeswehr does not have "a right to express its view" (mitsprache) on planning objectives.

The GENERAL-ANZEIGER stresses in different terms that France should adopt not a national defense strategy, but a "forward battle" strategy -- in other words, that of fighting on the Elbe, on the FRG's eastern borders.

Those are dangerous designs which are aimed at calling into question France's right to pursue a policy of security and independent defense.

The plans which Mr Helmut Kohl cherishes regarding the intensification of European integration also tend toward the limitation of our national sovereignty. For instance, in an interview granted to LE FIGARO, the Christian Democrat chancellor preaches the extension of the European Assembly's powers and abandonment of the unanimity rule in the EEC Council of Ministers.

In addition, Mr Kohl advocates deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles in West Europe. In his investiture speech in the Bundestag, moreover, he gave unreserved backing to the U.S. policy aimed at excessive arms levels.

Nonetheless, it is not a further aggravation of the arms race which would facilitate the solution of the problems posed by the crisis. In order to overcome the latter, it would be better to seek detente and gradual and simultaneous disarmament. Mr Kohl, for his part, seems to prefer the military blocs policy. That is certainly not favorable to the development of cooperation between France and the FRG, conceived not as a community in distress, but as a community for social progress and contributing to peace.

ANSA REPORT ON MARCHAIS BEIJING PRESS CONFERENCE

[Text] (ANSA) -- Beijing, October 26 -- French Communist Party (PCF) Secretary George Marchais said here today that the long freeze in relations with the Chinese Communists has ended.

Speaking at a press conference at the end of his thirteen-day visit to China, Marchais said that "after a long period of 'shadows' in relations between the French and Chinese Communist Parties... our two parties have agreed they will have normal relations from now on, relations of friendship, solidarity and fruitful cooperation".

The thaw in the tensions that began in 1965 was capped with a cooperation agreement between the two parties.

The PCF secretary conceded that "differences" still exist, citing Afghanistan and Cambodia, but the "agreements" are important because they signal the existence of a world communist movement in respect of the original paths to socialism which each party has the right to follow.

Marchais added that the independence of all communist parties, the negation of any "leader party" or a "center of world communism" are the principles on which the PCF and Chinese Communist Party agree and which made his visit possible.

The "alienation" of the Chinese Communist Party after the Soviet party's Twentieth Congress (in 1956 ed.) "is a fact for which all (communist parties, ed.) bear responsibility", Marchais said.

He cited at least two points of "agreement" between the two parties: Firstly, peace and disarmament and, secondly, "the aggressiveness of American imperialism".

"Comrade Hu Yaobang (Communist Party secretary general) and I...condemned in particular the United States moves in the Middle East, in Central America, in southern Africa and in Asia." In reply to a question on this latter geographical area, Marchais cited Taiwan and "the cruel dictatorship" of South Korea as examples.

The PCF secretary cited Afghanistan and Cambodia as examples of disagreements with the Chinese Communist Party.

The PCF supports the Soviet Union in Afghanistan and says it favors a political solution of the issue, while China considers the presence of Soviet troops in the country a threat to its own safety.

In Cambodia, French Communists claim that Vietnamese troops liberated the country from "Pol Pot's genocide" and "helped save Cambodian civilization". China, on the other hand, considers Vietnam a "regional hegemonic power" that wants to dominate Southeast Asia.

Marchais concluded saying that the accords reached between the two parties are: accreditation of a correspondent of the PCF mouthpiece "L'HUMANITE" to Beijing, regular exchanges of study groups, particularly at the Paris Marxist Institute, participation of representatives of "THE PEOPLE'S DAILY" at the "L'HUMANITE" fair in France, and a visit to Paris by a Chinese Communist Party delegation.

MARCHAIS SEEKS RELEASE OF SHCHARANSKIY

OW270544 Hong Kong AFP in English 0515 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Paris, Oct. 27 (AFP) -- Georges Marchais, the head of the French Communist Party, said Tuesday in Pyongyang, North Korea, that he hoped to convince the Soviet Union to release Anatoliy Shcharanskiy, a Soviet dissident.

In a French radio interview, Mr. Marchais also said the French Committee for Liberty and Human Rights was instrumental in securing the release last week of Armando Valladares, a dissident Cuban poet. Mr. Marchais is chairman of the rights group.

Mr. Marchais, whose party is generally aligned with the Soviet bloc, is on a tour of the Far East. He arrived in North Korea after talks with officials of the Chinese Communist Party.

"In April, I was in Cuba -- and Fidel Castro assured me that Valladares was properly treated in prison," Mr. Marchais told the radio station, referring to the Cuban president. "He promised me a clemency measure at a moment he judged opportune."

"In the same way, our committee is acting for the release of Shcharanskiy," he told the radio station. "I can say no more today, but I hope to obtain in that case the same result as with Valladares."

Mr Shcharanskiy, 34, a Jewish computer specialist, was refused permission to emigrate to Israel in 1973. He was sentenced in 1978 to 13 years in prison on charges of high treason, espionage and anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda.

PCF'S LEROY ON HUMAN RIGHTS IN WEST, POLAND

PM251151 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 16 Oct 82 p 4

[Unattributed report: "The Universality of Human Rights"]

[Text] It was because of the request of [PCF Politburo member] R. Leroy that France Inter's weekly "Friday Evening" program was devoted to human rights yesterday.

Speaking in the debate, the L'HUMANITE editor immediately asserted "the universality of human rights," which cannot be "sliced up" in any circumstances. But he noted that the campaign purporting to be for human rights was launched around 10 years ago to "kill the hope which socialism had aroused and acquit capitalism, giving it the benefit of the doubt." Then he recalled that the men who defend the exploitation regimes to which colonialism and wars gave birth are in no position to wage that battle.

He continued: "When a Polish worker dies in Nowa Huta, it is tragic; when a French worker is murdered by an employers' commando group, it is tragic.... But in the first case there is a situation which is the result of the distortions suffered by the socialist system and, in the second case, a phenomenon which is in the capitalist system's very nature."

Roland Leroy then stated that the Communists "stand by all victims of repression, coercion and censorship in the colonialist capitalist countries but also -- they have already said this -- in the socialist countries."

With regard to the socialist countries, he spoke of "distortions" and "mistakes and errors" but asserted that none of them has regressed on a historical scale. Returning to Poland, he expressed the view that the solution to the problems could only be "democratic and Polish."

Finally, he reaffirmed that in France the Communists want to build a society in which political, economic and social democracy exist together, "a French brand of socialism."

FRG'S CARSTENS CONTINUES OFFICIAL VISIT TO ROME

AU261550 Rome ANSA in English 0803 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 26 -- Visiting West German chief of state Karl Carstens will pay his respect to more than three hundred victims of a World War II Nazi reprisal massacre before meeting again today with his Italian counterpart Sandro Pertini.

Welcoming Carstens to Rome Monday, Pertini said that the "parallel history" of Italy and West Germany in the past thirty years has provided an "essential" contribution to Europe and to "overcoming the disastrous national rivalries of the past".

Europe, Pertini urged, with Spain and Portugal in its ranks, should become "a great economic and political community" with a "serious peace policy", fighting against "bloc" politics, the Berlin Wall and the arms race.

The same theme of Europe was the leitmotif of Carstens' speech too. He urged an "ulterior growth" of the European Community, which should play a bigger role in international politics for the sake of "peace, mankind and the well-being of its 271 million members". The West German president also called for a process of self-determination leading to German re-unification.

Reiteriating the 'great passion' he has for Italy, Carstens cited the close ties linking the Italian and West German peoples, their cultural traditions, political and economic ties as well as the 600,000 Italian immigrants making a "valid" contribution to his country's growth.

Before meeting Pertini again today, Carstens will pay a visit to the "Fosse Ardeatine" monument standing at the site of Nazi massacre and common burial-ground. He is also scheduled to visit the tomb of the unknown soldier at Italy's national monument in downtown Rome.

The meeting with Pertini later this morning will be attended by the two countries' foreign ministers, Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Emilio Colombo. Then he will be Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini's guest for lunch.

Genscher and Colombo met for three hours on Monday to discuss the recent summit talks between French President Francois Mitterrand and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, strains in European-American trade relations and bilateral ties.

The West German diplomatic chief assured Colombo that no "new agreements" had been made between Bonn and Paris to alter their status in NATO alliance. All that Mitterrand and Kohl did, he added, was underscore the "particular relevance" of France's and West Germany's common security problems.

Both Genscher and Colombo agreed that European-American relations were "vital" for their joint defense and stressed the need for a joint strategy towards the Soviet Union, not in terms of a "trade war" but as a key factor for "European security".

On Monday, Carstens paid a visit to Rome Communist Mayor Ugo Vetere at city hall. The West German chief-of-state is due to fly home tomorrow after an audience with Pope John Paul II at the Vatican.

Views Relations With Italy

AU261614 Rome ANSA in English 1526 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 26 -- West German President Karl Carstens discussed relations between his country and Italy, the problem of Italian workers in Germany and reunification the two Germanies in an interview appearing in today's edition of the Rome daily "IL MESSAGGERO".

"Relations between West Germany and Italy have been in the past and are now good. We can depend on these relations to take a further step forward, together with the other European nations, 25 years after the creation of the European Economic Community.

"Our two countries drew the same political consequences from the catastrophe of the Second World War: reconstruction of a united Europe and a strong union with the great North American democracies", Carstens remarked in the interview.

The West German chief-of-state then dwelled at length on Italian President Sandro Pertini, with whom he met yesterday on the first day of his state visit to Italy. Carstens spoke of Pertini not only as president but as a person who "inspires feelings of respect and friendship."

Pertini who as an antifascist spent years in exile and in jail under the Nazis, visited West Germany three years ago and in that occasion visited a former Nazi concentration camp in Bavaria. Today Carstens will pay his respects to 335 Italians killed in a Nazi reprisal in Rome in 1944 and buried in a common grave at the Fosse Ardeatine.

Speaking of the past, Carstens said "we must never try to forget what happened then. I repeat, President Pertini embodies both the suffering and the reconciliation. There lies the importance and the greatness of what he has done for bilateral relations and for Europe itself."

Turning to the problem of unemployment in his country, Carstens mentioned Italian workers in West Germany (about 600 thousand). I cannot say they will be spared unemployment because the entire population is affected by it, but I can assure them that they are not worse off than German workers....".

Speaking about relations between East and West Germany, Carstens claimed that "the intimate tie between the two Germanies still exists" and that all Germans hope to remain "fraternally together".

Foreign Ministers Meet

[Excerpt] Rome, 26 Oct (DPA) — On the basis of the initiatives of their foreign ministers, Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Emilio Colombo, the FRG and Italy want to shape and promote European cooperation. Both sides spoke strongly in favor of an early expansion of the community to include Spain and Portugal. The talks took place on the second day of President Carsten's visit to Italy at the residence of the Italian president.

It was learned today following a talk lasting about 2 hours between President Sandro Pertini and President Karl Carstens that both governments are striving for an early meeting of the European Council. According to sources in the German delegation, Pertini spoke in favor of the longest possible periods in office for the two foreign ministers, Genscher and Colombo, in the interests of the foreign policy continuity of the two countries.

They said that Colombo called for closer integration of EEC institutions under government control and for a strengthening of the institutions. He said that it is necessary for the formation of opinion and decision-making between the 10 member states, which had become static, to be reinvigorated during the German presidency in the first half of 1983.

With regard to Poland, the two presidents are understood to have been of the opinion that West Europe must not reconcile itself with the situation there and must not leave Poland alone with its supply problem. Colombo and Pertini are understood to have strongly criticized the Soviet Union's arms policy. They hold the Soviet attitude, including the pressure being applied to Poland, responsible for the negative developments in Soviet-American relations.

Communique Released

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 26 -- Problems ranging from European unity, relations between the European Community and the United States and East-West relations to developments in the Middle East and the situation in Lebanon were covered today in a talk held by West German President Karl Carstens, on official visit to Italy since yesterday, and Premier Giovanni Spadolini.

A communique released at the end of the meeting reported that the visiting president and the premier reconfirmed their intentions to foster a climate of confidence and mutual understanding in the Middle East in bids based on the right to existence and security of all states of the region.

The two statesmen also agreed, the note said, on the point that "if this objective is to be reached for the tormented Middle East, the voice of reason and dialogue must prevail over the absurd recourse to the logic of arms and violence".

On the issue of strained ties between the U.S. and Europe, Carstens and Spadolini underscored the importance of overcoming the current difficulties connected U.S. Soviet gas-line sanctions and of drafting a joint strategy for economic and commercial relations with the Eastern European countries and the Soviet Union. COLOMBO PESSIMISTIC ON POLAND, PIPELINE SANCTIONS

[Text] Rome, October 27 -- Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo said that not much hope can be attached to prospects for resuming a productive dialogue between the West and Eastern Europe and identified "the problem of Poland (as) one of the crucial knots in East-West relations" in a statement made to the Senate Tuesday.

Colombo also discussed the pending Italian decision on the purchase of Soviet natural gas to be pumped to Western Europe over the trans-Siberian pipeline now under construction. The foreign minister, responding to queries on developments in Poland following the Warsaw parliament decree dissolving the independent trade union movement, Solidarnosc, insisted that this piece of legislation "is the negation of the policy of national understanding General Wojciech Jaruzelski declared he intended to pursue, even after the coup of December 13 last year".

Discussing the Italian position on these issues, Colombo affirmed that "it has been clear and adequate" and added, "Italy, along with its allies, is now considering what the most suitable response might be to these most recent developments".

He went on to say he was convinced that political pressure "exercised in a harmonious and coordinated fashion among the Western countries could produce positive results". Italian activities in this area, the diplomatic chief declared, are conducted in keeping with the requirement to "impede a drastic worsening of the situation in Poland, a change which would involve a violent and irreparable break in East-West relations".

Continuing his statement to the Senate, Colombo affirmed, "we will not abandon the people of Poland. We support these people in their domestic struggle, those who continue the struggle, despite repression, for conditions more worthy of their traditions of culture and civilization".

Fielding queries on the "pause for reflection" the Rome government decided on before confirming the contract for the import of eight billion cubic meters of Soviet gas annually for 25 years, the foreign minister said that the issue was still being examined by the government.

The most recent Soviet extention of the deadline for an Italian decision, put on ice following the declaration of martial law in Poland last December, runs out Sunday. The original contract, signed by a subsidiary of the state energy agency, ENI, also provided for a one billion fifty million dollar stake in the pipeline construction for Italian industry for the supply of turbines, compressors and other parts and equipment.

Addressing himself to the side of the contract for the purchase of Soviet gas, Colombo referred to the need to settle differences among the five parties in the Rome coalition and to an assessment of "present and future energy requirements in relation to the possibility of diversifying our supply sources".

"As regards the general problem of Italian supplies for the Siberian pipeline", the foreign minister continued, "Italy, as have other European countries, has clearly maintained the position that contracts signed before the events in Poland must be honored."

He went on to affirm that the American sanctions applied to European manufacturers supplying the Soviets with parts and equipment built on U.S. license "cannot be applied not only because they extend beyond U.S. territory but also because they would have a retroactive effect".

At the beginning of October, U.S. Customs officials in New York seized four General Electric turbine rotors ready for shipment to Italy's Nuovo Pignone, a company on contract for parts and equipment for the Algerian trans-Mediterranean gasline and the Soviet gasline.

In this connection, the foreign minister said it will be necessary, in seeking out a solution to the problem, to steer clear of "dangerous answers or countermeasures against the United States". He recalled that Italy has been pressing for a global approach to the issues to replace unilateral sanctions which are, inevitably, conflictual in nature.

The foreign minister told the Senate that efforts now underway are aimed at a settlement for all matters connected to trade with Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union "with full respect for the interests of all countries and consideration for the sacrifices of each".

PCI AIDE DENIES ZAGLADIN RECEIVED 'OVATION'

PM261013 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 23 Oct 82 p 6

[PCI Bologna Federation Secretary Renzo Imbeni letter to L'UNITA]

[Text] Dear Macaluso [L'UNITA editor] Please accept this observation concerning a statement made in some reports, including L'UNITA's, of Zagladin's talk at Bologna's Gramsci Institute. The statement in question is the assertion that there was a virtual ovation when Zagladin said that the USSR will always defend socialism "to the last drop of blood." Frankly, that is an exaggeration. There was a large and attentive audience at the Gramsci Institute, mostly attracted by legitimate curiosity in an important event. There were a very large number of speakers, who can be divided into three categories: journalists, whose questions mostly concerned PCI-CPSU relations and Poland; foreign students attending Bologna University (Greeks, South Americans, Iranians, Palestinians; and representatives of the Gramsci Institute, which organized the talk, whose arguments were highly critical of the positions expressed by Zagladin. It is very strange that such a course of events could have prompted one newspaper to say: "The PCI men did not speak up, so Zagladin was able to score a point in his own favor." Many others reported events differently: "Those who expected some kind of spectacular contest between supporters and adversaries of Moscow were somewhat disappointed" (PAESE SERA); "Silence and folded arms during the 'toughest' parts of the report and polemically prolonged applause from the minority of the audience" (CORRIERE DELLA SERA); "Sincere applause came only from a few groups of sympathizers of the 'peace struggle' group, from Senator Nono Pasti's supporters and from a few white-haired party members" (IL MANIFESTO).

So there were no ovations. There were several bursts of applause for comrades of the Gramsci Institute -- for the comrade who asked: "When you people in Moscow take your decisions do you realize the difficulties that you cause for our struggle?"; for the Palestinian student who bitterly informed Zagladin that he could not share his optimism about the Middle East; and for Zagladin at the end of his talk and his subsequent replies. On a couple of occasions, when certain passages were considered significant, the applause was of the nature of a claque (a few people clapped loudly and for a long time). The audience mostly reacted with "silence and folded arms" to this demonstration of uncritical approbation of the theses expounded. This being so, the Gramsci Institute can be satisfied with the success of the initiative and we Italian Communists can also be satisfied with having given further proof that we prefer dialogue and discussion to fabrication, even when stances are so far apart and so different on matters of principle and on specific acts of great importance to the peoples' future.

POPE VOICES DESIRE TO IMPROVE TIES WITH PRC

[Excerpts] (ANSA) Rome October 26 -- Pope John Paul II has voiced confidence that "the obstacles between the Holy See and Beijing will be removed and that an appropriate channel will be found for resuming and pursuing talks between the two sides.

The Polish-born pope left the Vatican last night to pay a call on the Gregorian University in downtown Rome to commemorate Jesuit scholar Matteo Ricci, the pioneer of talks between China and the Roman Catholic Church four centuries ago.

Matteo ricci's grave in Beijing was compared to a wheat germ hidden in the earth which will one day bring an abundant harvest. "It represents an eloquent appeal in Rome and Beijing to resume the dialogue started by him four hundred years ago with so much love and success", the pope said.

According to the pope, a resumption of dialogue will make it possible for Chinese Catholics to feel at home with their national community as well as within the church. "We are sure", the church leader asserted, "that it would be a benefit to the Chinese nation as well as to the Catholic Church...."

The pope also voiced the hope that Jesuits may one day be able to return to China, where they were highly valued for their culture at the time of Matteo Ricci.

CORRIERE DELLA SERA GOES INTO RECEIVERSHIP

AU231512 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 23 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Milan, October 23 -- As of Thursday, Italy's most widely circulated daily newspaper, Milan's "CORRIERE DELLA SERA", and the Rizzoli publishing empire went into receivership. Two court-appointed receivers are now at the helm of the publishing empire.

The two receivers are Luigi Della Rocca and Luigi Guastri. Their task is to draft a list of the publishing firm's creditors and prepare two creditors' assemblies which in just over three months from now will have to cast a vote in favor or against the receivers' year-long management.

Publisher Angelo Rizzoli had asked the Milan court to put his vast publishing firm into receivership to get a reprieve from his creditors who had called in his debts in the last two months. According to Rizzoli estimates, the firm has a total of 200 million dollars of outstanding debts.

PSOE'S GONZALEZ INTERVIEWED ON PARTY POLICIES

PM261441 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 16 Oct 82 p 13

[Interview with Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez in Orense by Ramon Pi; date not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] The government program for the next 4 years put forward by the PSOE; is it a socialist party? What is left of the socialist aspiration? What is being dropped, albeit only temporarily, from the Socialist program?

[Answer] I know that that debate is public and also that it has arisen within my own party. But the question is: Of what does the Socialist program consist and how does it define itself? In my opinion, if socialism has a possible definition, it is the enhancement of democracy. If there is any way of defining socialism, as I feel and believe it to be, it is as I have just said: in the individual field, the enhancement of individual freedoms; in the collective or social field, the enhancement of social freedoms.

[Question] But it cannot be said that that is its exclusive heritage, defining socialism.

[Answer] Of course not. The fact is that a program such as the one we are attempting to articulate and set in motion could also be accepted to a very considerable extent by a progressive bourgeoisie. That is absolutely true. In that sense, when asked whether the program is specifically socialist, it must be said that it is not -- not in that sense. It is a national program in a real sense of the term, and not hypernationalist. It seeks to resolve national, overall problems.

[Question] According to that, what is termed the PSOE's maximum program -- the fundamental aim, the socialist utopia -- would be at the end of that path, if you continue in that direction...

[Answer] The problem lies in the fact that the party's maximum program is a declaration of principles which inspired the beginning of a struggle which, at the beginning of the century, was exquisitely modest and cautious in its demands. In the thirties, the main Socialist demand was the 8-hour day, which was not introduced until Largo Caballero arrived at the Ministry of Labor. You will see: The plan for building a socialist society never ends. [answer ends]

How Will PSOE Program Be Financed?

The economic aspect of the PSOE's 4-year program constitutes an essential part of the overall program. In the interview broadcast on television it took up half the time available. But returning to it now was inevitable. The crisis situation, unemployment and the tremendous public deficit are certainly alarming signs and truly constitute challenges for any political force which comes to power.

Gonzalez explained to LA VANGUARDIA the guidelines of his economic program, which are summarized in this way: It proceeds from the assumption that the stagnation of the GDP in fact implies its irremediable decline. It is therefore necessary to increase the GDP, revive the economy as a condition for emerging from the crisis and combat unemployment. In accordance with this approach, the basic strategy intended to be followed is clearly Keynesian. The GDP will increase if investment is encouraged, if public expenditure increases, if exports are boosted and -- in order not to fuel inflation -- if domestic consumption remains stabilized and import costs are reduced as far as possible.

In the PSOE's strategy, the driving force to bring about increased private investment will be public investment -- selective public investment which will serve the sectors which require fewer imports and which promote our economy's export capability. Private enterprise must respond to ensure that the whole functions in accordance with the plans laid down.

Control over domestic consumption will be introduced to prevent inflation taking off on this side. To this end, wage increases will be adjusted to the estimates of the increase in the inflation rate forecast for the following year. According to Socialist estimates, the aim is to reduce the inflation rate to less than 10 percent within 4 years (it is currently 16.5 percent). This control over purchasing power is the principal element correcting the clearly expansionary nature of the PSOE's economic program, which in its secretary general's words, is a "controlled expansionary program."

However, we asked twice the extremely specific and fundamental question in view of this set of forecasts: Who will pay for this policy? How will the inevitable and very considerable increase in public expenditure -- not only in investment but also current expenditure -- be financed? There was no reply. So far there has been a single call for a crackdown on fraud, which Socialist spokesmen sometimes consider sufficient to curb the deficit and sometimes do not. But it was not possible to secure a detailed explanation of fiscal policy -- whether taxes will rise, and in accordance with what criteria; or of monetary policy -- will the "machine for printing bank notes" be cranked up?; or of budgetary policy -- how far is the deficit going to be taken and how will it be wiped out? The PSOE's "controlled expansionary program" has the consistency of any clearly Keynesian program, but it is a mystery in everything concerning its financing.

NATO, United States

The Socialists' opposition to Spain's joining the Atlantic alliance is known only too well. The gradual deescalation of the PSOE's formulations in this respect -- opposition to joining, withdrawal by a simple majority in the Chamber, a referendum, freezing of membership status without direct involvements in defense issues -- have not erased, however, the Socialist Party's negative attitude toward the Western defense bloc. But the fact is that, in addition, there now arises an issue closely connected with the former, which the revision of the agreement already negotiated with the United States and awaiting ratification.

[Answer] The Spanish right believes that it can create problems for us by making clear our apparent contradictions, and it is now brandishing an alleged irritation on the part of the Americans if we revise the agreement....

[Question] But it was not the Spanish right but the Americans themselves who said they were hoping that a future, different government would respect the inherited agreements.

[Answer] Yes. The Americans have some extremely sound practices in their foreign policy which I would like for my country. For instance, they have the sound practice of ratifying in the Senate any agreement or treaty with other countries. It must be assumed that they would allow us to have that sound practice. Or is the Spanish right going to make us give in to the extent of denying us the possibility of ratifying, or otherwise, an agreement? So far there is a bilateral agreement which I describe as technically good -- better than the previous agreements -- but which could pose a problem for us. A bilateral agreement must meet two requirements: Spanish needs and, in this instance, U.S. needs. The needs which I am interested in defending are Spanish needs. If that agreement meets Spain's defense and security needs, there will be no problem. If the Western bloc's defense needs are being considered, I do not need the agreement. They already have enough with the Western bloc. Why do I want an agreement? The protection of our weak points in defense, not the northeast border, matters to me. [answer ends]

Coalitions

One of the issues which political observers are already pondering in this election period is the morphology, the shape, of the government which will emerge from the polls.

[Question] Let us take, Mr Gonzalez, several hypotheses. Would you govern relying on a majority minority?

[Answer] No. I believe that, in order to govern, a majority which will be independent of a systematically precarious situation in parliament is necessary.

[Question] So what is the Socialist Party's hope?

[Answer] That is clear: to win by an absolute majority.

[Question] And if that is not achieved?

[Answer] Well then, I can see two possibilities. One which I suspect would be for all the more or less camouflaged rightwing parties to reach agreement, even if they had only one deputy more than the Socialist Party, to prevent the Socialist Party's governing. That is one of the possibilities which I suspect. If that does not happen, or is impossible because of the parliamentary arithmetic, there is the other possibility, which would be that of making a necessary effort at aggregation to secure a majority. However, I sincerely believe that we can secure an absolute majority. [answer ends]

National Autonomy Pact Is Necessary

The issue of the autonomies is a mandatory topic for LA VANGUARDIA in a meeting with the PSOE secretary general. One of the pivotal points of the political confrontation in Catalonia is precisely the different conceptions of the organization of the state of the autonomies. Gonzalez said in this report:

"My idea of what could happen in the future from the autonomy viewpoint is as follows: I believe that wide-ranging but serious agreement on the implementation of autonomy is necessary in Catalonia and in the state's communities as a whole. That agreement entails a policy of transferences of powers, services and personnel, and it entails above all a solid conception, it being understood that solidarity is something required not only by the central government of the autonomous governments but also by each autonomous government of the states as a whole. And I believe that it is necessary to attempt to achieve a kind of major agreement on the implementation of autonomy which will far and away transcend the petty misfortunes which minor electoral confrontations may involve.

[Question] A pact, an agreement, among whom?

[Answer] All the institutional sectors should be involved in that: the governments of the autonomous communities and the whole of the party political or politico-parliamentary representative forces of each of the communities. For instance, I wish to comment now on the Basque Country. I would deem it splendid to receive from the Basque Country the proposal of the minimum common denominator of the Basque Country's autonomy aspirations. Minimum common denominator for whom? For all the political forces involved. Don't tell me this or that party defines or expresses autonomy, even if it has 40 percent of the votes.... which it does not have, anyway; we alone have over 50 percent of the votes in Andalusia. A minimum common denominator expressing the desire capable of being shared by everybody.

[Question] And could that agreement which you propose include a reconsideration of the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process?

[Answer] The organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process is currently subject to the constitutional court's opinion, and it is the latter which will tell us in what way it is in keeping with the Constitution.

[Question] Of course, but I am referring to a hypothetical reconsideration of what is left of the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process, of what is approved as constitutional.

[Answer] If you wish to make me say that I am going to scrap the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process, to use a graphic expression, I say that I am not going to scrap it. What I do say is that the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process seems to me completely inadequate for the blueprint for the implementation of autonomy which I want. Somebody will immediately say that I want more of an organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process, and that is not so. What I want is to undertake a real implementation of autonomy which will involve us all, to prevent the autonomies being made the target for confrontation among the political parties, because it should be one of the foundations, one of the pillars of democracy, of what is called basic consensus for the functioning of democracy. Otherwise it is impossible to build the state of the autonomies. Of that I am fully aware.

PCE'S SARTORIUS COMMENTS ON PARTY PROBLEMS

PM261501 Madrid YA in Spanish 18 Oct 82 p 60

[Interview with PCE Executive Committee member Nicolas Sartorius by Anabel Diez and Maria Luisa Donoso; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] YA: In what way do you believe the thwarted putschist conspiracy will influence the election campaign?

Sartorius: As a political assessment, I believe that the matter demonstrates once more something that we in the PCE have been tirelessly repeating. There are conspiring elements attempting to overturn the current political situation. When democracy is threatened, democratic forces should unite against that threat. The transition is not yet over.

YA: And what impact could it have on the voting trend?

Sartorius: On the one hand it could make the vote of fear work, although I do not believe that this will have great results. The opposite could happen: That is, it could arouse sympathy toward the most vigorous stances against putschism. It is the PCE which is adopting the strongest stances; the proof is that the standing committee of the congress met on our initiative.

YA: If the PCE registers a considerable decline in the next election, do you envisage any kind of strategy to prevent the party from splitting?

Sartorius: Well, first of all, I must say that the latest opinion polls register a significant rise for the PCE. But at any event the party will not split. Obviously there is higher morale within the party with good election results, but at any event nothing will happen to the PCE.

Legacy With Difficulties

YA: Continuing with the hypothesis of an unfavorable result for the PCE, would the party attempt to make its voice heard through the workers' commissions?

Sartorius: I believe that the PCE should have its own voice. The workers' commissions are an independent trade union and will continue to have an independent policy whatever happens.

YA: In your opinion, what are the causes of the PCE's poor results?

Sartorius: In the 1979 legislative elections and afterward in the municipal elections, we rose. But after the policy of consensus broke down, a very strong trend toward a two-party system began to assert itself through the news media and other forces. The 23 February [1981] coup may have also created some fear which harmed the PCE's prospects, and there have also been shortcomings and mistakes on its own part.

YA: But, over and above these objective factors, do you not wonder why the Communist Party does not take root in Spanish society?

Sartorius: Obviously it is a question which we should ask ourselves. When a party loses votes in a democratic society, the fact is that it has not succeeded in communicating well. It must also be borne in mind that we have emerged from 40 years of dictatorship, and there is a whole image of the Communists. The legacy we received has brought us many difficulties.

YA: So are you already resigned to never surmounting the "20 deputy" barrier?

Sartorius: Not at all. I believe that the PCE has a considerable area in the future. If we do things well, we have a considerable future.

YA: What do you believe is the reason for the deliberate distancing of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] with respect to the PCE?

Sartorius: It could be due to the fact that the PSOE leadership is seeking to gain ground for the PCE; a tactic which leads to the weakening of the left. I approve of the PSOE's growing by enlarging its area rightward, but it is not logical with the program it is putting forward for it to take away votes from the left. If that policy of sidelining the PCE is confirmed, it is a concession to the right. Nobody believes that changes can be made in Spain by splitting the left and setting it at odds with itself, because it is not merely a matter of sidelining a name but of sidelining those who are socially behind the PCE; 2 million people who voted for us in 1979, and this is an essential force for making any change in Spain.

YA: But is not the PCE convinced at heart that the PSOE will have to reckon with you, just as has happened in the city councils?

Sartorius: I do not know at what level, but the PSOE will have to reckon with us at some point. The problem is the timing, because it could come too late and a dynamic of weakening and failure entered if they attempt the adventure of change on their own.

No Blank Check

YA: Might you set some condition for cooperating with the PSOE?

Sartorius: Even if a joint policy is conducted, nobody hands over a blank check. Agreements are achieved on the basis of negotiations, and in a policy of unity everybody makes concessions, but everybody also gains. I believe that Socialists, Communists, Adolfo Suarez and Lavilla would find two or three issues on which to agree. I cannot understand why the Socialists, who have a historic opportunity to head an operation which will alleviate this country's problems, are adopting the stances they are. We would also benefit -- but the country especially.

ARMY TO ENSURE MAXIMUM SECURITY FOR ELECTIONS

[Text] Madrid, Oct. 26 (AFP) -- The Spanish Army began taking up positions today at public buildings and strategic sites in major cities in preparation for Thursday's legislative elections, a reliable source said here.

The army has been assigned to ensuring security of public buildings and installations to free state security forces for surveillance of voting offices and political figures, the source said.

All Spanish police are to be on patrol Thursday, the Interior Ministry has said.

In Bilbao, meanwhile, police sources reported an abortive grenade attack today on two police armored vehicles travelling there from San Sebastian. A grenade exploded behind the second vehicle, the sources said.

The two assailants, who were in a car, carried a grenade-launcher and a machine-gun, the sources added.

In another development, three suspected members of the Basque Military-ETA organization have been arrested in Guipuzcoa and Navarra, the government's anti-terrorist command announced here today.

Those arrested were accused of supplying Military-ETA with information on barracks in the Basque Country, movements of police and Civil Guard vehicles and on police and industrialists.

On October 2, authorities uncovered plans for a coup d'etat plot the day before the vote, while the Anti-Fascist Resistance Groups of October 1 (GRAPO) have warned they would attack polling places.

U.S. POLISH SANCTIONS 'ADD INSULT TO INJURY'

[Editorial: "Europe's Frustration"]

[Text] The attitude toward the United States which emerged at the EEC foreign ministers' meeting at Nyborg was very critical, and rightly so. Despite all the efforts to find a compromise in the current conflicts over steel exports and the pipeline, the U.S. administration seems almost to be intent on making things worse in its relations with Europe. Two weeks ago the same circle of ministers attended a similar weekend meeting with their U.S. counterpart in Canada, where allegiance was sworn and promises of consultations on the issues which could divide the United States and Europe in the future were made. But obviously the news of this has not yet reached Washington. Early last week President Reagan proclaimed -- without consulting the governments in Europe -- new sanctions against Poland in reaction to the dissolution of Solidarity. At the end of the week he announced that the Soviet Union will be allowed to buy an additional 23 million tons from U.S. grain stores with an additional guarantee that U.S. deliveries in the next 6 months will not be halted by a new grain embargo. With one hand Reagan is waging a trade war against the Soviet Union using Europe's industrial exports, and with the other he forswears the notion of imposing sanctions on U.S. grain exports to the Soviet Union, as if it were his intention to add insult to injury.

Little wonder that the European foreign ministers showed their dissatisfaction and asked their chairman, Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen, to make representations to Washington about the total absence of briefings and consultations. Uffe Ellemann-Jensen will be able to explain the critical attitude at the right time and place -- by word of mouth, in writing and by using body language. After the Nyborg meeting he was a little vague about when he would do so, and he is rightly dubious about whether now is the right time. It is a fact that it will be impossible to talk to the United States before the elections. Reagan's announcement of guaranteed embargo-free grain was an offer to the Soviet Union, but first and foremost it was a message to U.S. farmers. A fall in incomes in the Midwest farming states is giving rise to serious political concern in these weeks prior to the election because it could mean a decrease in the number of Republican votes and only massive grain sales to the Soviet Union can put matters right. The Soviet Union did not buy more than half of last year's 23 million-ton harvest [surplus], and less than 2 million tons of this year's harvest has been sold to the Soviet Union, whereas [Soviet], purchases in Canada are much greater. Reagan will have to do what he can, and more, to show the farmers that he wants to end Soviet reticence, even though this will cost him votes in Nyborg.

COMMUNIST PARTY SPLIT ON DEVALUATION TACTICS

PM261659 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 23 Oct 82 pp 1, 15

[Unattributed report: "Kajanoja Loses in Finnish Communist Party Central Committee Vote"]

[Excerpt] Friday's [22 October] meeting of the Finnish Communist Party Central Committee was a tough showdown with the party leadership and a clear demonstration against the way in which the Communists acted in connection with the devaluation crisis. Party Chairman Jouko Kajanoja, contrary to his expectations, did not win the approval of the Central Committee for the party's agreement with the Social Democrats.

Kajanoja himself was the first to admit that he seemed to be the loser and that the vote must be seen as some sort of vote of no confidence in the party leadership.

However, the Central Committee made do with demonstrating its dissatisfaction. A direct rejection of the agreement -- which would probably have led to Kajanoja's having felt obliged to resign and would have made the split in the People's Democratic Movement a fact -- did not win the support of the majority of the members.

Although such a proposal was put foward by a group within the Communist Party's minority faction, it was voted down with a comfortable majority.

The two proposals which were left in the final vote were Kajanoja's, which could be interpreted as direct approval of the agreement with Sorsa and which followed the line taken by the Finnish People's Democratic League Executive meeting during the weekend by 30 votes to 13, and a proposal from Tutta Tallgren, who had voted against the agreement at a meeting of the Communist Party's Politburo.

Tallgren's proposal simply expressed regret that the decision about the terms for future cooperation in government by the People's Democrats was made over the heads of the Central Committee, without directly rejecting the agreement reached by the party leaders.

In the final vote Tallgren's proposal won by 27 votes to 23.

USSR PROTESTS THATCHER'S WEST BERLIN VISIT

LD261326 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1311 GMT 26 Oct 82

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] The Soviet Union today officially protested to Britain over the arrangements for Mrs Thatcher's visit on Friday to West Berlin.

The protest was delivered by the Soviet ambassador in London, Mr Viktor Popov, to Foreign Office Minister Mr Malcolom Rifhind.

Mr Popov had asked to call at the Foreign Office this morning specifically to deliver the protest.

The Soviet Union is protesting that when Mrs Thatcher visits West Berlin, she will be accompanied by the new West German Chancellor Dr Helmut Kohl.

The Soviet Union says Dr Kohl's presence breaches the post-war agreement between Britain, the United States, France and the Soviet Union on the administration of Germany.

The Soviet Union invariably protests when West German politicians visit West Berlin on official business, and the Foreign Office is regarding today's move as a "ritual protest."

Mr Popov was told at the Foreign Office today that Britain did not agree with the Soviet interpretation of the agreement and that the British Government did not consider the agreement will be breached by Dr Kohl's accompanying Mrs Thatcher to West Berlin.

PAPER VIEWS REAGAN ATTITUDE TO USSR TRADE

[Editorial: "Trading With Russia"]

[Text] Two large trade deals between the West and Russia are causing fierce dissension between America and the European NATO allies -- America's grain sales to Moscow and European co-operation in financing and building the Siberian gas pipeline. President Reagan has now said that the United States would be willing to lift the embargo on equipment for the pipeline if the European allies agree to "a better set of restrictions." Administration officials later said that the United States was looking for a "broad redefinition" of the economic relationship between East and West. This provides an opening which European governments should seize on with alacrity. If the European response is sluggish and cynical a great opportunity will have been missed.

There is no more urgent task for the West than to agree on how to handle economic relations with Russia during the next few crucial years. These will be the years which will see the changing of the guard in the top Russian leadership. What sort of leadership will emerge, post-Brezhnev, could be strongly affected for good or ill by perceptions in Moscow of the West's economic policies. The Soviet economy is in a perilous state. There must be those in the younger echelons of leadership who are keenly aware of the dangers of collapse unless more liberalised economic policies can be introduced into the present ossified system.

Western policies should be designed to offer Russia incentives to liberalise internally. This is where Mr Reagan's policy on grain sales is most open to criticism. The President has justified it by saying that it drains off hard currency from Russia, whereas the pipeline will be feeding hard currency in. That may be true, but the greater truth is that it is cheaper for Russia to buy American grain than it would be to re-structure her agriculture. The new American quotas for grain sales, if all taken up, would mean that the United States would be supplying more than 55 per cent of total Soviet grain imports. Without the assurance of imports of this size, those who want economic liberalisation would have a much stronger hand to play.

ROLANDHIS COMMENTS AT EEC MEETING IN LUXEMBOURG

[Text] The foreign minister of the republic, Mr Rolandhis, speaking at a meeting of the Cyprus-EEC Association Council in Luxembourg said that relations between Cyprus and the EEC have entered a stage of deep crisis. He said it was essential that negotiations start at the beginning of next year so that the second financial protocol can come into force in January 1984. Mr Rolandhis also referred to the trade gap between Cyprus and the Community which, he pointed out, was widening year by year. He observed that in 1981 Cyprus' trade deficit with the EEC was 179 million pounds compared with 134 million in 1980.

Speaking afterwards, Mr Rolandhis expressed disappointment over the way Cyprus was being treated by the EEC. He said: In the case of the Falklands, the Community imposed sanctions against the aggressor and came out in support of Britain, but in the case of Cyprus, the Community was punishing Cyprus, which was a victim of aggression. Mr Rolandhis described the concessions offered by the Community as insignificant and said the Cyprus Government will decide on the basis of his report whether to hold negotiations on the EEC offer.

In Tunisia, Mr Rolandhis attended the meeting of the committee of non-aligned countries for the Palestinian issue with the PLO leader, Mr 'Arafat. Mr Rolandhis also had a private visit with the PLO leader. In Luxembourg, the foreign minister led the Cypriot delegation in the 8th session of the Cyprus-EEC Association Council.

SPOKESMAN ADDRESSES KIPRIANOU'S MOSCOW VISIT

NC261240 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Text] The government spokesman has stated that President Kiprianou's forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union objectively constitutes a very important event within the framework of efforts for the internationalization and promotion of the Cyprus cause, and for strengthening the Republic of Cyprus as a state which, he stressed, Cyprus' enemies have been striving so hard to undermine. For this reason, the spokesman emphasized, it is not right to give interpretations and to make speculations that serve the plans and the intentions of Cyprus' enemies.

RELATIONS WITH EGYPT TO BE RESTORED IN 1983

NC260835 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 26 Oct 82 pp 1, 10

[Text] Egypt and Cyprus have agreed to restore relations to their former high level in 6 months' time. The agreement was reached during a meeting held in Cairo about 15 days ago [as published] but which was kept secret. The meeting took place between Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister 'Ali and Cypriot Communications and Works Minister Mavrellis, who was accompanied by Mr Y. Khatzianastasiou, secretary general of the Ministry of Communications and Works.

According to our information, it was agreed that a delegation of the Chamber of Commerce should visit Cairo very shortly, to be followed a little later by a delegation of the Cyprus House of Representatives. The invitation will come from the Egyptian side.

Mr Mavrellis and Mr Khatzianastasiou were authorized by the Government of Cyprus to negotiate an agreement for the restoration of relations between the two countries during their visit to Cairo. During this visit they also discussed questions connected with Cyprus Airways flights.

When in Cairo 20 days ago [as published] on their way to Kenya for an official visit, Mavrellis and Khatzianastasiou met with 'Ali and had a cordial talk, during which it was agreed to restore diplomatic relations between the two countries.

The meeting was kept secret and nothing was announced by either the Cypriot or Egyptian side.

According to our information, both Egypt and Cyprus favor the restoration of relations, which were severed following the well-known incidents at Larnaca Airport a few years ago.

DENKTAS ON TALKS WITH UN SECRETARY GENERAL

TA261917 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Text] President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus Rauf Denktas has said that there is no way other than the intercommunal talks for an agreement to be reached between the two countries. He added that he and UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar share the same opinion regarding this issue.

Denktas arrived in Istanbul this evening after holding talks with the UN secretary general in New York regarding the Cyprus problem. In his arrival statement at Yesilkoy Airport, Denktas said that Perez de Cuellar agrees with him that approaching the Cyprus problem from other angles would endanger the intercommunal talks. Denktas stated that during the talks he asked Perez de Cuellar to ensure that the United Nations does whatever is necessary about the accumulation of arms in Cyprus by the Greek Cypriots.

Denktas said that while in New York he held meetings with the representatives of several countries and briefed them on the Cyprus problem.

Denktas will spend the night in Istanbul. He will go to Cyprus tomorrow.

KONUK: NO NEED FOR EEC PEACE FORCE ON ISLAND

TA251615 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 25 Oct 82

[Text] Acting President and President of the Legislative Assembly Nejat Konuk has said that under the present conditions of peace and security there is no need for an EEC peace force to be stationed in Cyprus and that it is out of the question for such a force to be stationed on the island.

Asked to comment on reports about a proposal to station a peace force composed of troops from EEC countries in Cyprus, Konuk said that the Turkish Cypriot Government did not know of such a proposal and that, in fact, there was no need for such a move.

Konuk recalled that in July 1974 Turkey had used its right and the authority granted to it by international agreements and intervened in Cyrpus. In so doing, Konuk added, Turkey saved Cyrpus' independence as well as preventing a terrible massacre of Turkish Cypriots. And during the 8 years that have since passed, there have been no incidents between the two communities on the island.

COMMENTATOR URGES BOMBING OF MISSILES IN SOUTH

NC260945 Nicosia HALKIN SESI in Turkish 22 Oct 82 p 4

["Through My Eyes" column by Semih S. Umar]

[Excerpts] The Kiprianou administration, which has arbitarily transferred the anniversary of the establishment of the Cyprus Republic from 16 August to 1 October, organized a show, out of ulterior motives, to display some missiles and other heavy weapons. This show by the Greeks, who are notorious for their boastfulness, must have annoyed sensible Greek Cypriots. They, too, know quite well that whatever has so far befallen the Greek Cypriot community and Greece is the result of having inflated ideas.

We do not know if what happened to Syria in Lebanon recently can open the eyes of the Greek Cypriots. But for those who have eyes to see, the truth is that ghastly-looking weapons like missiles and aeroplanes, which the Syrian friends of the Greek Cypriots purchased from the Soviet Union for millions of dollars, were wasted and almost never used. This is no different from what will befall the Greek Cypriots, who will keep on admiring the missiles and begin dreaming of superiority. One does not have to be a genius to realize that the only purpose the missiles and heavy weapons can serve in Cyprus is to provoke Turkey, but we do not know if the Creek Cypriots possess this kind of wisdom. If they did, they would see that the geographic position of Cyprus as an island deprives the Greek Cypriots of any kind of defense against Turkey. The Greek Cypriots would be wise to ask themselves what purposes these missiles will serve against the Turkish planes which -- taking off from a base in Kayseri -- could reach the skies of Cyprus, wave after wave, shaking the face of nature, knowing as they do how to escape detection by radar.

Or do they expect the Greek planes based on Crete to successfully protect Cyprus and enable their missiles to operate successfully? Yes, but if this does not happen, won't the entire island become a graveyard for the Greek Cypriots? Is there no one among them, we wonder, who will explain to the Greeks and the Greek Cypriots that an attack against the Turkish Army in Cyprus could in all probability end up in Athens?

However, we are of the opinion that what Turkey must do immediately is to determine the position of these missiles and other military installations as well as the centers of the anti-Turkish organizations and bomb them without delay. Otherwise, the stupidity of the Greek Cypriots will cost them, as well as us and the entire island, a lot.

BRIEFS

TRADE RELATIONS WITH BAHRAIN -- Commerce and Industry Minister Yeoryios Andreou has met with Bahraini Minister of Commerce and Agriculture Habib Ahmad al-Qasim and discussed bypartite issues, including the imminent visit of a Cypriot trade delegation to the Arabian Gulf states. PAPANDREOU RECOMMENDS PASOK DEPUTY'S EXPULSION

[Excerpts] The cabinet meeting under Prime Minister Papandreou dealt this evening with the municipal election and its results. After a proposal by the prime minister, Interior Minister Yennimatas analyzed the election results and stressed that, on the basis of an objective estimation, the goal of electing municipal and communal officials who, in their greatest majority, believe in the institution of local self-government, which they will promote, was achieved. In this way, Yennimatas stressed, local self-government, through a continual transfer to it of authority and funds, will soon reach the fulfillment of the government's vision for a local self-government, fully functioning in the service of the people.

The prime minister announced his recommendation to the cabinet that PASOK Deputy Dhimitrios Khondrokoukis be referred to the disciplinary council with a request for expulsion. The prime minister stated that, with the exception of Khondrokoukis, all the movement's deputies voted in favor of the abolition of the cross of preference in the Chamber of Deputies and that those absent sent cables stating that they favored abolition. Papandreou then referred to the benefits of the abolition of the cross of preference, stressing that the measure opens new horizons in the country's political history.

RIZOSPASTIS CRITICIZES PASOK OVER ELECTIONS

NC261829 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 26 Oct 82 p 2

[From the "Radical" column]

[Text] Candidates supported by the KKE last Sunday clashed with PASOK-supported candidates in 37 municipalities. This confrontation was not necessary, because the course of democratic cooperation was open. The ruling party, however, did not want to follow this course. At the least, this confrontation could have had the character of democratic competition. The PASOK leadership, however, did not want this either. It threw into the election battle not only the authority of its ministers but also all the advantages of power, employing them in the very same manner as the rightwing: threats, promises, handouts and all sorts of bargaining. Despite all this, the KKE-supported candidates won in 24 of the 37 "duels." Why? Because the majority of citizens preferred the most able and unity-minded mayors and condemned the candidates who broke up democratic unity and put forth the question of PASOK's "self-supporting character" instead of promoting the interests of the citizens. In addition, the spectres of cold war anticommunism, which the government candidates and Averof attempted to resurrect, proved ineffective. Even conservative citizens have confidence in the KKE's handling of their interests. Finally, it was also because the followers of the ruling party, after 1 year's experience, do not have any more faith in its self-supporting character and turn their hopes toward the prospect of democratic cooperation. PASOK, the government and the prime minister must draw their lessons from these election results. This, however, cannot be done through unfounded and dangerous allegations like the ones delivered by the prime minister in his evening statement, when he lost his cool because of the election results.

EVREN SPEAKS ON CONSTITUTION, RELIGION

[Speech by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Erzurum on 26 October -- recorded]

[Summary] My dear citizens, as you know, I explained various aspects of the constitution in Trabzon yesterday, and over radio and television the day before yesterday. I referred to various criticisms levelled against it. Actually, this is the purpose of this tour. This is our third visit to Erzurum since the 12 September operation.

My dear citizens, you will recall that prior to the 12 September operation, Kars and Erzurum, two neighboring big and historic provinces, treated one another as enemies. They would not let the buses of each other's province cross their respective territories. It was a very bitter experience. It was not the citizens of these two provinces who cultivated this enmity; it was perpetrated by traitors who desired the destruction of this nation and country and the elimination of our unity and solidarity. Thank God that today fraternity, unity and solidarity reign here as well as everywhere in the country.

As you know, I told you that the previous constitution, which enabled those who wanted to disrupt the unity and solidarity of our nation to continue their activities, would be revised and submitted for your approval. I had even given a timetable. Now I will give various explanations in connection with the various articles of the new constitution, which will go into effect with your approval on 7 November.

"As I announced in Trabzon yesterday, we did not copy this constitution from those of Western countries. We took care to prepare a constitution suitable for the Turkish nation. Some ask whether the Turkish nation does not deserve to have a constitution like the ones in Western countries. Of course it deserves it. It is because the Turkish nation deserves it that I have not made any amendments to the fundamental rights and freedoms that appear in many Western constitutions. As I tried to explain to my citizens in Trabzon yesterday, this constitution does not bring any limitations to those who use these fundamental rights and freedoms within the framework of the law, but to those who try to use them with the aim of destroying them, those who have treacherous goals such as destroying or dividing the state, those who use these rights and freedoms in that direction, and those who say: I have fundamental rights and freedoms and I use them as I please. The limitations are directed toward those treacherous people."

Prohibitions are not introduced on behalf of well-intentioned people. We have created certain limitations in a bid to prevent the activities of such persons and punish them in the event they engage in these activities. Those who currently oppose the constitution have opposed every single law enacted and organization set up since we assumed power on 12 September 1980. Whether justified or not, they have opposed every measure we have taken because they see the world through the blackened glasses they have chosen to wear. Everything hindering the regime which they desire is invalid, detrimental and unacceptable. After having opposed every single economic, educational, health and other measures taken, now they are opposed to the constitution.

"The second article of the constitution says that the Turkish Republic is a democratic laical social state of law loyal to Ataturk nationalism and respectful of human rights based on the basic principles stated in the preamble of the constitution within the framework of the concepts of public tranquillity, national solidarity and justice. This is the second article of the constitution. Now they have begun to oppose that part which refers to Ataturk nationalism. They say that the name of Ataturk should not be included in the constitution. "Some claim that this article was prepared in a way which will enable large capital groups to interfere in state administration. The spirit of this article is far from implying such a thing, but those who are opposed to private capital will interpret everything in that way.

Our constitution includes all kinds of freedom. Do not heed the intentional cries and sly propaganda of certain circles. Our constitution includes all the fundamental rights and freedoms which have existed in Turkey for a long time, as well as those that have been included in the civilized world following recent developments. Every right and freedom mentioned in the UN Charter and other international declarations appear in our constitution. However, no doubt certain limitations have been brought to these freedoms and rights in light of the experiences following the 1961 Constitution.

In the history of humanity and democracy, no nation or individual has accepted the existence of unlimited rights and freedoms. There are no unlimited rights and freedoms. If such a concept is accepted, then equality among individuals will be eliminated because through the brute force or economic power of a certain class, various individuals might infringe on the rights and freedoms of others. However, if we want to be able to say that the people of a community are free and have all kinds of rights and liberties, we must make sure that all individuals enjoy the same rights and liberties equally. The freedoms and rights of an individual end where those of another begin. The same limitations are valid for relations between the citizen and the state. Such limitations exist everywhere and in every constitution. The general limitations brought in a bid to ensure the interests and safety of the state and the nation are cited in Article 13 of the constitution. "I will now enumerate these limitations:

"1. The indivisible unity of the state, together with its country and nation;
"2. The principle of national sovereignty;
"3. The republic and its characteristics;
"4. National unity;
"5. Public security and tranquillity;
"6. Public order;
"7. General morality;
"8. General health;
"9. Public interests.

"Freedoms might be limited to serve these goals. If an individual attempts to destroy these principles, he will be prevented. These limitations will be determined within the framework of the law. In addition, if necessary, certain rights and freedoms will be limited for special reasons, and again, within the framework of the law. To sum up within a single sentence all that I have said: The interests of the public come before the interests of the individual every time and concerning every issue. If not, there is anarchy. The interests of the community and the nation cannot be sacrificed to the interests of a single individual or a certain group."

My dear citizens, you are well aware of the fact that one of the major characteristics of the Turkish Republic established by Ataturk is laicism. In other words, it is the separation of state and religious affairs. I have stressed time and again that laicism is not an enemy of religion. As a matter of fact, Article 24, which deals with the freedom of religion and beliefs, says that every individual has the freedom of conscience, religious beliefs and conviction. Religious services, worship and religious ceremonies are free. No one can be forced to attend religious services and ceremonies or make public his or her religious beliefs. Furthermore, no one can be denounced or blamed for his religious beliefs. If we have a look at this article, we can draw the following conclusions: "Neither the state nor any organization or individual acting on behalf of the state has the right to ask an individual whether he has a religion, if so, which one it is, or to which sect he belongs within that religion. No one can force any individual to answer such questions. It has been accepted that religion is an issue between God and the individual. It is up to a person to choose his own religion and sect.

"Neither an individual nor the state can denounce or blame a person because of his religion and sect. The issue of worship depends upon the individual's personal belief. He may worship in public or in secret. He may choose to attend religious services and ceremonies. However, there is another provision which is a requisite of laicism. No one can attempt to erase the social, legal or economic order of the state on religious rules, even if partially.

The state and religions [words indistinct] separately. Just as a laical state cannot attempt to shape religions, sects, forms of worship, religious services and ceremonies, an individual cannot demand that the state's basic order be shaped in accordance with his religious and sectarian requirements."

"Moreover, a laical state is responsible for supplying religious services to its people to enable them to learn the requirements of the religion they believe in and to enable them to implement it. Our non-Muslim citizens have their own religion, religious funds and community administrations. They supply these services themselves in accordance with the provisions of the Lausanne Treaty. As for our Muslim citizens, who constitute 98.5 percent, they have religious buildings, places of worship and works inherited from their ancestors. It is the duty of the state to preserve them."

There are those who claim that a laical state cannot build mosques, that it cannot restore them and that it cannot pay the salaries of religious officials. Their aim is clear: They want to divide the nation. "We cannot, under any circumstances, sacrifice our national unity. They better get this fact clear. Those who try to portray laicism as a manifestation of antireligionism are not just those who are devoid of religious beliefs or who want to crush Islam. Unfortunately, we have been observing for years that those who have been unable to completely grasp the principles of our religion, despite the fact that their religious beliefs are strong, have also taken a stand against laicism."

"We have also observed certain politicians and certain individuals who have been pursuing their interests by taking advantage of the situation. We have observed those who have tried to gain political or personal influence by provoking the religious feelings of the citizens and by taking advantage of their lack of religious knowledge. Therefore, we have had provisions in our constitution on the issue since 1961. No one can exploit or misuse religious feeling or things considered religious or sacred for personal or political interests or influence."

At the time, there were those who aspired to establish a religious state and who exploited the people's religious feelings in order to seize power. They engaged in such activities following the abolition of the caliphate. Their activities reached a peak shortly before the 12 September operation. There were those among them who even favored a sultanate. According to Islamic principles, the office of a head of state is not acquired in accordance with heredity.

The reason we introduced lessons on religion into our schools is to prevent deception of religious issues. In my previous visit to Erzurum, I had said that religious lessons would be introduced in schools, and I asked you not to send your children to secret Koranic courses. Now we have included this in the constitution. Our children will thus learn about their religion in the state schools, through state lessons. In this manner, we are serving the principles of laicism. Laicism does not mean that the citizens should be left ignorant on the issue of religion, and thus be left in the hands of the instigators of sectarian differences.

"My dear citizens, with commonsense, will weigh the good and bad, and will cast their votes accordingly. The members of the former parties which have been dismantled, anarchists or terrorists who have not been captured -- by saying members I mean specific people, not all members -- those who continue their negative attitude with the aim of establishing another regime in Turkey, might try to persuade you to vote against the constitution. Actually, they are trying to do this now. We know that. They spread the word around. Do not be influenced by their persuasion. They serve their own interests. If you want the tranquillity, security and stability the country needs, if you believe in and trust us, then vote in favor of this constitution. If you do not believe in us, then vote against."

My dear brothers, my statement ends here. I thank you for the warmth, enthusaism and the love shown me and the other National Security Council members. I extend my best wishes.

VOTCP REPLY TO EVREN STATEMENT IN TRABZON

TA261059 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] Dear listeners, the head of the junta, Evren, made a speech in Trabzon yesterday. He spoke at a square surrounded by bayonets and military vehicles, and filled with civil servants from various state offices, forced to attend Evren's address, and other persons collected from different places. The junta had previously banned criticism of Evren's speeches. Evren is capable of addressing the public only through this shield of bans, bayonets and oppression. He is afraid of the people. This fright is reflected in his every speech and word. What did Evren say in Trabzon? He only openly threatened the people. He tried to intimidate them.

Evren said: In the past, when the power of the state by chance touched a citizen, everyone, including the parliament, used to rebel. Evren added that in the past when a policeman killed an individual he was arrested and prosecuted. Now, Evren said, the power of the state, namely its police and gendarmerie, will intentionally break the heads of the people and no one will oppose it, no one will be able to oppose it. The police will be free to commit murder, and no one will be able to touch the police. This is the way Evren explains the constitution which they propose to introduce. Evren is talking openly. He says: If you say no to the constitution, we will try everything in our power to crush your heads. If you say yes, we will again crush your heads. However, we will do it with your vote. Evren speaks clearly because he is supported by the bayonet, since he is afraid of the people. Dear listeners, we have a proverb that says "the oppression of the coward can be dreadful."

Let us stop to think, dear listeners. While Evren was criticizing the 1961 Constitution in Trabzon this morning, while he was trying to [words indistinct] the [word indistinct] incidents through lies and slanders, while he was defending the former [word indistinct] governor, Resat Akkaya, who is a member of the fascist Nationalist Action Party [NAP] while he was insulting all the political party members, while he was trying to profit from the bullets spent by the Armenian terrorist by trying to give the impression that those who oppose the constitution are in collaboration with these terrorists, while he was trying to create dissent among workers, technical personnel and civil servants through lies and while he was busy with all this demagogy, had a citizen listening to him said: "Pasha, you are not telling the truth," what would have happened? Wouldn't he have been shot on the spot on grounds that he was an anarchist?

Evren's constitution introduces such a regime of terror and oppression against those who seek their rights and those who tell the truth. Evren says that the anarchists will be shot. Who are the ones he calls anarchists? The 2-year junta trial period has clearly answered our question. Hundreds of unionists who have no connection whatsoever with anarchy and terror, thousands of workers, patriots, youths, women and intellectuals who fill the jails are being prosecuted. Even RPP leader Bulent Ecevit was jailed.

Our people were opposed to terror and fed up with the atmosphere of terror prior to the 12 September period. However, the juntaists have released the ringleaders of terrorism, namely the NAP members, and have knowingly refrained from revealing the dark center of terror. They jailed all those who expressed the wishes of the people for employment, bread, peace, democracy and national independence, claiming that they were terrorists.

Evren urged the people in Trabzon to vote in favor of the constitution. What kind of an answer would Evren have received had he asked the people of Trabzon if they wanted more bread, employment and soil? What kind of answer would he have received had he asked if they approved of the 10 military bases granted to the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force in eastern Anatolia, if they wanted to fight with their neighbors on behalf of the United States, and if they approved of transforming Anatolia into a nuclear cemetery?

The junta generals can face the people only through the protection of the bayonet because they have endangered the people's bread and the country's future. They want to crush all those wanting employment, bread, democracy and peace by branding them anarchists. They are protecting only the interests of the U.S. imperialists, a handful of money lords and the profiteering robbers who make millions through just a telephone call.

Evren's speech in Trabzon threatening press officials, writers in favor of democracy and the administrators and members of political parties shows only one thing, dear listeners. If our people do not say no to this constitution, if all the democratic forces do not intensify their struggle to achieve this end, the junta will increase its oppression in the future. It will do everything in its power to crush all opposition. We can see very clearly what the future has in store for us.

The Turkish Communist Party, from the very start, pointed out the disasters the junta regime would bring. Unfortunately, time has proven us right. we are again warning our people. If we do not say no to this junta of generals who are ready to continue their oppression because of their cowardice and fright, tomorrow will be worse than today.

BUDGET COMMITTEE ADOPTS ENERGY MINISTRY BUDGET

[Text] Energy and Natural Resources Minister Fahir Ilkel has said that the first target in energy planning should be to exploit domestic resources in the best possible way. He added that the second most important issue is the most rational and economic use of energy.

The Consultative Assembly Budget Planning Committee today adopted the Energy and Natural Resources Ministry's 1983 fiscal budget. Members who addressed the committee while the budget was being discussed said that the banking activities of ETI bank should be developed and strengthened in line with the bank's establishment goal, and that mining should be made into [words indistinct]. The speakers, who requested that activities aimed at transferring electricity payments to the Turkish electric power enterprise be speeded up, stated that activities in connection with the Ataturk dam should be dealt with carefully, and that importance should be attached to coal exploration, production and the use of domestic technology on the issue.

Replying to criticism, Ilkel said that the Turkish Petroleum Corporation [TPAO] will open 32 exploration and 24 production towers in 1983. Noting that crude oil production in 1982 is expected to reach 2.5 million tons, Ilkel said that eight companies have been granted 114 oil prospecting permits in 1982, and that 70 of the permits went to the TPAO. He added that there was an increase of some 55 percent in TPAO's oil prospecting activities in the first 9 months of 1982 as compared to the same period of 1981.

Ilkel said that the third and fourth units of the Hasan Ugurlu dam and the first unit of the Oymapinar dam will be operational in 1983. They will contribute an additional 997 million kilowatt hours of energy to the system. Ilkel noted that 92 irrigation, 24 energy and 8 potable water projects are included in next year's program.

Noting that new iron, nickel, magnesite and uranium beds have been found as a result of the mineral exploration activities conducted in 1982, Ilkel said that with the recently discovered resources, total coal reserves have reached some 8 billion tons.

The committee adopted the ministry's budget following Ilkel's address.

The spokesman stressed that the situation of the Turkish forces was being determined "according to defense requirements only."

VOTCP NOTES YILMAZ SPEECH AT LABOR MEETING

TA261151 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey at 0600 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Text] A meeting has been held on occasion of the (50th) anniversary of Turkey's becoming a member of the International Labor Organization [ILO]. Speaking at the meeting held in Ankara, Turk-Is [Turkish Confederation of Labor] leader Sevket Yilmaz said that Turkey has not been able to implement the agreements signed with the ILO or the obligations it has assumed. Noting that a great majority of the Turkish workers are deprived of their right to form unions and to conduct collective wage negotiations, Yilmaz said: There is discrimination between workers and civil servants. If all employed people, irrespective of the sector they work in, if all workers and civil servants are granted the right to form unions and to conduct collective wage agreements, then this problem, which has become a constantly bleeding wound, will be solved.

Criticizing the fact that various ILO agreements are still to be approved by Turkey, Yilmaz said: The limitations brought to syndical rights and freedoms in recent years have been reported to the ILO. Referring to the fact that certain circles have been exaggerating the number of work days lost as a result of strikes, Yilmaz said that the number of work days lost as a result of industrial accidents far exceeds those lost because of strikes.

It is reported that the discrepancy between Yilmaz's statement at this meeting and the one he made only yesterday, to the effect that Turk-Is viewed the junta constitution as positive, has become an issue for discussion in workers' syndical circles.

TURK INVOLVED IN ATTACK ON POPE BEING EXTRADITED

Ay was being sought for supplying arms to the murderers of lawyer Zeki Tekiner and grocer Yavuz Yukselbaba in Nevsehir on 17 June 1980, for sheltering the suspects and for supplying a fake passport to terrorist Mehmet Ali Agca who then shot the pope. After it was understood that Ay had fled the country, the Security Directorate applied to Interpol and arranged an international arrest warrant. Ay was apprehended in Hamburg, FRG, on 14 February 1982. The decision to extradite Ay was taken following steps taken by the Turkish Covernment. There is also an arrest warrant for Ay issued by the 2d Army Command Military Court.

TERCUMAN: PAPANDREOU BASIC ISSUE IN RELATIONS

NC260827 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 21 Oct 82 p 4

[By Professor Fahir Armaoglu: "A Strange Situation"]

[Text] Whoever understands the true situation in Turkish-Greek relations since the introduction of the moratorium story and can explain it to others deserves a prize. It is impossible to say that the present condition of these relations is different than before the moratorium was accepted.

In fact, it is wrong to use the word moratorium in diplomatic relations as this term has a financial connotation. "Moratorium" means a delay in the payment of debt. The meaning of the word here is for both sides to suspend accusations and quarrels for a time. Therefore, the term "gentleman's agreement" as used by Turkey is more correct.

Although the term is correctly used, it is wrongly applied. What sort of agreement is it where the Turkish side always keeps silent while the Greek side continues to talk and attack Turkey. Is this the aim of the gentlemen's agreement? At least in the past, correctly or incorrectly, some kind of reply used to be given to Greece's attacks, particularly to those emanating from Greece's blackmailer Papandreou. Now even that is not done because a moratorium or a gentleman's agreement is in force. So, Papandreou is continuing his blackmail activities. As long as Turkey keeps silent and he talks, the accusations leveled against Turkey will eventually acquire justification.

The matter has reached such a state that only Turkey has been talking about the advantages and usefulness of the moratorium or gentleman's agreement, as if Turkey is securing great advantages from this situation. In fact, the situation is totally different, and the existing agreement is functioning only one-sidedly. So much so, that this agreement is binding on Turkey but not on Greece. Turkey must lose no time in giving this agreement a new character.

As for Turkey, we must admit in advance that the issue between Turkey and Greece today is not the Aegean, the FIR line, airspace or the Cyprus issue. The fundamental issue of Turkish-Greek relations is Papandreou, who has absolutely nothing to do with the rules of morality or the concept of good will. A politician who only a few months ago threatened to expel the U.S. bases, abandon NATO and leave the EEC, but who retracts his pledges today, cannot be considered a statesman.

It is not possible to enter into negotiations with such a person. That is why Turkey must freeze its relations with Greece for the time being; suspend them until serious and reliable changes occur in Greece. Today's Greece can neither be a village nor a city.

OUR RADIO URGES PUBLIC TO LISTEN TO BROADCASTS

TA221147 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 22 Oct 82

[Text] Dear listeners, the junta generals have approved the constitution they have forced upon the people. With communique No 71, they have banned criticism of the provisional articles of the constitution and the statements to be made by General Evren during his tour of various provinces, which will broadcast over television and radio. Evren and the other junta generals are increasing prohibitions, pressures and oppression. Meanwhile, our people will not remain silent in the face of this black document. "Our Radio," which manifests the voice of our people, their aspirations and wishes, from the very beginning pointed out the reactionary antipeople essence of this constitution. No matter what the generals do, they are not able to silence the voice of "Our Radio." In these coming days, on the eve of the referendum, "Our Radio" will continue to pierce the censorship and bans of the junta heads together with the democratic forces.

Dear listeners, we will broadcast the developments of the previous day every morning at 0600 Turkish time [0300 GMT] starting from 23 October. General Evren, who will make a statement in Ordu on 24 October, will have the reply he deserves from "Our Radio" on the same day. You can listen to replies to the statement Evren will make on 5 November over television and radio and to all his other statements daily on "Our Radio." Dear listeners, listen to all the broadcasts of "Our Radio" from 0600 until 2400. Ask your friends, relatives and acquaintances to listen to "Our Radio." Let General Evren and the other junta heads continue to issue bans. Let them declare immunity for themselves and their constitution. "Our Radio" will continue to voice the aspirations and wishes of our people. Report and spread what you have heard over "Our Radio" in factories, villages, districts, coffeehouses, schools, offices and the barracks. The realities concealed by the mouthpiece of the junta, namely the Turkish radio and television, the unspoken and unrevealed realities will be broadcast by "Our Radio." Tune your radios to the 31.3 meter ban shortwave from 0600 to 1800 and to 48.4 from 2000 to 24000.

VOTCP SCORES CONSTITUTION, URGES REJECTION

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee statement issued on 20 October]

[Text] After making one or two insignificant changes, the National Security Council has ratified the draft constitution prepared and passed by the Consultative Assembly. This oppressive constitution, which favors the collaborationist, monopolist bourgeoisie and the profiteers, is being imposed on our people through the use of force. There is nothing here which was unexpected by our party or the progressive public. Hopes for substantial changes to be carried out by the Council in the constitution draft have not been realized. On the contrary, the article concerning the Higher Education Council [YOK], an organization known for its hostility toward the university students and youth in general, which was discarded from the draft constitution by the assembly, has been reinstated by the council.

Under heavy criticism, the Council was obliged to eliminate the article from the draft on the payment of trade union fees. Nevertheless, as a whole, the new constitution completely curtails trade union rights and liberties. The constitution has denied young workers the right to join the administration of the trade unions.

Officials belonging to political parties dissolved following the 12 September coup are being banned from carrying out any political activities.

Members of the last National Assembly are also not allowed to carry out political work. In this way, the generals are seeking to eliminate not only the organizations of the working class and the democratic forces as a whole, but also all democratic forces whom they consider to be their rivals.

In its successive publications, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] has tried to warn the public on the contents of the new constitution draft. Those opposing the constitution already constitute a considerable force among the masses. The recent attacks by the military junta on the TCP, the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK], the Textile Workers Trade Union and the Turkish Peace Committee members are only a sign of its fear on the eve of the constitutional referendum.

At this stage, a more intensified struggle is a necessity. There are pessimistic views to the effect that no matter what, the military junta will be able to force through the constitution in the referencum. Such views only serve to weaken the determination and struggle of the masses. The TCP warns our public against such demagogic rumors largely spread by Justice Party circles. These circles claim that in order to avert a crisis, a yes vote should be used in the referendum. They are deceiving the public with the expectation that the constitution can always be amended. The truth is that in the event this oppressive constitution is ratified in the coming referendum by a show of force, the present crisis will worsen. Encouraged by the votes it receives in the referendum through force and deceit, the stand of the military junta will become oppressive.

Only the rejection and tearing up of the constitution at the 7 November referendum will further strengthen those in favor of democracy. The moment the people say no to the military junta and its constitution, a way to solving the crisis will emerge. Preconditions will be created for the formation of a democratic government against the generals that our people do not want. To the polls for the constitution referendum! No to the military junta and its constitution!

[Signed] TCP Central Committee, 20 Oct 1982

VOTCP URGES KURDS TO BOYCOTT EVREN SPEECH

TA261412 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Unattributed commentary]

[Summary] People of Diyarbakir: "The junta chief Evren, who has turned your lives into hell, is coming to Diyarbakir for the third time. Do not go to listen to him." Let Evren and his generals speak to themselves.

The constitution he will talk to you about brings nothing that is favorable to you, the citizens of Diyarbakir, to the 45 million people who live in the country or to the millions of Kurds. "It is this junta which has plunged the knife of high prices, unemployment, lack of medical doctors, lack of medicine and lack of land into the chest of all the Turkish workers and you. This constitution will plunge the knife even deeper."

He is calling on you Kurds to say yes to his constitution, but Evren bans you from speaking Kurdish or from listening to Kurdish music.

If you want schools, roads, bread, doctors and medicine, if you want to be able to speak in Kurdish and to listen to Kurdish singers, then go to the ballot box on 7 November and vote no to the constitution. Do not go to listen to Evren on 27 October. By not going to listen to him, by leaving the junta generals and their lackeys alone, you will be showing that you are determined to vote no to the constitution.

You are workers. As one of the millions who live in Turkey, you are subjected to brute force. You are Kurds, therefore you are doubly exploited. The junta generals are trying to eliminate you. You 800,000 citizens of Diyarbakir: Do not go to listen to Evren and vote no on 7 November."

Richard Staar, chief U.S. delegate to the Vienna talks, said at a press conference in Helsinki today that the Warsaw pact and NATO will be able to sign the final document of the talks as soon as next spring. Staar said that reaching agreement on a mutual reduction of troops in central Europe would give a positive impetus to the American-Soviet talks in Geneva on the reduction of the number of nuclear missiles.

[Excerpt] Muradali Mamadussen, the Mozambique president's special envoy, was granted an audience yesterday by President Ramalho Eanes and Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao, to whom he conveyed personal messages from Samora Machel, the contents of which were not disclosed.

Following the meeting with the president of the republic, which lasted an hour, Mamadussen said that the meeting took place within the "framework of the fairly intensive development that has taken place between Portugal and Mozambique," stressing that "within the pattern established there must be regular contacts."

Muradali Mandussen cited as factors illustrating the intensity of Portuguese-Mozambican relations, the presence in Portugal of his country's public works and housing minister, Julio Carrilho, and the arrival next week of Defense Minister Alberto Chipande.

NATO TRAINING FOR ARMY OFFICERS CRITICIZED

AU271414 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 26 Oct 82 p 4

[Article by "J.B.": "With NATO Against NATO?"]

[Summary] The Austrian Army has been practicing defense maneuvers against a NATO attack in Tirol. "Surely it is praiseworthy that in the 27th year of its existence, the Austrian Army also wants to defend its neutrality against the West." However, it is not only VOLKSSTIMME reports about the open cooperation between the Austrian Army and NATO agencies over the "golden bonnet" air control system -- which have never been refuted -- that cast doubt on the seriousness of a concept of defense in all directions. Only recently, despite protests by the Steyr Works, M-60A3 tanks worth 800 million schillings were bought in the United States. But there is also something else which is not so well known to the public: "Top-ranking Austrian officers are being given training in the United States, and that does not count the courses for signals officers in the United States that are included in the price of certain U.S.-made radio equipment and are thus virtually regarded as part of the deal. Nor does it count the training courses for 'ranger' [English term given] officers in the United States. Rather, it is the participation of Austrian officers in 1-year general staff courses ('U.S. Army command and general staff course') at Fort Leavenworth, the general staff academy of the U.S. Armed Forces." And who has attended this course? For example, Division Commander Brosch-Fohraheim, who has been commander of the Austrian National Defense Academy since January 1981. Earlier, he had been the personal aide of Defense Minister Schleinzer and, earlier still, an active officer in the Hitler Wehrmacht for 6 years. Now he is in charge of the entire training and advanced training of officers, especially of the high-ranking officers. "Thus, it can surely be said without exaggeration, that NATO-trained Division Commander Brosch-Fohraheim holds a central control and coordination position through which he is able to establish special personal contacts."

To ensure that the division commander does not become too lonely as far as NATO is concerned, Colonel Dialer -- who from June 1978 to June 1979 attended the general staff course at Fort Leavenworth -- was recently appointed head of the institute for higher officers training at the National Defense Academy. Colonel Dialer will be in charge of courses for staff officers, troop commanders, logistics officers and general staff officers. In turn, U.S. officers attended the 3-year general staff course of the Austrian Army, 1979-1981, together with officers from France, Italy and Switzerland.

"Perhaps the gentlemen were studying the 'Austrian road,' the Alps, or perhaps simply our neutrality." "Or could it be that they informed us about the NATO offensive plans and only in this way made it possible to hold the first anti-NATO exercise?" "At any rate, it is a fact that NATO-oriented officers and the army of a neutral state are hardly compatible, even less so if one knows what is being taught at Fort Leavenworth."

DE VOLKSKRANT: ATTITUDE TO NATO SPENDING 'ODD'

[Editorial: "Defense"]

[Text] On the same day that the negotiators from the Christian Democratic Appeal and the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy [VVD] agreed in the draft government accord to cut the NATO defense budget growth norm of 3 percent down to 2 percent, NATO Commander in Chief Rogers suggested in Brussels that this growth norm should be increased to 4 percent. Initial reactions in The Hague made little of the suggestion. There is no official agreement on 4 percent, The Hague said, and so anything like that is out of the question. This sounds somewhat odd at a time when the two most probable government parties are carelessly turning the existing official agreement on an annual growth rate of 3 percent into one of 2 percent.

Rogers' argument is relatively simple. If NATO wants to remain a credible defense force at the same time the role played by nuclear arms is reduced, a great deal of money will have to be spent on the modernization and expansion of conventional defenses. Hence the 4 percent, which according to Rogers has already been fixed in the alliance's estimates for the 1983-88 period. The classical dilemma from the fifties has returned. Either more money for conventional arms (the famous hundred division once proposed in Lisbon), or a larger role for nuclear arms. Netherlands cabinets of the time were quick to let the figures speak for themselves.

However, much has changed in the last 30 years, not only in international relations, but also in the climate of the Netherlands discussion around defense spending and nuclear arms. Security policy is still subject to budgetary considerations. Whoever followed the VVD election campaign must be surprised at its standstill on NATO and the fact that the party's commitment to at least maintain the defense growth rate in a government accord is translated into massive cuts in growth.

From a purely national viewpoint, a figure of 2 percent is not difficult to defend. In fact, it is based on a realistic assessment of actual developments since 1979 (the year of the 3 percent agreement) and shows that the percentage has not yet been achieved. Nor does it seem to be anyone's policy to leave defense out when enormous cuts are being made everywhere in public spending. But it should be remarked that this has little to do with a consistent security policy within the framework of NATO.

SPD'S SCHIMDT MAKES RESIGNATION STATEMENT

DW280739 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 27 Oct 82 p 3

[Statement by former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt presented to the SPD Bundestag faction on 26 October]

[Text] I. I am grateful that Herbert Wehner gave me the opportunity to make a personal statement after I reached a decision at the end of last week. I know that what I have to say will cause not only agreement but also criticism.

I will deliver my statement to the Bundestag faction first because I feel most responsible with regard to you. For three decades I have considered this faction to be my political home. For 3 years I have headed the faction myself and I have a lifelong feeling of comraderie with it.

First of all, I want to express my cordial thanks for the many letters from and talks with colleagues from the faction and the party. I also want to express my thanks for the thousands of letters and telegrams from citizens from all over our country.

In this connection, I have experienced much regret as well as resentment regarding political developments since late September. However, I have also received many expressions of sympathy: I most sincerely thank everyone who has addressed me.

The advice I received however, was very contradictory: On the one hand, I was advised and requested to run as the leading candidate in the March elections; one the other, I was advised not to do just that.

In all these messages there was a certain indignation over the actions of Mr Genscher and the majority of the FDP as well as hope for a quick return to a Social Democratic government. There also was concern about the long-term effect of a political change to the advantage of the rightists. Naturally, concern over the loss of mandates also played a role, and in many cases there was also clear concern over the future political course of our party.

Outside the party -- that is, among the people in general -- concern over the continuation of our rational and responsible peace policy clearly plays the main role.

At the same time, some controversies of recent years receded amazingly far into the background. For example: economic and finance-political controversies; social political controversies; the quarrel over nuclear energy and the quarrel over the possibility of a radical environmental protection policy; the quarrel over the alliances's dual decision; and the quarrel over the unity of defense and disarmament strategies.

II. I have honestly examined the arguments of all discussion partners and everyone who wrote me. In doing this, I have come to the following political conclusion:

1. Although I am quite prepared to realize my own mistakes and omissions, I couldn't -- and I wouldn't abandon significant views, aims and methods of a policy which I, together with others, represented and developed for more than 16 years as federal chancellor and, before that, as a minister and faction chairman.

2. Therefore, I cannot imagine holding coalition negotiations after 6 March -- not with the CDU/CSU or with the Greens. Everyone will understand that Mr Genscher couldn't be my partner in any respect. Under the present conditions, I can't and won't represent my political concepts other than as I have done before -- the last time in the 12 points of the 1 October government statement.

3. I became aware that some comrades were urging me on because they hoped that Schmidt's candidacy for chancellor would result in strengthening the continuation and constancy of Social Democratic policy. I also realized, however, that some comrades simply wanted to temporarily hold off the above-mentioned controversies as well as other differences of opinion.

4. I understood that for us Social Democrats it is now important not only to abstain from endangering our ability to govern, but much rather to strengthen this ability. We must be able to take the Federal Government on short notice.

I think I am quite able -- as before and also in the future -- to deal with adverse trends so as to hold to the planned and unchanged political course.

III. However, I have considerable reason to question whether and for how long I could continue this due to physical and health reasons. This was the main reason for the time I needed [to reach a decision]. The examination by the opinion of my internist in Koblenz and his colleagues after more than 10 years of treatment by the same physicians led to the following result: In 1972 I had a thyroid illness. Since then I have a considerably smaller thyroid and must take medication daily. In 1980 I had severe myocarditis. Since the summer of 1982 my heart action has been considerably impaired, and this led to the need for a pacemaker. The prognosis for these problems is uncertain. All three of these life threatening diseases could be cured by rest; I couldn't afford to do this because of the hectic activities resulting from political developments.

I am describing all this in such detail not because I am seeking compassion: anyone who treats his health in such a way must bear full responsibility himself. I am describing these problems in order to make last week's medical decisions understandable.

Last week I was urged to work 8-10 hours daily instead of 15-16 hours, to take much more leave, sleep more, have more free time and not subject myself to the pressure of appointments.

To summarize all this in one sentence, I would say: It would be dishonest to stand as candidate in public elections for an office which I seriously fear today I would only really be able to perform for just a fraction of the legislative period owing to health reasons.

This opinion would have been the same for potential Bundestag elections in the fall of 1982 -- something I didn't know 4 weeks ago.

IV. For these reasons I have decided -- with a heavy heart -- not to follow the appeals which the party executive board and the Bundestag faction have addressed to me. I informed the party and faction chairmen accordingly beforehand, as well as the Presidium last night.

I don't want to keep it a secret that I also discussed it with a man from my church -- as I often have in my life. He convinced me -- in good knowledge of all circumstances -- that as things stand, my decision wouldn't bring me in conflict with my own moral concept of fulfilling one's duty -- and also not with my duties with regard to the party.

I had arrived at this conclusion myself -- and it was not easy for me.

I sincerely ask you, therefore, to let me step gracefully from the center of the political fight.

Naturally, I want to continue to represent the constituency of Hamburg-Bergedorf parliament. Naturally, in the future I will also be at your disposal in parliament and in the election campaign, to the extent desired by the leadership of the party and the faction.

V. I am convinced that this step offers an opportunity to free the way for younger forces in our party. As of today, everyone will be needed.

I want to offer my help beforehand to the Social Democrat who, after the necessary decisions by our party organs, will lead us in the coming Bundestag election campaign.

In this connection, I am particularly concerned about one point: It is often very lonely not just in the top office of the state, and it is necessary to conceal the loneliness as well as the injuries you have suffered; it can be very lonely just being a candidate for the top job as federal chancellor. Not only opponents, but your own comrades as well, can be very offensive with their egotism.

If the term solidarity is supposed to have more than theoretical value, then practical conclusions must be drawn from this basic value.

One of the conclusions is as follows -- Walter Hesselbach mentioned it a few days ago in his eulogy of Heinz Oskar Vetter: Discipline is the legitimate child of solidarity.

Indeed, without political discipline, solidarity among us Social Democrats wouldn't be worth much. Therefore, in the future I will contribute as much as I can to the following old rule which is again becoming applicable: diversity in internal discussions -- but unity in outward action.

I will be fully available with advice and action for the new man to help him bear his burden. Naturally, I will also be available to Klaus von Dohnanyi and my Hamburg comrades: My home town needs a clear Social Democratic mandate.

Nobody will have reason to doubt my deeply rooted Social Democratic attitude. I have devoted my life to Social Democracy and its aims and tasks -- and this will continue to be the case.

CABINET AGREES ON BUDGET, ECONOMY MEASURES

LD271750 Hamburg DPA in German 1649 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 27 Oct (DPA) -- On Wednesday, after a full day of discussions, the federal cabinet has decided on the federal budget for 1983 and the second supplementary budget for 1982. Next year, net borrowing is to rise from the original figure of DM28.4 billion to DM41.5 billion. This year it will rise from DM33.9 billion to DM39.9 billion. Total federal expenditures in 1983 will rise 2.9 percent above the 1982 target, to DM253.5 billion. In order to limit debts, savings to the tune of DM5.65 billion are to be made next year. One of the most important measures is an increase of unemployment insurance contributions as of 1 January, not to 4.5 percent -- as had been planned -- but to 4.6 percent. Other measures include savings in the civil service, a 6-month delay in the implementation of pension increases and the introduction of income limits for child benefits. Value-added tax will rise from 13 to 14 percent on 1 July 1983 and a levy on higher wage-earners to aid investment is to benefit, above all, housing construction.

UK-FRG SUMMIT TO DISCUSS PIPELINE EMBARGO

[Excerpt] Bonn, Oct 27 (AFP) -- Defence problems and the transatlantic row over Washington's embargo of the Soviet gas pipeline to Europe will dominate this week's Anglo-German summit, West German Government sources said here today.

The two-day summit opens here tomorrow.

(In London, British Government sources said that Premier Margaret Thatcher hoped to use the meeting to push her quest for a long-term solution to Britain's budget tussle with Margaret Thatcher's Common Market partners.)

But the German sources said that the EEC budget problem was unlikely to feature on the agenda.

They stressed that Chancellor Helmut Kohl wanted to forge a common position with London on the pipeline dispute in preparation for his visit to Washington next month, when he will meet President Ronald Reagan.

They added that Bonn would also be informing Britain about its defence talks with France last week.

Officials here have noted with interest Mrs Thatcher's recent declaration on television that she backed the installation of new U.S. missiles in Europe if Moscow refuses to dismantle its SS-20 missiles targeted on Western Europe.

Military strength reinforces peace, while weakness merely attracts war, she said, adding that it was "illusory" to support stronger conventional forces in Western Europe while at the same time urging unilateral nuclear disarmament.

(At the summit, Britain is likely to take every opportunity to complain that its contribution to the European Economic Community budget is too great, since the budget is devoted mainly to agriculture -- a relatively small part of the British economy.

(London therefore wants a corrective mechanism to cut its budget contribution over the next four years. It has threatened to suspend its budget payments if a satisfactory accord is not reached.

(The EEC Council of Ministers agreed at Luxembourg yesterday to grant Britain a refund on its 1982 budget contribution, but a longer-term solution has still to be found.)

The two leaders, who met briefly last week in London, are also likely to discuss the enlarging of the EEC and the EEC approach to next month's ministerial meeting of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

OFFICIAL DENIES CUT IN SOVIET OIL IMPORTS

NC272004 Paris AFP in English 1951 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 27 (AFP) -- France has not stopped or suspended import licences for oil and oil products from the Soviet Union, a Ministry of Foreign Trade official said here today.

He was reacting to reports from reliable sources that the Energy Ministry last week told several oil companies, including the firms [Cie. Francaise de] Raffinage and ELF, to temporarily cut their imports of refined oil products from the Soviet Union.

The official conceded, however, that France wanted to "adjust" its imports of Soviet oil and oil products to match its real needs and to safeguard its export interests.

French purchases of Soviet refined oil products reached 2.2 million tons over the first eight months of the year -- 56 per cent more than in the corresponding period last year.

Recently France warned that it would reconsider its purchases of Soviet gas if Moscow did nothing to help cut its big trade surplus with France.

CHINA REFUSES COMMENT ON POPE'S OVERTURES

AU271606 Rome ANSA in English 1507 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Beijing, October 27 -- China replied with a "no comment" today to Pope John Paul II's overtures for rapprochement between the Vatican and Beijing, whose relations were interrupted more than thirty years ago.

The reply, while apparently curt, is actually a sign that the Chinese Government has acknowledged the desire expressed by the pope to re-open a dialogue with China and its four million Chinese Catholics, according to diplomatic sources here.

The Foreign Ministry's "no comment" probably reflects the delicacy of the moment and the Chinese Government's desire to pursue through confidential diplomatic channels the process begun publicly by the pope, according to the sources who say they are optimistic a semi-diplomatic contact will be made.

On Monday, the pope had voiced the confidence that a dialogue could be re-opened with Communist China. He also voiced the hope that members fo the Jesuit order -- who founded the Chinese Catholic Church when Jesuit Matteo Ricci came to China four centuries ago -- could return to the Asian nation.

During a ceremony to commemorate Ricci in Rome, Pope John Paul read a message which several observers said took pains to avoid the distinction between Taiwan (which the Vatican recognizes as representative of China) and the mainland and warmly addressed "the entire Chinese people."

The sources said this latter point will be appreciated by the Chinese Government which has always been very suspicious of foreign religious hierarchies and their influence in China.

POLAND'S ARCHBISHOP TO VISIT SPAIN WITH POPE

Pope John Paul II's pontifical visit to Spain will last until November 9.

THIRD WORLD OFFERED COMMUNICATIONS ASSISTANCE

AU261532 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Nairobi, October 26 -- Italy has offered technical aid to developing countries to improve their communication systems for the sake of furthering a relationship of cooperation between industrialized nations and Third World countries, according to Italian Post Office Minister Remo Gaspari.

Addressing the local assembly of the International Telecommunications Union in Nairobi Monday, Gaspari indicated that the overall aim of Italian policy was to see to it that the world's communications network was made to run better.

In a meeting with the Kenyan post office and telecommunications minister on Monday, Gaspari stressed the need to speed up the employment of "Italcable's" tourist data system, "Dardo". The Kenyan side said it was ready to come to terms with Italy on an agreement for developing the service.

Italy has been a member of the international union's Board of Councilors since 1885, an office that was confirmed for another term during the current assembly.

GOVERNMENT WINS TWO VOTES OF CONFIDENCE 27 OCT

AU271938 Rome ANSA in English 1924 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, October 27 -- The Italian Government won two votes in the Rome lower house today to scotch predictions in the newspapers this morning that Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini's team of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Liberals and Republicans was moribund.

"You gave me for dead", said Spadolini after the lunchtime vote to reporters. "What will you find to say when I decide my government should fall?"

The government first won a confidence vote on a government decree fixing increases in value added tax. The vote was, by Constitution, a nominal one so no surprises were expected with 348 ayes beating 237 noes.

The second vote was secret and was on the overall measure submitted by the cabinet. This had been the subject of heated polemic among the government partners. But the government won by an only slightly reduced majority of 318 ayes to 258 noes.

CRAXI, PSI DIRECTORATE DISCUSS ECONOMIC POLICY

PM271007 [Editorial Report] Rome AVANTI in Italian 8 October 1982 carries on pages 1-2 a 1,000-word unattributed report on PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi's 7 October speech at a PSI Directorate meeting on economic policy. Craxi confirms his party's commitment to "a policy of rigorousness, reform and justice," explaining that this implies "a sense of balance and gradualness." He calls for a long-term program of reform in public finance, whose present "imbalance" he identifies as "the most serious factor of distortion in the present situation." He recommends special assistance to small and medium enterprises to assist the recovery of production.

Craxi promises "consistent backing" for the government's decisions and says that "any lapse of solidarity within the majority on essential elements of the financial decrees and bill proposed by the government would be unacceptable," though "suggested improvements could emerge from the parliamentary debate." He calls for "a particular commitment from the Socialist parliamentary groups to ensure no repetition of the repeatedly criticized instances of unjustified absenteeism or disaffection."

The same issue of AVANTI also carries on page 1-2 the text of a 1,000-word Directorate document approved at the same meeting. With regard to fiscal policy, the document calls for a "containment of public spending," "a major recovery of fiscal revenue by means of a tougher fight against evasion" and "the introduction of taxes that will adjust the balance of the tax burden between dependent workers and other taxpayers" and "a new thrust to investment" "within the context of a reduction in real terms of the 1982 deficit."

The document also recommends the following measures to assist a recovery of private investment:

"1. A significant reduction in lending rates;

"2. Support for exports, the granting of improved credit terms and the supply of adequate welfare services to enterprises;

"3. An active labor policy in line with known party stances; and

"4. A policy to stimulate production by providing incentives for technological innovations, professional training and the diversification of production."

The document describes the recent agreement for the purchase of Algeria methane gas as "highly positive," adding that it will not jeopardize the "Soviet gas question."

PSI'S CRAXI REJECTS BROAD ALLIANCE WITH DC

PM271011 Rome AVANTI in Italian 10-11 Oct 82 p 1, 5

[Unattributed PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi interview, reprinted from IL MESSAGERO; date and place not specified]

[Excerpts] [Question] Conflicts and disputes persist among the major democratic parties. What are their political and strategic causes?

[Answer] I cannot list all the conflicts, disputes, difficult disagreement, and growing mistrust among the democratic parties. I would have to write a pamphlet on it, and I do not have the time, even if I had the inclination. Too many situations are contradictory and so many others deserve careful analysis and, in some cases, severe criticism. All I can say is that for months, not days, we have been witnessing a progressive erosion of political relations in general, and little has been done to contain this trend. There are troubles that are afflicting the major political forces in particular, and there is a tendency to offload these tensions outside. It is no coincidence that we are the favorite target of so much attention, of varying degrees of sincerity, and of so much polemic, which is achieving absolutely nothing and which serves only to keep the temperature up. Furthermore, there is a superimposition of topical political issues and of strategic formulations or examinations which obviously complicate interparty relations. It is difficult to discuss our present and future duties, commitments and propensities if at every step suggestions or questions are raised concerning the more distant future. Finally, the political forces have scented the elections. They all frantically proclaim that they do not want elections, but in fact they do have elections in mind and in any case have been acting for months exactly as if they were in the midst of an election campaign. This all creates an artificial and exhausting climate.

[Question] What are the PSI's political and institutional proposals for a positive solution to these now-chronic conflicts?

[Answer] We will center our research, our initiative and our political will in the coming months' activity on five essential issues for Italy's future, with an eye to the possible scenarios of the years ahead. I am talking about the problems of our economic development and the problems of planning, modernization, strengthening and conversion that this involves. I am talking about the social question and the real inequalities that characterize our society, if examined properly, and that are due not to the phenomena of the end of the last century but to the phenomena of the end of this century and that must be tackled in accordance with a table of values in which unjust egalitarianism is not confused with just equity.

I am talking about institutional reforms, or rather a grand reform embracing all aspects of the revision, reorganization and reform of our public structures.

I am talking about the major struggle against crime and violence, against the corruption and bullying which various forms of mafia -- major criminal organizations widespread in the south and with ramifications throughout the country -- systematically conduct, thus creating a climate of increasing insecurity, uncertainty and protest. I am also talking about better defending our country against foreign incursions, spies, agents provocateurs and assassins. Italy must be defended against this, particularly its capital -- this Rome which has too often seemed an open and defenseless city, where attempts can be made on the pope's life, death sentences can be carried out and all kinds of attacks perpetrated, the latest of which was the evil one against the synagogue.

Finally, I am talking about the "international question," which concerns Italy's role in Europe, the Mediterranean, the Third World and wherever there are active Italian communities; its peace initiative within security and independence.

The Socialist initiative will remain within the most specific context possible. We want to understand Italy, its real needs, its capacities and possibilities for progress and development, which I still consider substantial. It is not a matter of eliminating political conflicts. Democracy thrives on disputes, contrapositions and rivalries. By characterizing our action by a sane idea of modern reformism, we would like to help Italian political life regain its sense of a healthy specificity that will eliminate or reduce the gulfs that have often occurred between the political world or the politico-bureaucratic blocs and society as a whole, in all its expressions and values.

[Question] The DC secretary has proposed a preelection pact among the five government parties. The PSI rejects it. Why?

[Answer] We have never accepted the advances aimed at forming a leftwing "joint program" for a hundred good reasons, and we do not want to accept the advances for a "joint program" with the DC for more than a hundred good reasons. We want to maintain our fully autonomous position in every respect. This does not mean we are abandoning our policy of openness to possible forms of cooperation within agreed contexts. It does not mean that, when the time comes, we will not say words that are less than clear to the voters. [sentence as published]

[Question] You have confirmed that at present the conditions for the alternative do not exist. But unless at least a minimal dialogue is begun on the left on the major issues, is the PSI not in danger of being made the prisoner of cooperation with the DC and therefore of DC-PCI bipolarism?

[Answer] As far as we are concerned, we have always kept open the dialogue on the left. We have offered many fields for dialogue and have stimulated debates that we considered, and still consider, of essential value for an elucidation of the aims of the various Italian leftwing forces. Unfortunately, we have often had to raise our shields to protect ourselves from the rain of blows being directed against us and also to be able to return them effectively. Things are difficult but not impossible. We have always sought a convergence on the major issues, albeit proceeding from different parliamentary stances, among all the progressive forces. This remains our firm stance.

[Question] An embryo of a secular pole emerged in recent years. Why did this tendency not survive the impact of the August government crisis? What can, and will, the PSI do to regain ground in this regard?

[Answer] We still attach particular importance to good relations, cooperation and, if possible, the development of strategy among the forces of the secular and socialist area. Nevertheless, it would be better for the future to entrust the possible resumption and consolidation of such a process to facts rather than to summit meetings. However, it is not we who have strayed from this outlook and this context. The DC regarded this Socialist attention toward the secular parties as a dishonest and unjust attitude with respect to itself. It talked about a political area as if it were a colony or protectorate. From the outset it received different replies. It will probably receive more of them, and everyone will be able to judge and assess them.

MOZAMBIQUE'S CHIPANDE BEGINS TALKS IN LISBON

MB261303 Maputo in English to Southern Africa 1100 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Text] Mozambique's minister of defense, Lt Gen Alberto Chipande, is beginning talks today in Lisbon with Portuguese officials to clarify the extent of military cooperation already agreed on between the two countries. General Chipande is heading a seven-member delegation which will meet with the Portuguese minister of defense, Diogo Freitas do Amaral. A memorandum agreeing to military cooperation was signed in April this year, and Portugal has since sent a small shipment of light arms and uniforms to Mozambique. Both sides have acknowledged that cooperation is not likely to take the form of Portuguese instructors in Mozambique.

During the visit to Portugal, Lieutenant General Chapande will spend 5 days in Great Britain for talks with British Minister of Defense John Nott. He will also visit firms manufacturing uniforms and military equipment, and visit the parachute regiment.

PAPER WELCOMES REAGAN SHIFT ON PIPELINE ISSUE

[Editorial: "Reagan's Concession"]

[Text] The decision recently announced by President Ronald Reagan to cancel the U.S. technological embargo on the construction of the gas pipeline from Siberia to Europe and to consider jointly with his allied European countries more effective alternatives that will force the USSR to ease the situation in Poland constitutes a rational and courageous stance which will not fail to exert a positive influence on the dialogue between the two sides of the Atlantic. Since politics must not be viewed within the narrow limits of "point scoring," that which now appears to be a defeat for Reagan is above all a victory that facilitates the cohesion of the Atlantic alliance, which is thus given the chance to clarify its relations and try to redefine a global strategy based on a balanced and coherent platform.

Let us not delude ourselves, however, regarding the reasons which motivated this concession by the White House. For those still in doubt, it has been proven that the "Old Continent," despite its acceptance of U.S. leadership, is unwilling to accept decisions that ignore its autonomous interests. Although the pipeline issue has been portrayed as a "family quarrel," as Helmut Schmidt called it, the fact is that a crisis of confidence was created between Washington and the European capitals. French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson went so far as to talk in terms of a "progressive divorce" when his country and the FRG, with the British Government's backing, finally broke the U.S. boycott.

A practical man, as he had already shown by yielding to the southern farmers' pressure over the grain embargo, President Reagan has now recognized the failure of what was his first major attempt to force Europe to adopt a concerted action against the Kremlin. The fact that Ronald Reagan has backed down does not, in itself, imply a reformulation of his country's policy with respect to Europe, possibly as a result of a realization of the influences acting upon it. But it does constitute at least a recognition of the failure of a certain obsolete approach to dealings with the Old Europe, an approach which the Europeans, headed by Giscard and Schmidt, or Mitterrand and Kohl, seem increasingly unwilling to accept.

PREELECTION CURRENCY CONTROL, SECURITY ENHANCED

LD271308 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] The government has set special measures in motion to control the possible flight of capital and public security during the political period from election day to the formation of a new government, which is expected to take place in mid-December. According to information received by the EFE agency from sources at the State Secretariat, the government believes that there is no reason why the transfer of power resulting from the elections should pose problems in the functioning of public administration. Control measures have been stepped up at air and sea ports to prevent the illegal trafficking of currency. As far as public security is concerned, the army has begun covering certain areas so that the entire state security forces can devote themselves to guarding electoral colleges, public figures and buildings.

KING RECEIVES PARTY LEADERS, ASSURES CIVIC PEACE

[Text] Madrid, Oct 27 (AFP) -- King Juan Carlos today told Spain's political leaders that he was firmly committed to "the defense of the Spanish Constitution and the sovereign will of the people".

The monarch made the pledge at a meeting with the leaders of the seven political parties for which Spaniards will be casting their ballots tomorrow (Thursday) in legislative elections. The party leaders pledged to work together loyally following the election for a consolidation of democracy, despite their ideological differences. The meeting took place at the royal Zarzuela Palace here and the gist of what was said was disclosed by the various leaders.

Felipe Gonzalez, the Socialist leader tipped to win the ballot, said the king had denounced in advance all attempts from whichever quarter to interfere with civic peace in Spain. Manual Fraga Iribarne, leader of the Conservative Popular Alliance, said the meeting with the king served to reassure Spaniards in the face of rumors circulating in Spain about the possibility of a military coup attempt.

Other party leaders in the meeting, which also dealt with Spain's preoccupying economic situation, included Santiago Carrillo of the Communist Party and former Premier Adolfo Suarez of the Democratic and Social Center. Also present at the palace was the current Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo.

MOVE TO OUTLAW PARTIES WILL NOT AFFECT ELECTIONS

LD280022 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Excerpt] The Interior Ministry has asked the General State Prosecutor to initiate proceedings to outlaw the Spanish Solidarity -- Tejero's group -- and the Spanish Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist). But, because the move is being made at this time, it will have no effect on the election. Today, 28 October, the two parties are still legal. Any decision to the contrary can be taken only by the national high court.

The General State Prosecutor -- who did indeed say a few days ago that there could be grounds for declaring Spanish Solidarity illegal -- has the right to ask the courts to suspend the two parties provisionally. But even if that decision is made it will not take affect until after election day.

PSOE'S GONZALEZ ON LATIN AMERICAN TIES

PA261916 Panama City CRITICA in Spanish 25 Oct 82 p 19

[Article entitled "Latin America -- A Policy of Brotherhood and Commitment" by Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party and "leading candidate" in the 28 October general elections in Spain; exclusive for CRITICA]

[Text] Madrid, 23 Oct (special for IPS) -- Two important events have occurred within the electoral campaign in Spain that involve Latin America.

On 12 October, the rightist and leftist political parties expressed their foreign policy views in support of intensifying relations with the American continent.

And now, as we think about the elections only a short time before the voting on 28 October, we are full of joy on hearing news that is cause for pride among the admirers of Spanish literature and the Spanish people in general: Garcia Marquez has won the Nobel Prize for Literature.

It is interesting to note the Spanish rightwing's verbal rapprochement with the American reality. One might innocently accept it were it not that rightwing representatives had the opportunity to undertake such an ambitious supranational project in recent Spanish history.

What has been the result of that, in my view nonexistent, foreign policy? Simply put, well-known concepts that should be the basis of any Spanish foreign policy have been drafted. However, the Spanish rightist organizations frequently use such phrases as: "economic bridge with Europe, privileged relations, Hispanic American aspiration," and others.

It is truly regrettable that in this area of Spanish policy there has been little change between the governments of the dictatorship and the governments of transition.

The Spanish Socialist Workers Party, PSOE, proposes a fundamental change in this policy, in that sincere and practical content should be given to relations with Latin America. If there is one thing that defines our proposal for change, it is a new morality in both domestic and foreign policy.

If we win the elections, we will make great efforts to expand current relations with Latin America, strengthening the ties with those nations and with all democrats on the American continent. The PSOE will not stop at a mere declaration of principles, even though the principles are substantial, so that all of our party's foreign policy can be focused. Instead, in the next few years we will be multiplying the exchanges with Latin America.

The PSOE's foreign policy is inspired by the political change that the Socialist Party is proposing. As in all areas of the program, we think that we must overcome those economic concepts that rule the world and divide it into two large blocs that are confronting each other and dragging the rest of the countries to who knows what.

In this sense, Latin America and Spain have common objectives, because one cannot view the development of peoples without including the international struggle for detente and disarmament.

Concepts such as public freedoms, political democracy, social equality, access of all citizens to education and cultural anticolonialism are included in the political change proposed by the PSOE.

Obviously, we are not trying to ignore the geopolitical area in which we live and the nations with which we have been traditionally united. Spain's policy has a Western orientation, which is not incompatible with a growing Iberian American dimension nor with the liberation of the communities and men of all continents.

Therefore, with a Socialist government, Spain will be increasingly more aggressive in the international arena in defense of human rights. Thus, the PSOE actions in foreign policy will encompass:

1. Active cooperation in promoting the new international economic order, which should place economic relations among countries on the basis of real equality. For this reason, it will support measures to prevent continued exploitation of one area of the world by another, which leads to the perpetuation of colonialist ties through subtle procedures.

2. Uncompromising defense of human rights, whether individual, collective, political, economic or cultural.

3. Solidarity with the peoples who are struggling for democratic freedoms. The Socialist foreign policy seeks to increase Spain's solidarity with democrats who live under the yoke of dictatorships.

The future lies in this policy of cultural, technological and ecnoomic exchange among the nations of the Iberian American community. The PSOE is willing to bring the new orientation in Spanish policy into harmony with exchanges with Europe, the Mediterranean and North Africa.

With the Socialists in government, our nation will be able to create the necessary rapprochement between "Old Europe" and the future of the nations, which unquestionably lies in Latin America.

If Europe has a number of values and technological advances that can counterbalance the weight of the superpowers in future, Latin America and Spain can contribute imaginative ways of solving common problems and possess, in many cases, an unexploited potential of energy in various sectors of production.

All of this is in addition to our common objectives, which the European continent has forgotten in many cases, the result of historical inertia. Therefore, Spain and Latin America have a common plan for society, a humanistic view that places man above anything else and that focuses on his freedom and equality as the center of any policy.

Spain's geogrpahic location in Europe has not affected our common historical ties, which have sometimes been distant.

FRG TV INTERVIEWS THATCHER ON EUROPEAN PROBLEMS

DW271133 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2000 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Interview with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher by correspondent Walter Helfer at Downing Street in London, date not given, in English with superimposed German translation -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Prime Minister, there is both good and bad news these days on the British economic front. You have impressively reduced inflation, but on the other hand you are facing the highest unemployment rate since the war. Do we in Europe have to live with this high unemployment rate or do you see any way in the long run to stop this vicious circle of inflation and unemployment?

[Answer] Yes, but inflation and unemployment are not alternatives in the long run. In order to tackle the problem of unemployment, inflation has to go down first, even though this is not all. On a short-term basis, the struggle against inflation entails a considerable increase in unemployment, but not in the long run. Unemployment is our biggest problem. A worldwide recession is coinciding with technological changes. We must restructure our industry to take into account the changes that have occurred in the Far East and in some of the developing countries.

This means that we must cope simultaneously with three problems. We must operate with sound finances, encourage enterprise and those who can create new products and have inventive genius, and encourage those who can translate them into successful industries.

[Question] When Federal Chancellor Kohl was here last week, he expressly stated that European solidarity is one of the major objectives of his policy. Still, the Common Market is in the worst state ever. What do you expect the Europeans in general and the Federal Republic in particular to do to make the EC viable in the future?

[Answer] I wouldn't say that the Common Market is worse than ever. There will always be quarrels in a family. However, that does not mean that the family does not want to stay together. The best contribution we all can make is to pursue a sound economic policy. This greatly facilitates cooperation.

We just managed to agree on a very, very difficult problem with regard to steel. The worldwide overabundance of steel is a real problem. We have managed to agree on that for the benefit of our countries, and I hope we'll manage the other problems as well -- for example, the problem of the next EC budget. I don't think it is right for the Federal Republic to pay such huge amounts into the EC coffers while the other countries pay nothing at all, except Great Britain, of course. We must negotiate on this on the basis of fairness and equality. I am the first to understand that.

[Question] Prime Minister, just as Federal Chancellor Kohl, you see the best guarantee for ensuring freedom in a militarily strong West Europe. What will happen if the Soviet Union refuses to accept the U.S. proposal, the so-called zero option?

[Answer] Well, we of course both agree that we have to be strong. A bully or a tyrant will attack the weakling. We support President Reagan's proposal. However, if the Soviet Union aims its SS-20 missiles at targets in Europe, we must have something equal. If the disarmament talks fail, the U.S. cruise missiles must be stationed in Europe. Strength protects peace and security, weakness attracts war. We must always remember that.

[Question] Aren't you concerned about the growth of the European peace movements which advocate unilateral disarmament? What is your answer to this problem?

[Answer] I've tried to give an answer in what I've already said. If we say we're going to unilaterally give up our nuclear weapons, why should the Soviet Union ever want to negotiate? The Soviets would then have attained their objective; they would have ensured that we could neither retaliate nor deter. There is no sense in fighting with conventional weapons because the Soviets would eventually come with the nuclear threat. We would then have no means to deter or stop them because people go to war when they believe that they have a greater chance of winning than losing.

Nuclear powers can be held in check only with the threat of a nuclear retaliatory strike. We have had peace in Europe for 37 years now. The nuclear powers have ensured this peace better than others have. We've had 140 conflicts with conventional weapons in the world since World War II, but not a single one of them between the nuclear powers. This certainly demonstrates that nuclear power means immense deterrence and protects peace.

The movement for unilateral disarmament threatens peace, freedom and justice, to which we have an innate right but which are extremely fragile, unless we defend them.

[Question] Prime Minister, both the old and the new chancellors have the same first name. However, the personality and the way of thinking of the new conservative federal chancellor are different. The first Helmut, Helmut Schmidt, held different political views than you have, yet you two developed close cooperation and mutual respect. How do you visualize German-British relations under the new government which you will be meeting with the day after tomorrow?

[Answer] Helmut Schmidt's ideas are very similar to mine with regard to inflation, sound economic policy and competitiveness. Our cooperation was excellent, especially in the economic field, and both of us were aware that the United States is the guarantor of freedom in Europe. Chancellor Kohl and I also have similar views. Germany and Great Britain will get along excellently. Both of us know that we must defend freedom, that we must cooperate closely with the United States and that we must keep the democracies of Europe close together within the EC. All those things are common ends, and we will work together steadily to achieve them.

[Question] Thank you very much indeed, Prime Minister.

[Answer] My pleasure.

KIPRIANOU LEAVES FOR MOSCOW, MAKES STATEMENT

NC281034 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] President Kiprianou left for a visit to the Soviet Union this morning at the invitation of the Supreme Soviet Presidium of the USSR and of the Soviet Government. In a statement prior to his departure, President Kiprianou stressed that he attaches special importance to the talks which he will have with Mr Brezhnev, chairman of the Supreme Soviet Presidium, at which they will discuss the international situation and a number of specific international problems, with emphasis on the Cyprus problem. I do not doubt, President Kiprianou said, that these talks will be very useful in every respect and that my visit will contribute to the further development of ties of friendship and cooperation between the Soviet Union and Cyprus.

Further, the president expressed his deep appreciation for the consistent and firm Soviet support for the Cypriot people's struggle for vindication and solution of the Cyprus problem in accordance with the UN resolutions, in the adoption of which the Soviet Union has played a particularly important role. President Kiprianou stressed: These resolutions, which constitute the political shielding of the Cyprus cause, must be implemented soonest, not only for the sake of Cyprus and its people but also for the benefit of peace and security in the region. I do not doubt, the president added, that the Soviet Union will contribute substantively in this way. President Kiprianou stressed: It is necessary to end the occupation as soon as possible and to restore the rights of the Cypriot people and of Cyprus as an independent state and equal UN member country.

In conclusion, the president extolled the achievements of the Soviet Union in the last 60 years in all fields. The president of the republic will return to Cyprus on 2 November.

Status of Visit Questioned

NC271356 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 27 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] O KIRIKAS has been authoritatively been informed...that the Soviet Union unilaterally and without consulting the Cyprus Government changed the character of President Kiprianou's visit from "official" to "ordinary" and, finally, from "ordinary" to..."touristic."

Authoritative observers have stated that the visit has ultimately become...a "touristic" one. They added: President Kiprianou will remain in the Soviet Union for about 144 hours. Of these, only 90 minutes will be allotted to high-level "negotiations" at the Kremlin, in a meeting which will be held on Friday evening. When it is taken into account that about half of this time will be spent "translating" from Russian to Greek and from Greek to Russian, then the exact time of "negotiations" will be 45 minutes. The rest of the "visit" will be spent in "official" luncheons, visits of the presidential couple to museums and the "Bolshoi" Ballet Academy and a tour of vast Russia, -- clearly "touristic" activities.

In addition, we are informed that the Soviet Union, for its own reasons, which so far have remained unexplained, has decided to change the character of President Kiprianou's visit from "official" to ..."ordinary", a term unknown in international diplomacy.

The notification of the change which the Soviet Union unilaterally decided was telexed by Cypriot Ambassador in Moscow Angelidhis to Foreign Minister Rolandhis on Wednesday, 20 October, when he was in Athens.

According to reports received by O KIRIKAS, Mr Angelidhis was summoned to the Soviet Foreign Ministry in Moscow and his "attention was drawn" to the fact that the Cypriot press and official statements mention an "official" visit, while the visit is simply a "working visit" [last two words in English]. Indeed, not only was his attention drawn to this but he was told that the Cyprus Government must immediately clarify things or the Soviet Embassy in Nicosia would issue a pertinent statement that "would put things in their place."

The officials became disillusioned as soon as the message was received in Nicosia. Many meetings followed to study ways to deal with the issue. Soviet Ambassador Astavin was summoned to the Foreign Ministry and was "warmly asked" to regrade the visit to an "official" one. Mr Astavin was unyielding "because," as he said, "he had pertinent instructions from his government." The Cyprus Government remained "silent" for 4 days and then made an..."innocent" and quiet statement.

We are disclosing the following additional information: There is a telex in the Cyprus Foreign Ministry from Mr Angelidhis, Cyprus' ambassador in Moscow. We challenge the government to publish this. The Cyprus Government heard the news in the telex with "surprise, bitterness and rage."

A special permit was issued to Mr Kiprianou for his visit to the Kremlin last September, because until then Mr Kiprianou's name was in the list of "undesirable" visitors.

Meanwhile, when asked whether the assessment of Mr Kiprianou's visit to Moscow as "ordinary" and not "official" took place with the Cyprus Government's consent or unilaterally by the Soviet Union, the government spokesman stated: "No expediency is served by answering this question."

Also asked when the Soviet Union notified the Cyprus Government of the change of the character of the visit, the government spokesman replied that "there was no question of changing the character of the visit."

AKEL Statement

NC272006 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] The AKEL Central Committee issued a statement today welcoming President Kiprianou's [forthcoming] visit to the Soviet Union and the talks he will have with Mr Brezhnev, chairman of the Supreme Soviet Presidium, as a significant political event for Cyprus and the Cypriot people. The AKEL Central Committee statement adds that the results of the two leaders' talks will undoubtedly have a positive contribution toward promoting the struggle which the Cypriot people are waging for a peaceful and just solution to the Cyprus problem based on the UN resolutions and the summit agreements.

The AKEL statement further adds: This visit, which is approved and welcomed by the struggling Cypriot people and all the true friends of Cyprus, as well as the summit talks, will also contribute to the further internationalization of the Cyprus issue and to presenting and promoting the idea for the convocation of a special international conference on Cyprus within the UN framework.

KIPRIANOU RECEIVES FRENCH ENVOY, EXTOLS TIES

[Text] President Kiprianou today stressed that a new, decisive effort must be exerted to promote the implementation of the UN resolutions on Cyprus. Receiving the credentials of new French ambassador to Cyprus, Mr Dimitri de Favitski, President Kiprianou denounced Turkey's intransigent stand for the lack of progress in the intercommunal talks and stressed that the Cyprus issue must be resolved, in the interest of the island's people as well as of peace and stability in the area.

President Kiprianou said: We believe that the occupation troops must withdraw and an end be put to the occupation as well as to any sort of foreign intervention. The president of the republic stressed: With the help of the international community, I believe we will be able to attain our goals and France can play a very significant role in achieving this.

Mr Kiprianou extolled the very friendly relations between Cyprus and France and expressed his thanks for the positive French stand on the Cypriot issue.

Presenting his credentials, the new French ambassador stressed that his country believes that the Cyprus solution cannot come from the faits accomplis but it can actually come from the difficult and essential dialogue which the two communities are conducting under the UN secretary general's auspices. He also said that the main aim of his mission is to firmly strengthen the links between France and Cyprus.

DAILY ON INTERVENTION IN RELATIONS WITH EGYPT

[Excerpt] According to information received by I SIMERINI, the restoration of Cypriot-Egyptian diplomatic relations, which were broken in 1978, has been called off after the intervention of Libya and Syria. According to our information, both Libya and Syria have made it clear to Foreign Minister Rolandhis that they oppose the restoration of diplomatic relations with Egypt.

The Libyan and Syrian opposition appeared at exactly the moment when a concrete initiative had been manifested by Egypt aiming at restoring diplomatic relations between the two countries. According to our information, Mr Rolandhis mentioned this Libyan and Syrian intervention in the issue of our diplomatic relations at a discussion with the official parliamentary committee on the issue.

Cypriot-Egyptian relations have thus once again been frozen and Egypt is evading making another attempt. Cypriot-Egyptian relations were broken in March 1978, nearly 5 years ago, and since then the Cypriot Government has exerted no specific efforts to restore them.

Meanwhile, when asked about the issue after a pertinent press report, the government spokesman stated that Cypriot-Egyptian diplomatic relations have not been restored. The government spokesman added: "There has, however, been an improvement in the general relations -- in foreign relations, the airlink between the two countries and the rank of the diplomats appointed in Cyprus and Egypt respectively. These diplomats are of a higher rank than before.

The spokesman also stated that the recent meeting in Cairo between Communications and Works Minister Mavrelis and Kamal Hasan 'Ali, Egyptian deputy prime minister and foreign minister as well as with the minister of civil aviation, Tawfiq 'Abduh Isma'il, was not secret, it having been announced.

DENKTAS STATEMENT ON RETURN FROM NEW YORK

TA271629 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Statement by Turkish Federated State of Cyprus President Rauf Denktas at Ercan State Airport on arrival in Cyprus on 27 October -- recorded]

[Text] I went to New York to meet the UN secretary general, to make an assessment of the intercommunal talks and to exchange views on the Cyprus issues. This has been done. Our view is that there is no way other than the intercommunal talks to solve the Cyprus problem. The UN secretary general shares our view of this issue. We believe that taking the issue to other international forums will adversely affect the process of the talks. [Words indistinct] shares the view that the problem should be solved through talks. This view is also shared by other diplomats with whom I held contacts.

While we were there, we learned that the Greek Cypriots wanted to take the issue to the Nonaligned summit and to have a resolution adopted in line with their views. We held contacts with the representatives of Nonaligned countries. We explained to them that this path might block the intercommunal talks. We were received with understanding on this issue as well. We were told the following: Resolutions to be adopted at such forums should not affect or concern you. These resolutions are adopted. The important issue is for you to remain together and to solve the problem. If we are to remain together, we have to spend our energy positively at the negotiating table. Therefore, they should not distract our attention. They should not keep us busy in other places. This is the thesis we defended.

We were able to establish good contacts and a good dialogue with press and publication organs. I believe that it was a beneficial and positive visit from all points of view. I believe that this visit will be beneficial to strengthening the process of the intercommunal talks. I hope that the Greek Cypriot side will make a similar assessment and will refrain from acts that might adversely affect the talks.

Naturally, we explained our views and complaints concerning the economic embargo being imposed on our community. We reiterated our views everywhere. We especially tried to make our views on the issue known in the Islamic world. We drew their attention to the fact that the Islamic countries are unwillingly helping the Greek Cypriots in their economic boycott. I believe they showed understanding and that various acts on the issue can be expected in the near future. However, I would also like to add this point. There are certain duties that fall on us. In order to perform these duties as desired, we should have (?domestic) unity and solidarity, we should be strong and we should be in full cooperation with the motherland in solving our problems.

The issue of transportation is an important one. Important steps are being taken to solve this issue as well. We called on the world, and especially the Islamic world, to look at the Greek Cypriot attitude on this issue. I believe this was effective. Press officials especially promised to let their governments know what a disastrous thing this is. Naturally, I am very happy to be home. I thank you all.

CAGATAY VIEWS ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN NORTH

TA271530 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay has said that the decision to establish a Turkish Cypriot central bank, which is an important development in (?self-sufficiency) in the economic field, has definitely been made. Cagatay visited [names indistinct] villages yesterday evening and listened to the complaints of the farmers. Cagatay said that since the day when the possibility of using Turkish monetary units was granted to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, the Turkish Cypriot monetary policy was [words indistinct].

Cagatay said that the hopes pinned on the intercommunal talks are weakening because of the intransigent and deceitful attitude of the Greek Cypriots. Cagatay noted that the Greek Cypriot side was intensifying its economic embargo on the Turkish Cypriot community in the face of the developing Turkish Cypriot economy and its increasing exports. Cagatay said that while the federated state was receiving aid only from Turkey, the Greek Cypriot side has received aid of over $72 million from the European Council to be used in the housing field. He added that the federated state was speedily developing despite all these difficulties. Noting that this development could be seen in the figures attained, Cagatay said that the domestic revenues of the state had increased considerably since 1975. He noted that this fact was appreciated by the officials of the motherland.

PAPANDREOU MESSAGE TO NATION ON OKHI DAY

[Text] In a message on the 28 October anniversary, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou stresses: On this day, 42 years ago, our motherland was subjected to the cowardly attack of the Fascist invaders. The Greek people en masse defended with heroism and self-denial our ancestral land. Forty-two years ago, the armed forces and people united to write a deserving page for our nation's history and once again proved that, as our national poet said, magnanimity in people is not measured by acres but with the glowing of the heart and with blood. Our people resisted the German-Italian hordes, refusing to bow down at a time when almost all of Europe had already yielded.

The Greek contribution to the fight against the Axis forces was decisive and the praise for the heroism of Greek fighters by the great men of the time show that small countries can also play a big role in the course of the people's struggles for freedom and national independence.

The continuation of the national liberation struggle by the fighters of the national resistance has revealed the historic grandeur of our people. The contribution made by the 1940 generation constitutes an example to be imitated and a source of pride and optimism for the coming generations.

Today, 42 years after the epic of 1940-41, our country is in a crucial phase of its history. A dangerous crisis is raging in our area, various claims are being made against our sovereign rights in the Aegean and a part of our national area remains under the occupation of foreign troops. We have both declared and proved that peace and equal cooperation with our neighbors constitute the main axis of our foreign policy. However, we must repeat once again that the Greek people will never accept the trampling under foot by anyone of even one inch of national territory, airspace or water. The historic example of the 1940 okhi [Greek refusal to surrender], the pannational unanimity in the face of outside dangers and the inseparable fraternity between the people and armed forces constitute the nation's shield in confronting any outside danger and, at the same time, represent a source of optimism for a peaceful future, the prime minister's message concluded.

Address to Armed Forces

["Text" of the order of the day by Andreas Papandreou on 28 October okhi anniversary]

[Text] Officers, Noncommissioned Officers, mobilized children of our people, and men and women of the armed forces: With pride and national unanimity the Greeks are celebrating this year again the anniversary of 28 October 1940. They are celebrating and honoring the history of the Greek people and the unequal and titanic struggle against the merciless Fascists and Nazi invaders. With the worthy armed forces as protagonists and with the solidarity of the people, our fatherland fought alone against the very strong German-Italian Axis on the snow-capped mountains of Ipiros and Macedonia, when almost all of Europe had been subjugated.

The Greeks once again showed mankind that they know how to struggle and sacrifice themselves, if needed, for their freedom and national independence. The armed forces proved worthy of the honor and the fatherland's trust. In this unequal battle, the armed, iron-clad hordes of the hated Axis occupied the country, but not the Greek people. The immortal Greek soul remained unsubdued and free in order to continue the heroic national resistance.

The great contribution of our fatherland to the victory of the Allies and the shattering of the Axis received worldwide recognition. Everlasting honor and glory will accompany those who contributed to the 1940 epic and the strugglers of the national resistance against the foreign occupation troops.

Our country is in an area of serious, dangerous international crisis, of which the development and repercussions on world peace are still unknown. Various claims are being made against Greece while part of our national area is occupied by foreign troops. Greece wishes a peaceful coexistence and cooperation with all the peoples, and particularly with its neighbors. It is exerting toward this aim continous and sincere efforts in the hope that they may generate equal response. We do not claim anything from anyone but we do not intend to surrender to anyone even an inch of territory of sea or airspace, or sell out our sovereign rights. Our declaration toward all directions that we are determined to defend our fatherland constitutes the strongest factor of consolidating peace.

In this crucial turn of the nation's history, the strength and alertness of very strongly armed and proud armed forces and the excellent fraternity with the people constitute the strongest factor in preventing foreign dangers and are the best guarantee of our national independence and territorial integrity. Long live 28 October. Long live our armed forces. Long live the Greek people.

KARAMANLIS SPEAKS TO THESSALONIKI ARMY OFFICERS

NC280742 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0500 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Excerpts] An official luncheon was given yesterday in honor of President Karamanlis at the club of Thessaloniki garrison officers. Speaking during the lundheon, the president of the republic stressed that the double anniversary [the liberation of Thessaloniki city on 26 October 1912 and the 28 October anniversary] which we are observing today is a source of pride for our nation. But it is also a great lesson both for us and the foreigners, foes and friends.

The liberation of Thessaloniki 70 years ago, said Mr Karamanlis, was a major milestone in the long Hellenic history. The triumphs of 1912 and 1913 have provided us with the measure of our nation's vigor and have instilled in us confidence in our people's future.

The president of the republic further stressed that, with the same enthusiasm and unanimity that prevailed at that time, Greece faced the Fascist provocation in 1940. The two Axis partners underestimated Greece's capabilities.

After stressing that the country's armed forces are fully equipped and perfectly trained, as well as capable of defending the honor and integrity of the country, Mr Karamanlis said that the international situation is today gloomy and compels us to keep our national shield invulnerable, to continuously reinforce our armed forces along with our diplomatic mainstays, but above all to develop national unity.

GREEK-U.S. NEGOTIATIONS ON BASES BEGIN 27 OCT

NC271225 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1200 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] The Greek-U.S. negotiations on the question of U.S. bases in Greece commenced today. Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos this morning received the heads of the two delegations who then had a private meeting. A meeting with attendance of all members of the two delegations followed.

On Saturday, members of the two delegations will visit the U.S. bases at Ellinikon and Nea Makri and on Sunday the bases at Soudha and Gournai in Crete.

KKE Reacts to Talks

NC272256 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] In a message, the KKE Central Committee greets this year's 42d Okhi Day anniversary [28 October] stressing: The disturbing thing is that, while our people expected the present government to vindicate their struggles for national independence, the present government is proceeding, and moreover on the eve of historic okhi, with opening negotiations with the U.S. imperialists that would virtually keep their bases in our country, which mortgage our people's peaceful future and their national independence, by demanding exchanges. [sentence as heard]

Commenting on this KKE statement, the government spokesman made the following statement: The PASOK government does not accept lessons from the KKE regarding its program for gaining and consolidating our national independence. Uncommitted to any decisionmaking centers abroad -- either in the West or East -- the PASOK government is laying down firm foundations for an independent Greece that will belong to its people.

RIZOSPASTIS Questions Intent

[From the "Radical" column]

[Text] Deep concern prevails among the Greek people at a time when the Greek Government inaugurates talks with Reagan's envoys on the bases of death. This feeling is absolutely justified, because all indications demonstrate that the government, submitting to the asphyxiating pressures of the U.S. imperialists, starts today's talks not for the purpose of having the bases removed -- as it had emphatically bound itself to do in its policy statement -- but to preserve them. Lucid proof of this is to be found in the cynical statements by Washington officials that they are not concerned over the fate of their aggressive attack bases in Greece, as well as in Papandreou's recognition of "the strategic interests of the all-powerful United States"! [punctuation as published] in our neighboring Middle Eastern area -- a fact which, according to his logic, makes preservation of the bases "essential."

Thus it becomes very obvious that the government is now abandoning one of its main preelection and postelection promises about the removal of the U.S. bases from our country. The notorious time schedule for removal of the bases has been turned into a time schedule for their preservation and the talks which start today will, in reality, be nothing but bargaining over some "exchanges" with which the government hopes to gild the pill of the new agreement which will be phraseologically prettied up. Nothing, however, justifies preservation of the bases in our country. It is the government's duty to heed the unyielding Panhellenic demand for their removal from Greece. This must be the only purpose for the talks.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA VIEWS OUTCOME OF ELECTIONS

NC262209 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 26 Oct 82 p 4

[From the "Views" column]

[Text] The battle of the municipal elections is over. Now that the slogans have died out and the voters' cheers are over, it is time for a calm reassessment through constructive criticism, without political expediencies and with only the promotion of change as a yardstick. It would be politically dangerous, ostrich-like behavior if we did not note, with justified concern, that in urban centers New Democracy succeeded, despite its worst domestic condition, its problematic leadership and the forecasts of its imminent split, in gaining a considerably high percentage of votes.

Facing the facts calmly, this means that some social, rather than party, rallying took place around its slates and certain reactions were expressed. It is very easy, but also rather effortless to say that the electorate "veered toward the right" in reaction to the "leftwing policy" that the government is following.

Moreover, under the same reasoning, we must accept that the considerable support for the KKE in several municipalities means exactly the opposite, namely that some citizens who voted for PASOK in 1981 reacted in this way to the implementation of a "rightwing policy" by the government.

Both these views constitute an oversimplification of the problem and an easy explanation. However, the problem is very complicated. Citizens who traditionally belonged either to the right or to the communist left voted for change in 1981 and gave power to PASOK. Why did they do this?

Because they truly awaited a change or another policy to solve their daily problems. Some were fed up with the impotent right while others wanted to escape from the stereotyped, contradictory line of the traditional leftwing. They wanted action and decisions.

They welcomed the vision presented by PASOK for completely specific utilitarian reasons -- to wipe out air pollution, to break the hold of bureaucracy, to abolish personal influence in the hospitals and treatment in the first or third class.

They gave it authority to cleanse the judiciary. And it took the personal report of a retired magistrate to start proceedings against six judges. They gave it the authority to strike at and wipe out the middlemen. However, nothing has yet become more attainable for the consumer.

The people recognize that PASOK truly "wants" to resolve the issues of transportation investment and unemployment, as well as the institution of the "free education" to solve the problem of draining the workers' pockets for preparatory schools. These are the basic reasons the people supported PASOK once again.

At the same time, however, by withdrawing in urban centers the votes that they "loaned" in 1981, both rightists and leftists wanted to stress their dissatisfaction not so much for PASOK's deeds as for its omissions. Irrespective of to what degree one or another measure was "rightist" or "leftist," protest was over the scarcity of measures in certain sectors, over their referral and over their postponement.

The government is doing well in the countryside. This is not unrelated to the fact that PASOK appears stronger in the provinces. Obviously the farmer is more satisfied than the worker and the petit bourgeois of the city.

Here, however, in the melting pot of the city, for a whole year after the victory, no substantive measures have been adopted on the transportation issue. No serious solution has been adopted for the environmental problem. The working conditions in public services have changed slightly. Hardships at hospitals and social insurance foundation medical centers reign supreme. No important public works are visible. No decision whatsoever has been promoted for a unified social insurance agency. No "revolution" has taken place in the cultural sector.

The ministries, ministers, deputy ministers and secretary generals have multiplied, but they have not done the expected work. Perhaps Andreas wages "the battle for Greece" in international issues. Someone, however, must also wage with more determination the battle of the ordinary Greek, so as not to hear once again the notorious: "We are doing well abroad."

I KATHIMERINI SCORES 'DISTORTION' OF ELECTIONS

NC261728 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 26 Oct 82 p 5

[Editorial: "After the Election"]

[Text] Examination of the situation created after the municipal elections — fanaticism and extremism apart -- leads to certain, self-evident conclusions which cannot be overturned by tightrope balancing or high-handed misinterpretations.

Criticism in good faith -- although a rare phenomenon among leaders and the "led" — leads to the recognition of a very significant political phenomenon: the start of the erosion of voters who last year gave PASOK a great majority -- the truth of numbers is irrefutable.

Cooperation between PASOK and the KKE led to the victory of slates supported by the government front in most of the country's municipalities. This was clearly declared by the KKE secretary general, who even expressed his displeasure over the prime minister's television statement late Sunday night. He even stated to a newspaper friendly to him:

"The prime minister could not have celebrated a victory, particularly not in Athens, Piraievs and Thessaloniki, if he had not had the support of the KKE -- particularly definitive support." It is correct to render unto Ceasar "what is Ceasar's."

As to the question publicly asked by Papandreou about the role of New Democracy on our country's political map -- an absolutely untimely and unfounded commentary in this instance -- the reply is rather self-evident and this in itself ought to raise certain questions. According to Papandreou, does the opposition -- this great balancing factor in public life, the controller and critic of those who handle public affairs -- play no role at all? Should the opposition not exist? This is an innovation which has not been attempted to date except in states where totalitarian regimes prevail.

Despite a bitter protest over the way in which the preelection apparatus was operated by the government, through harsh positions, brainwashing, petty political sloganeering, party-controlled television and the unheard of mobilization of all and sundry, at this very moment, without disagreement with the election of any of the mayors and community leaders, we believe that the institution of local self-government must play a salvation role, particularly in the large cities and in the capital.

Decentralization is a definitive factor for the country's progress. It is wanted, supported and required by the countryside. On the other hand, Athens also has an imperative need for a municipal authority which will work productively for the city's good. With the adequacy of funds which the government has promised to give, with the strength of decisions that, as announced, it possesses, there will be no excuse if every single measure needed to save the capital is not immediately implemented.

In order to always set things in their proper place, we must admit that the capital's municipal authority -- even though it renewed its term of office with the support of the KKE -- at this very moment does represent the will of the majority. Since the situation developed in this way -- for better or for worse -- all Athenians now expect and demand implementation of the preelection promises by Dhimitrios Beis, who emphatically assured us that "now he knows how and he will."

The immediate future will demonstrate whether the new Athens mayor's preelection campaign was nothing but fireworks, to what degree the dangerous phenomenon of distortion of facts has become commonplace for certain public personalities, and if it will influence our daily lives.

EVREN SPEAKS ON CONSTITUTION IN DIYARBAKIR

[Speech by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Diyarbakir on 27 October -- recorded]

[Summary] My dear Diyarbakir citizens, first of all I would like to greet you and explain why I am unable to visit the neighboring provinces. I would have liked to visit all the provinces, but the lack of airports in some of them prevented us from doing so. I send my love and greetings to all my citizens in Mardin, Siirt, Bitlis, Hakkari and Mus.

My dear citizens, soon after the 12 September operation, I came to Diyarbakir and addressed you all at this square on 14 October 1980. As you may recall, shortly after we landed in Diyarbakir, a Turkish airlines plane was hijacked to Diyarbakir. The Anarchists are serving their terms in prison. The anarchic incidents which were abundant in the various parts of the country have today been eliminated. Many of our citizens who were forced to desert their homes and homelands for fear of death during those anarchic times have returned to their homeland. I said that the state would deal with the anarchists and the terrorists and this has come true. I also said that all we needed was your help. As you can see, we, as a nation in unity, are capable of surmounting all the difficulties.

"You should always bear in mind that the number of countries that bear feelings of real friendship for the Turkish nation is low. There are also countries that have never desired the development of this nation into a great state through unity and solidarity. Such forces will make the most of every opportunity and will exert every possible effort to cause Turkey to regress to the period prior to the 12 September operation. In addition to the foreign forces, there are also domestic forces among us who support and help these foreign forces. They are waiting for the opportune moment. These treacherous domestic forces have begun engaging in activities in collaboration with their foreign partners during these days when preparations have begun for the transition to normal order. They will increase their activities once normal order is established. You should not doubt this fact. We, though unwillingly, received as normal the activities they are engaged in now and the ones they will carry out in the future. These forces have hitched themselves to a certain ideology and they have been brainwashed. Whatever is done or said to them is futile. Even if you chop off their heads, you will not be able to separate them from this deviant ideology they have come to believe.

"There are some among them who have seen the realities and who have chosen the right path afterward. We cannot deny this fact either. However, they are the minority. We do not expect these brainwashed people to say yes to the constitution we have prepared and we have submitted for your approval. We do not expect those whose interests have been damaged and hindered and those who are pursuing their own interests to endorse the constitution either. We also believe that those who live in a dream world, who are not acquainted with the realities of Turkey, who consider Turkey similar to those countries which have established a democratic system some 200 years ago and who do not like what we have prepared because it is not in accordance with the constitution of those countries, might vote against the new constitution despite their goodwill. We are not sorry for this either. Do you know what really concerns us, my dear citizens? What actually grieves us are those who said, "no one can disobey the state and those who disobey will be crushed" while they had the state power in their hands and who were not able to crush the rebels. It is again those who, though they believe that the constitution which we have prepared is suitable, spread the word around and among the former organization members that the constitution should be rejected just because their parties have been closed down and they will not be able to regain their position."

I know that you will not be influenced by such propaganda. You will use your commonsense. However, I say all this so you will be aware of what they are capable of. This nation does not want to return to those dark days.

If you recall, while speaking here on 14 October 1980, a citizen among the crowd said: "Pasha, let there be no more parties." I replied: "There can be no democracy without political parties." I know that that citizen did not say what he did because he did not believe in democracy. However, the political parties, through strikes and quarrels among themselves, caused the nation so much pain that they made the nation say: "Better no democracy than this kind of democracy." They forced our citizens to wish there were no political parties.

In my speeches in Trabzon and Erzurum, I talked about criticism leveled against the provisions of the constitution dealing with fundamental rights and duties, their limitations, and precautions against their misuse. I explained the differences between the old and new constitutions. "Today I will give you information on political rights and duties and the activities of political parties. One of the most important fundamental rights and freedoms of a citizen within a political community is, no doubt, individual immunity, followed by the right to participate in state administration. It is through participation in state administration that citizens can organize their other rights. This has been true throughout history. Human beings have first demanded individual immunity." In democracies, citizens participate in state administration, and they have a say in the formation of law and order through their representatives in the legislative organs. The rights which enable a citizen to have a say in the administration of his country are called political rights and freedoms. The first condition for the exercise of these rights within a democratic system is participation in all elections on the part of the citizen, and the expression of his beliefs concerning developments in his country. A citizen should be ready and willing to participate. However, a citizen should always bear in mind his great responsibility regarding his political rights and freedoms for the happiness of the community. All citizens should closely follow developments in the country. However, he should not bring politics into his house, into his work and into the streets.

The Turkish nation has never been destroyed despite many domestic and foreign enmities and defeats. It has always known how to regain its strength and to continue a free existence. The Turkish Republic was established because of these qualities.

Turkish citizens should exercise their political rights with a sense of responsibility. However, sometimes mistakes are made. Unfortunately, the results of these mistakes can be very dangerous. We only have to recall our experiences prior to the 12 September operation. The country and state was faced with an attempt at destruction, both domestic and foreign in origin. The country was divided into "liberated" areas and foreign or made-up flags were hoisted to replace the Turkish flag. The security forces were divided among themselves. These were the conditions that prompted military intervention.

My dear citizens, it is impossible to have a democratic political life without political parties. "However, the transformation of democracy into a dictatorship of parties is tantamount to the elimination of the democratic regime. Political parties are the prerequisites of a democratic life. We should not doubt this fact. However, they are not the only factors of such a regime. Placing the political future of the country and the political rights and freedoms of millions of citizens in the hands of only a few political leaders, and some 50 or 60 political party administrators, is tantamount to renouncing the democratic regime in another way." We have to take measures to prevent a party democracy from becoming a party dictatorship. For political parties to be the inalienable factors of a democracy, they have to be established in a really democratic manner in relation to their internal structure and activities.

"Our new constitution introduces a principle which states that all establishments, whether they are parties, associations, labor unions, foundations or professional establishments, will remain within the area of their established goals and duties. There will not be parties disguised as associations, associations disguised as parties, labor unions disguised as professional establishments and other establishments disguised as foundations.

"Political parties will be permitted to engage in political activities. No establishment whatsoever can engage in political activities without having the essence, identity and structure of a political party. In return, political parties will not be able to engage in union and association activities. They will not be able to deal with issues pertaining to professional associations and foundations. Every establishment will remain within its own framework."

"In accordance with our new constitution, political parties based on regional principles cannot be established. Political parties based on a single or a few social classes, a certain community or class, a certain religion, sect, language, race or sex cannot be established, because this is considered secessionism. It is contrary to the principle of the indivisible unity of the state, nation and country. Established parties should serve citizens throughout Turkey. Parties cannot address a certain region or class. This establishment would then become an association and not a party."

"Again according to our new constitution, political parties cannot receive orders, directives of financial aid from foreign countries, international establishments, international labor unions, associations or groups. They cannot act in accordance with the decisions of these foreign establishments. Otherwise, they would come under the orders and dictates of a foreign establishment. International agreements can only be signed among states. Again, in accordance with the new constitution, political parties cannot establish women's, youth or similar auxiliaries which are discriminatory by nature. They cannot form organizations or engage in activities outside the country. What does a women's auxiliary or a youth auxiliary mean? They might as well set up auxiliaries for the elderly and the middle aged. What kind of thing is this?

"They take high school kids, make them party members, and train them as militants. They indoctrinate these kids. They create partisanship. Political parties that act contrary to all the points I have mentioned might be closed down in accordance with a Constitutional Court decision. Deputies and, if there are any, government members belonging to parties closed down for the above-mentioned reasons end their terms in office together with the decision to close down their parties.

"Furthermore, a deputy who has resigned from his party cannot join another party. He can only remain as an independent deputy until the end of that term." You are applauding now because you also disapprove of this. I have dwelt upon this aspect of the constitution, namely the political parties, because it was here that a citizen asked me why there should be political parties. Under normal circumstances, I am sure he feels differently. At the time he was fed up, as many others were.

This nation has also lived through periods where there were no parties. Dictatorship is not suitable for our nation. Ataturk said that the administrative system most suitable for the Turkish nation is a republican one. We cannot betray this system entrusted to the Turkish nation. At the time, some of our European friends did not believe our word. Actually, they did not want to believe. They thought that the Turkish Armed Forces intended to continue this administration. No one within the Turkish Armed Forces favors a dictatorship. The members of the armed forces were raised to believe in and protect the Ataturk principles. Those who act to the contrary are mercilessly removed from this community.

"We are moving to a democracy not because our European friends want it, but because it is a form of administration must befitting the Turkish nation. Had our European friends left us alone on the issue, we might have accomplished what had to be done in a shorter time."

We are submitting a constitution stipulating a free democratic parliamentary system which is most suitable to the nation, which will prevent a return to the period prior to the 12 September operation, which will not create opportunities for ill-intentioned people who desire to destroy and divide the nation, which will not require frequent recourse to the declaration of martial law, and which will serve all those who are well-intentioned. Do not believe in reports from the left or the right with ulterior motives.

If you believe in us and trust us, then there is no problem. Perform your duty on 7 November, go to the ballots. The country's future is bright. This constitution will further strengthen the Turkish state and nation. Our respectability in the international arena will thus increase.

To conclude, my dear citizens, I extend to you my best wishes, on my behalf, on behalf of the National Security Council members and the prime minister.

[Text] The junta generals had the courage to speak in public squares only after they frightened the people with bans and terrorism. But they did not get what they expected, because our people do not and will not remain silent in the fact of oppression and brute force. The people of Diyarbakir serve as an example. They listened to Evren's speech mostly in silence and did not applaud him as he expected. In the end, the people shouted their demands: Jobs, factories and bread. They courageously shouted these demands in the face of the junta generals, including Evren.

This strong defiance means that the Diyarbakir people will say no to the black constitution which will not bring jobs, factories or bread, but oppression, brute force and shortages of goods.

The junta generals got the answer they deserve in Diyarbakir. Now the reactionary military junta is trying to conceal from the people the response of the Diyarbakir citizens. The television reports on the people's reaction in Diyarbakir were censored. That will not help though, because every single citizen in Turkey will hear the defiance of the courageous people of Kiyarbakir.

Citizens who are listening to Our Radio, you must tell your friends and relatives what the Diyarbakir people did. As we said before, dear listeners, the junta generals only dare to appear and speak in public squares after they have stepped up oppression and brute force. While Evren was speaking in Diyarbakir, progressive forces and democratic Kurds were on trial in junta courts in Kiyarbakir. The tyranny in prisons especially intensified that day.

And in Istanbul, before Evren started his tour to beg for votes, the junta police were arresting people as fast as they could who were saying no to the constitution. Some 50 citizens were detained in Istanbul for saying no to the constitution. The junta generals are wrong. It is not only 50 or 60 people who say no and who believe that no should be said to the black constitution. It is millions, it is the vast majority of the people. In this way, the junta is trying to scare the people but it will not work. They could not prevent the crowds that gathered by force in Diyarbakir from saying "factories, bread and jobs," which really meant "no to the constitution." The junta will not be able to prevent the people from saying no to the constitution because our people do not want Evren's dictatorship. The junta generals will not be able to [words indistinct]. Our people will say no to the constitution.

U.S.-USSR GRAIN TRADE NEGOTIATIONS BEGIN

AU281225 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] Negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States on extending an agreement on U.S. grain sales by 1 year opened in Vienna today. The agreement, which was signed 7 years ago, envisages the sale of 6-8 million tons of grain to the Soviet Union annually. President Reagan has offered Moscow leaders an additional 15 million tons of grain and has guaranteed delivery within 6 months if an agreement is signed in November.

KREISKY VIEWS ECONOMIC SITUATION, U.S. RELATIONS

AU281424 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1110 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Johannes Fischer and Markus Sommersacher report on Austrian Socialist Party (SPOE) chairman, Chancellor Bruno Kreisky speech at the 27th SPOE Party Congress in Vienna on 28 October]

[Excerpts] Approximately 3 minutes ago, Chancellor Kreisky ended his speech, which was followed by prolonged, stormy applause. At present, there is a pause during which the election of the new national executive committee is being held. Kreisky wanted to make clear to the delegates how he and the government party will seek to cope with the problem which at this time is worrying people most -- namely, the international economic crisis which more than ever before has now also begun to affect Austria.

Kreisky said that he had expected the crisis of capitalism, but the economy of the communist countries has also come into a critical situation.

[Begin Kreisky recording] The economic order of these countries is in trouble, and it is primarily characterized by one aspect -- that the working people have, to a large extend, been denied the right to the product of their labor. For, do not forget one thing -- everything we are experiencing at present in Poland has originated from the distress of the working people, from their anger that they could not buy enough foodstuffs or other essential goods from the product of their labor, from their earnings. [end recording]

The conservative governments such as that of U.S. President Ronald Reagan or Margaret Thatcher in England, Kreisky said, had no recipes either. And the liberal economic policy, has also failed throughout Europe. What should young people be told now, when they ask what the Social Democrats' answer to this development is? Should Social Democracy help repair this capitalism which is the cause of the crisis? At any rate, the chancellor said, the SPOE must come up with one answer:

[Begin Kreisky recording] First of all, we must remain the representative of the interests of the working people, regardless of how the vocational group structure within this class is changing -- for example, fewer blue-collar workers and more white-collar workers, and so forth. They are all equally affected by unemployment and by the consequences of this economic system. This statement alone will be of little help for them -- rather, they expect a party that represents their interests to actually do something about it, and this, comrades, has been the Austrian road. [end recording]

There is a worldwide credit crisis, Kreisky said. This credit crisis must be overcome -- otherwise the consequences will be unforeseeable. Politically, a solution can only be found through the policy of detente, because a policy of economic boycott against the East bloc countries is wrong.

[Begin Kreisky recording] The idea of simply forcing the East European countries to their knees by not supplying them with pumps is, if I may say so, naive, [applause] in view of a development which many of us have experienced ourselves. [end recording] Austria, at any rate, has also profited from this worldwide policy of detente which must be upheld, he said.

[Begin Kreisky recording] Do you really think that, had there not been the policy of detente until a few years ago, the biggest U.S. concern would have set up one of its large plants only 30 kilometers from the demarcation line that goes across Europe [reference to General Motors plant near Vienna]? We in Austria have not only pursued a good policy, we have also profited from the policy of detente in Europe. But for this policy of detente, Austria would today be situated in the shadow of a frontline of the cold war, and all great initiatives would have failed and all great endeavors would have been futile. [end recording]

The policy of detente also vis-a-vis the United States was demonstrated by the chancellor, when he strongly emphasized praise for America's policy [begin Kreisky recording]: The United States knows very well that Austria is its loyal and most truly devoted friend, because we know very well what the United States and its people have done for us. But certainly, friendship cannot mean that we always have to say yes and amen to everything htat is said or every idea that is expressed over there, indeed, the 'amen' being less important than the yes. [end recording]

FRG'S SCHMIDT ATTACKS U.S. FINANCIAL POLICY

AU281245 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 28 Oct 82 p 3

[Report on speech delivered by former FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, guest delegate to the 27th regular national party congress of the Austrian Socialist Party, at the Vienna Stadhalle on 27 October 1982]

[Excerpts] In discussing what he called the "double-topic" -- peace and the world economic crisis -- Schmidt said that the growing tension between East and West is endangering peace inside and outside of Europe. Other additional conflicts could also emit the sparks that blow up the powder keg, thus touching off the big confrontation. At the same time, economic and social destabilization is taking place in the countries allied with the superpowers. "The whole world economy is sick," Schmidt declared. "We are experiencing the second big depression in this century."

In Schmidt's opinion, this crisis was touched off by the inflationist financing of the Vietnam War by the United States. "The United States is at present experiencing a very serious setback of its entire social and economic system," Schmidt added. "Thus, the U.S. national economy, which is turning out 35 percent of the world's gross production, is burdening the whole world through its self-made recession. The high interest rates are strangling everything. The tightened belt of U.S. financial policy has become the garrote for the rest of the world," Helmut Schmidt said.

NEW DELAYS IN GOVERNMENT FORMATION TALKS

PM281339 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBALD in Dutch 25 Oct 82 p 1

["Own political staff" report: "People's Party for Freedom and Democracy call to Christian Democratic Appeal: Do not reopen draft agreement negotiations"]

[Excerpt] The Hague, 25 Oct -- The People's Party for Freedom and Democracy [VVD] will not allow any attempts by the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] parliamentary group to reopen sections of the draft government accord reached last week. This morning VVD negotiator Nijpels asked the CDA through his CDA counterpart Lubbers, whether the party is ready to accept the government accord as a basis for a coalition.

Around lunchtime, the VVD parliamentary group published an official declaration stating that Nijpels has neither put "the political question" to Lubbers as to whether or not he will adhere to the conclusions of the socioeconomic working group, nor given him a time limit for a reply.

The government formation talks under negotiation leader Scholten lasted only a short time this morning. Nijpels said that this was because the negotiators wanted to give the specialists in various areas in the parliamentary groups an opportunity to resolve differences of opinion, primarily on the size of cuts over the next 4 years and taxation policy from 1 January.

After the new delay in the negotiations, Nijpels was unwilling this morning to estimate how much longer they are going to take.

The CDA emphatically denied this morning that it wants to reopen sections of the accord. There is no question of political difficulties, and the CDA expects that in a day or two the talks on the socioeconomic disagreements will be concluded.

THATCHER ARRIVES FOR SUMMIT, MEETS WITH KOHL

NC282102 Paris AFP in English 1952 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, Oct 28 (AFP) -- British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl for a brief meeting on her arrival here today for the start of the 12th British-German summit.

Mrs Thatcher was accompanied by Foreign Secretary Francis Pym, Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Geoffrey Howe, Secretary of State for Defence John Nott and Industry Secretary Patrick Jenkin.

The British delegation was dining later today at the chancellor's official residence.

The two leaders were due to meet tomorrow for two and a half hours, after which they were to address a press conference. At the same time the various ministers were to meet their counterparts.

Early tomorrow afternoon, Mr Kohl will accompany Mrs Thatcher to West Berlin where the British premier will deliver what her aides said would be a major speech on freedom.

The Germans regard this as one of the highlights of the visit. But the Soviet Union has officially protested against it as a violation of the quadpartite agreement on Berlin.

Taking centre-stage at the summit will be relations between East and West, and between Europe and the United States.

The West Germans will be giving the British details of their defense talks with France next week. And German sources said that the two countries would be trying to forge a common approach on the trans-Atlantic row over the U.S. embargo on the use of U.S. technology in the Soviet gas pipeline to Western Europe.

They are particularly upset by sanction imposed by Washington on European firms which flouted the U.S. embargo, most of them on instructions from their governments.

The subject will be raised by Mr Kohl when he visits President Ronald Reagan in Washington on November 15.

The British and West German leaders will also be looking at the situation in Poland, and at the Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe which starts in Madrid on November 9.

British sources said that the tussle in the European Economic Community over London's demand for lower contributions to the EEC budget would feature prominently in the talks.

But West German officials doubted whether much time would be spend on this issue.

Consultations Resume

LD290938 Hamburg DPA in German 0920 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 29 Oct (DPA) -- In the 2-day English-German summit in Bonn, political consultations resumed on Friday morning. Chancellor Helmut Kohl and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met for a second exchange of views in the chancellor's office. Afterward, the conference began with the foreign and defense ministers, those in charge of the Economic and Finance Ministries and other participants. The main themes of the Bonn talks, which began the previous evening, are the European-American relationship, East-West issues and EEC problems. Among these are the Geneva disarmament talks, the natural gas pipeline deal and the steel dispute, which has now been settled.

Talks Termed 'Fruitful'

[Text] Bonn, 29 Oct (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Kohl and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher have expressed their satisfaction with their 2-day talks within the framework of the English-German summit in Bonn. Immediately prior to departing in a British military aircraft for Berlin, both Kohl and Thatcher told journalists in Bonn that the consultations were fruitful and had been held in a pleasant atmosphere. They said the main topics had been alliance issues, EEC problems and East-West relations.

Kohl stressed in particular the fact that Mrs Thatcher is going with him to Berlin. The visit to Berlin lends special importance to the English-German consultations. It is "tremendously significant for us." Mrs Thatcher said that she has never seen the Berlin Wall before. She assumed that it will be a "dramatic experience" for her to stand there for the first time.

Both politicians stressed that as regards security, they are interested in making progress in disarmament. What is important is to continue to secure peace with fewer financial means in the future. Kohl stressed that the Soviet Union has to realize that the second part of the NATO dual decision will be implemented if there is no progress at the negotiating table.

Mrs Thatcher described the dispute over the natural gas pipeline deal as a transitory issue. She hoped that there will soon be a solution on this point. Kohl earlier stressed that the solution of the steel issue is a positive sign for European-U.S. cooperation.

This was recently decided by the party Executive Board in Woelfersheim/Friedberg. The rightist radical NDP intends to run in all federal laender with land election lists and district candidates. According to the NDP press office, the main points of the election campaign will be "ensuring peace through German unity" and "mastering the electronic revolution." The NDP said it will not run in the Hamburg municipal elections on 19 December but will run in the Rhineland-Palatinate landtag elections in March 1983.

LE MONDE REPORTS ON VISIT BY BANGUI'S KOLINGBA

[Unattributed report: "Mr Cheysson Stresses the Stringent Measures the Bangui Government is Taking to Improve the Situation"]

[Text] "It is the legitimate authorities which we are supporting in the Central Africa Republic," External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson said on Monday 25 October, when proposing a toast to Central African Republic Head of State Gen Andre Kolingba, whom he was hosting at dinner at the Quai d'Orsay as part of his official working visit to France.

Mr Cheysson stressed the stringent measures which the Central African Government is taking to improve the situation "inherited from the past," despite "daunting problems and at the price of great sacrifices." General Kolingba, for his part, deplored the "glaring inequalities" between the industrialized and Third World countries which might, he said, "lead to serious upheavals."

On leaving the Elysee, where he had just had lunch with Mr Francois Mitterrand, General Kolingba, when questioned on French aid to his country, replied: "Not only is France going to continue its present effort, but it is going to increase it." With regard to military cooperation, the Central African president remarked: "By its presence in the Central African Republic, the French Army is playing an economic role and we all stand to gain from keeping it there to enable us to solve some problems in our remote regions."

Finally, the Quai d'Orsay indicated that the talks which President Kolingba had during a working breakfast with Cooperation and Development Minister Jean-Pieree Cot on Monday essentially related to bilateral cooperation. In this connection the spokesman added: "France's effort in this sphere should accompany the stringent measures already being taken by the Central African Government." It was recalled that French budgetary aid to Central Africa amounted to Fr 74 million in the first 8 months of 1982 and that it is considerably higher than last year, when it amounted to Fr 100 million for the whole year.

SPADOLINI ASSESSES GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

AU281020 Rome ANSA in English 0805 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 28 -- The Rome government, "with the largest majority in Parliament in the history of the republic but with the sharpest diversity among the coalition partners as well," has performed well in the battle against terrorism, in foreign affairs, in renewing the armed forces and secret services commands, and in the fight against inflation, Premier Giovanni Spadolini has affirmed. The premier's praise for the work of his coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Liberals and his own Republican Party came in an interview carried in today's edition of the authoritative Milan Daily, CORRIERE DELLA SERA.

Spadolini's assessment covered the period from June 28 last year, when he was sworn in as Italy's first non-Christian Democrat premier since just after the war, to the present. His first period at the helm was ended in early August when the coalition collapsed following a Socialist defection. Later in the month, a carbon copy of the cabinet was sworn in to end the brief government crisis.

On the anti-inflation front, the premier noted that the rate of the cost of living increase was trimmed from 22 percent last year to between 16 and 17 percent for the current year. After remarking that inflation is still "too high", he said that a constructive dialogue between labor and industry is now required and voiced his satisfaction that "the most untouchable fetish of labor's mythology" has crumbled.

The premier's reference was to the automatic wage indexation mechanism which emerged from a 1975 labor-management agreement to provide equal cost of living allowance increases to all workers. The CGIL-CISL-UIL trade union confederation has recently agreed in principle on the requirement to "cool off" this escalator clause.

Still on economic issues, Spadolini said that the government's package of austerity measures now before Parliament is geared to relinking Italy to the "locomotive of Europe". He insisted that he intends to do "the possible and the impossible to persuade public opinion that the government has attempted to take all the avenues" to subject the interests of the state to the duties of a sound economy, and that it will pursue these aims "even at the cost of a government crisis involving the danger of early general elections".

Speaking about institutional overhaul, one of the planks in the platform of the Spadolini II government, the premier said it is "ridiculous and presumptuous" to indicate deadlines for changes in the Constitution such as creating a presidential republic.

On the anti-terrorism front, the premier affirmed that in order to survive, terrorist movements are now seeking the protection of organized crime and named "the mafia, the camorra (the Naples version of the mafia), the n'drangheda (the mafia in the southern region of Calabria) and the P-2, the outlawed secret Masonic lodge)".

With reference to East-West relations, the premier said that one of the points of reference must be European-United States ties. He went on to condemn the seizure in New York of General Electric parts for the Italian company, Nuovo Pignone, supplying parts and equipment to the Soviet trans-Siberian gasline and the Algerian pipeline.

COLOMBO MEETS SFRY FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER

AU282027 Rome ANSA in English 1942 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 28 -- The spinoff in Italy from the economic clampdown enacted by the Yugoslav Government was discussed here today in a meeting between Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and the Yugoslav minister for foreign trade, Milenko Bojanic.

The visiting minister explained that the rigid austerity measures, aimed at flattening domestic demand, were decided on as an essential instrument for fighting a rate of inflation now hovering at 26-27 percent for the year.

The Italian foreign minister replied that the Rome government understands the need for the Yugoslav economic measures but underscored that, because of negative repercussions on traffic across the border, they may lead to a downturn in Italo-Yugoslav cooperation, which he described as "excellent" up to date.

After his meeting with Bojanic, Colombo conferred with the president of the Friuli-Venezia Julia region, Antonio Comelli, who briefed the foreign minister on the problems now arising in the border areas of his region as the result of the Belgrade government measures.

Before the recent application of these measures merchants in the Friuli region, and especially in the port city of Trieste, had been conducting a booming business with Yugoslav day-trippers crossing the border to buy a wide range of foodstuffs, clothing, electrical appliances, automobiles and other items either unavailable in their country or priced out of reach. This traffic is now drying up due to severe Yugoslav currency controls and gasoline rationing.

COLOMBO MEETS MANAGERS OF U.S.-BLACKLISTED FIRM

AU282118 Rome ANSA in English 1957 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 28 -- The threat to jobs and other problems created by Italy's Nuovo Pignone, a manufacturer of turbines and compressors for the Soviet trans-Siberian gas pipeline and the Algerian trans-Mediterranean gasline, as a direct result of the United States blacklisting of the company were discussed in Rome today by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and the managers and union representatives from the state firm.

Earlier this month, four General Electric rotors worth some three million dollars were seized by U.S. customs in New York when the parts were ready for shipment to Pignone on a purchase order completed before the application of U.S. sanctions. The sanctions were ordered against European manufacturers supplying the Soviets with parts and equipment built on U.S. license.

In his talks with the Pignone officials today, the foreign minister reiterated the Rome government opposition to the sanctions and the seizure of the G.E. parts in response to what Pignone management and labor spokesmen described as the "extremely serious situation" created by these developments.

Another problem for the Rome government in this connection is the variety of views on Italian parts and equipment for the Soviet gasline and on the Italian purchase of Soviet natural gas which have been ventilated by the five parties in the cabinet.

PLO REPRESENTATIVE HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

AU281958 Rome ANSA in English 1931 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 28 -- The leaders of the Palestine Liberation Organization can no longer control the thousands of Palestinian fighters dispersed throughout the Arab world following the exodus from Lebanon and the more than 400,000 Palestinian refugees in Lebanon unless negotiations are immediately set in motion to lead to the creation of a Palestinian state, the PLO representative in Rome, Nimr Haddad, said today.

Addressing a press conference after his return from Tunis, where he met with PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat, Haddad said that 'Arafat is very "worried" about this current state of affairs.

He went on to say that Europe, and especially Italy, must pressure Israel to "politically recognize the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people." The PLO, for its part, intends to propose starting up a dialogue with all the Israeli forces willing to enter negotiations. This proposal, the representative said, will be launched in November to the Palestine National Council and, subsequently, to the National Congress.

Within the terms of the proposal, the PLO will discuss with Jordan the future of the Israeli occupied territories and the prospects for the creation of an independent federated state. The chairman of the Italian-Arab Friendship Association, Emo Egoli, told the press conference of the association's recommendation for an international conference to be held in Rome for bringing PLO leaders and Italian representatives together.

PERTINI APPEALS TO BREZHNEV ON SHCHARANSKIY

AU281526 Rome ANSA in English 1506 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) - Rome, October 28 -- Italian President Sandro Pertini has urged Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev to make a humanitarian gesture for imprisoned dissident Anatoliy Shcharanskiy, it was announced here today. Pertini has sent a message to Brezhnev concerning the 34-year old mathematician who is serving a thirteen-year sentence for "espionage and treason handed down in 1977.

Since September 27, Shcharanskiy has been on a hunger strike to protest conditions in the forced labor camp near Perm. The dissident's health has seriously worsened, according to his wife, who recently asked the United Nations to intervene with Soviet authorities.

Shcharanskiy has been active for fifteen years in fighting for human rights in the Soviet Union and for the right of Soviet Jews to emigrate freely. One of the reasons for the hunger strike is that he has not been allowed to receive visits or communicate with the outside world for the last ten months.

PAJETTA NOTES PCI-CPSU PROFOUND DIFFERENCES

AU281022 Rome ANSA in English 0800 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Excerpts] (ANSA) - Rome, October 28 -- The head of the Italian Communist Party foreign bureau, Giancarlo Pajetta, confirmed that "there are still profound differences" between the positions of his party and the Soviet Communist Party following talks held here by Italian Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer and the deputy head of the Soviet Party's international bureau, Vadim Zagladin.

The Soviet official left Rome yesterday at the end of a week-long stay in Italy.

In comment appearing in today's edition of the PCI paper, L'UNITA, Pajetta went on to say, "I feel that these meetings with Zagladin were a good thing and served to broadly confirm our positions."

In his comments published today, Pajetta referred to the "frankness" of the discussions between Zagladin and Italian party officials and said the two sides agreed on the seriousness of the present international situation.

COUNTRY HOLDS GENERAL ELECTIONS; PSOE WINS

Record Voter Turnout

NC282056 Paris AFP in English 2042 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Madrid, Oct 28 (AFP) -- Spaniards today participated massively in the third legislative elections since the death of dictator Francisco Franco seven years ago.

After Spain's 40,000-odd polling centres closed at 1900 hours GMT, Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson announced a voter participation of about 80 percent of registered electors. It had been 79.24 percent on June 15, 1977 and 68.02 per cent on March 1, 1979. This record participation, helped by sunny weather almost everywhere in the peninsula, was probably due as much to the important stakes at issue as by the multiple pressures on potential abstainers.

Special interest focused on the voting in (?Spain's Basque) provinces. The massive turnout there was seen as a resolute endorsement of the democratic road towards greater autonomy that the region long sought to obtain through militant or terrrorist action. It was the first time, observers noted, that all political parties of the faction-ridden area had called on their supporters to go to the polls, and the call was heeded.

There was an impressive calm throughout the Basque region, with a single exception. In Bilbao, a police bomb disposal expert was killed while trying to defuse a bomb planted in front of a bank. In this part of the country, too, there was the possibility of a Socialist victory over the hitherto strongest party there, the Basque Christian Democrats.

Socialist Leaders Arrive

PA282032 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1944 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, 28 Oct (EFE) -- Bernt Carlsson, secretary general of the Socialist International, and Portuguese Socialist Leader Mario Soares, arrived in Madrid today to accompany their Spanish colleague Felipe Gonzalez in the night of the vote count.

Carlsson arrived from London and said that it is very important to witness today's elections in Spain as they consolidate the Spanish democracy which, he stressed, "makes all European democrats happy."

Soares, who, like Gonzalez, is vice president of the Socialist International, said that this is another occasion on which he will accompany the Spanish Socialist leader. He will be with him during the night of the vote count. According to Soares, the Portuguese people have followed today's elections "with great hope and interest."

Former Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez also left for Madrid to be with Gonzalez during the night of the vote count which, according to polls, could culminate with his electoral victory. According to Spanish Socialist sources, Jose Montenegro, Panama's labor and social welfare minister, is also expected in Madrid in addition to Netherlands Socialist Joop Den Uyl and Italian Socialist Bettino Craxi.

Early Projection

PA290006 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2333 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, 28 Oct (EFE) -- Interior Ministry sources have confirmed the trend that reflects a victory by an absolute majority for the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] in the general elections held in Spain today. The conservative coalition of the Popular Alliance and the Popular Democratic Party holds second place.

Alfonso Guerra, deputy secretary general of the PSOE, said that so far his party has obtained 202 of the 350 seats in the Congress of Deputies. He added that the Popular Alliance had garnered 101 seats.

The Socialist leader said that this information came from a poll carried out by his party at 1,706 of the 40,514 voting tables throughout Spain.

An Interior Ministry source cited by the Spanish Radio Broadcasting Association [Sociedad Espanola de Radiodifusion] confirmed the voting trend announced by Alfonso Guerra.

Interim Report

LD290308 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0225 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Excerpt] [Correspondent] Here at the Palace of Congresses and Exhibitions, Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson is just beginning his second appearance this evening to talk about yesterday's elections in Spain. [Roson] Here are the results:

Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE]	198 deputies
Popular Alliance (AP)	104 deputies
Democratic Center Union (UCD)	13 deputies
Convergence and Union	12 deputies
Basque Nationalist Party (PNV)	8 deputies
Spanish Communist Party (PCE)	5 deputies
Coalition of parties in the Basque provinces [AP-UCD]	2 deputies
Democratic and Social Center	2 deputies
Herri Batasuna	2 deputies
Euskadiko Ezkerra [Basque left]	2 deputies

The count is now for all practical purposes over 99 percent in all provinces. Any changes now might affect only two or three deputies. You know as well as I do, from the way the d'Hondt rule operates, it is very unlikely that there will be any further change, though of course it is possible.

[Excerpt] [Lavilla] Well, I think that, without all the details being known, the overall picture if clear, and the results constitute a victory for the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party. I would like to congratulate it publicly on this victory, as I have personally congratulated its secretary general, Felipe Gonzalez, with whom I spoke a few moments ago to convey to him on my own behalf and on behalf of my party, our congratulations on the results.

More on Congress of Deputies

NC282258 Paris AFP in English 2249 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, Oct 28 (AFP) -- The Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) will have an absolute majority in the 350-seat Congress of Deputies (lower house of Parliament) after today's legislative elections, a leading centrist politician said tonight.

Inogo Cavero, secretary-general of the Democratic Center Union (UCD), the outgoing government coalition, conceded the absolute majority to the Socialists shortly before midnight as votes were still being counted.

Mr Cavero also said that elections results so far confirmed the polarization of Spanish politics -- a surge by the left, considerable gains by the right-wing "Popular Alliance," center.

The UCD official said the Popular Alliance, headed by former Franco minister Manuel Fraga Iribarne, would win even more seats than the 87-107 estimate predicted in recent polls, while the centrists would have only about 7.

PRIME MINISTER CONGRATULATES PSOE'S GONZALEZ

PA290202 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0128 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, 29 Oct (EFE) -- Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo called Felipe Gonzalez, leader of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE], on the telephone this morning following the PSOE victory in the legislative elections. "I have just called the PSOE secretary general," Calvo-Sotelo said, "to congratulate him and voice my hope that he will use his success for the good and at the service of Spain."

On learning of the results of the elections, in which the Union of Democratic Center [UDC] did not fare well, the prime minister said: "I am not disillusioned. The liberty, peace and order that prevailed in these elections demonstrate the deep roots of the democratic institutions in Spain, and this has greatly pleased me."

Calvo-Sotelo recalled that "if yesterday's meeting at the Zarzuela Palace (where the king and queen of Spain live) was a success for the parliamentary monarchy, I believe that today's elections have been a success for the democratic system."

Finally, he indicated that there is a power gap [as received] because "the Spanish Constitution has anticipated this situation. I continue to be prime minister with all my powers, and until the new prime minister is inaugurated I will continue governing with the same energy and firmness as always. There is no power gap."

GONZALEZ VICTORY SPEECH CALLS FOR CALM, UNITY

LD290244 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0139 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Victory speech by Spanish Socialist Workers' Party (PSOE) leader Felipe Gonzalez; place not given -- live]

[Text] At this point in the night, from the figures which have been released, it is clear that the Spanish Socialist Workers Party has obtained the majority backing of the Spanish people in these elections. [applause]

I should like to begin by expressing thanks for the statements from other parties and leaders who have recognized this result. This victory, which will become official once confirmed by the provincial electoral boards and by the Central Electoral Board, bestows upon the Socialist Party the honorable duty of directing the nation's government for the next 4 years. [cheering]

We are ready and prepared to assume the responsibility which the Spanish people has conferred upon us. From this very moment I want to call upon all political forces, institutions, autonomous communities, town councils, trade unions, business organizations, the media and finally all quarters of national life to unite and to give their support to this party in the common task of finally consolidating democracy in Spain, overcoming the economic crisis, and concluding the construction of a state of autonomies. All of them will find our attitude to be one of dialogue and cooperation in advancing toward a solution to the problems of our fatherland in accordance with the interests and aspirations of the majority of Spaniards.

No citizen need feel isolated from the beautiful task of modernization, progress and solidarity which we must all carry out. The collaboration of every Spaniard within his allotted sphere is vital to achieve progress in Spain. Likewise, the effort of all civilian officials, the military and forces of public order, in the service of the people and in favor of the general interest, is fundamental and necessary.

We also repeat our intention of acting in international affairs in defense of the interests of Spain, for peace among nations, for detente and dialogue, and for the freedom of peoples suffering violations of human rights. [applause]

We also reaffirm our resolute aspiration to reintegrate Gibraltar into our national sovereignty. [applause]

May I be permitted to offer emotional regards to the Latin American community. [applause]

The Spanish Constitution, which was approved by the people and approved by the king in 1978, has functioned correctly, facilitating the handover of power, which is one of the essential principles of democracy. Therefore, over and above the feelings which any individual may have, it can be said with satisfaction that the third general elections have been held cleanly, and thereby the winner, more than any party in particular, is democracy and the Spanish people.

I would also like tonight to make an appeal to the whole Spanish people -- an appeal for calm; an appeal to continue the magnificent example they have set on 28 October at the polling stations; an appeal for calm which is all the more necessary at this time, to avoid any kind of misunderstanding or any kind of provocation.

We have a great people -- the Spanish people -- who deserve all our sacrifices. Thank you. [applause] Thank you. [applause]

Statement on Foreign Relations

PA290103 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0008 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, 28 Oct (EFE) -- Felipe Gonzalez, leader of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE), said today that it is necessary to attend to Spain's relations with Ibero-America and not to remain obesessed with Europe.

In an exclusive statement to EFE before learning about the results of the elections, which the PSOE won, Gonzalez added that from the official standpoint there has been no ambitious program thus far in Spain in regard to relations with Ibero-America. "We have a great historical opportunity now, Gonzalez said, because in 10 years we will have the 500th anniversary of the discovery of America. [quotation marks as received]

The Socialist leader said that he had talked about this with some Ibero-American presidents and political leaders, and that he had made the suggestion to them to establish political, economic and cultural goals for 1992. "If we manage to implement this project, Spain's relations with the Ibero-America will multiply in every sense," he asserted.

Gonzalez said in connection with Central America's problems that Spain may have there "an active, very solid and firm presence through a peace proposal that we and our friends in America have already described as 'The Little Helsinski.'" It involves a security and cooperation agreement that would be signed by all countries in the region as an initial step toward the development of much more intensive cooperation later.

In this sense, he added, Spain has the "advantage of its geographical and poltical distance from the conflict and the advantage of being close in every sense to the sensitivity of the Central American peoples, and I believe this is perceived by everybody."

As for Spain's relations with the United States, the PSOE's secretary general said that they will be good in the event of a Socialist victory because "there are no conflicts between the two countries."

"North America may realize that Spain could have great weight and value in solving some of the problems that are now plaguing all Ibero-America."

On the topic of military cooperation treaties, he said: "I do not want my country to belong to NATO, and I don't want it to belong to the Warsaw Pact, either. Actually, I would like military agreements to disappear, and this is the philosophy with which we are going to work."

He added that "as for the problem of Gibraltar, we will never cease demanding Spain's territorial integrity, but we will not use force, either."

Finally, the Socialist leader said in connection with Spain's admission to the EEC that it is necessary "to insist and to insist seriously."

PARTY LEADERS GIVE REACTIONS TO PSOE VICTORY

PCE's Carrillo

PA290228 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0156 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, 29 Oct (EFE) -- Santiago Carrillo, secretary general of the Spanish Communist Party (PCE), said during a news conference that the PCE will support the Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) against the pure and hard rightwing. "Although with fewer deputies than we had expected, we are going to support them with an organized party capable of mobilizing substantial masses of workers," Carrillo said.

"We will strengthen the work of the working masses, improving, learning and moving on with the slogan of 'So that nothing will stop' (the PCE's slogan during the last electoral campaign)."

"I wish to remind those who think that the PCE's setback in the elections may be a death certificate or a sign of weakness that Fraga (leader of the Conservative Popular Alliance) had very poor results in 1979 but has obtained approximately 90 deputies in this election."

According to data released by the Interior Ministry, the PCE obtained approximately 6 seats and has therefore suffered an important setback compared to the previous elections, when it obtained 23 deputies.

Popular Alliance's Fraga

PA290215 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0845 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, 28 Oct (EFE) -- Conservative leader Manuel Fraga today said that his "Popular Alliance" Party is "a political force necessary for Spain, whose role will be to defend the voters and honestly and definitely work for the consolidation of civil peace."

In a statement to the news media after receiving the first returns, Fraga said that his party has received four times more votes this time than in the 1979 elections and 10 times more seats in the parliament.

According to provisional official reports after counting most of the votes, Popular Alliance had received 24.9 percent of the votes, which would give this party 97 seats in the Chamber of Deputies, second only to the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, PSOE, which won the elections.

As an opposition party, the role of Popular Alliance will be "to watch what the government is doing," Fraga said. In a Madrid hotel Fraga congratulated his supporters, who cheered the conservative leader.

PAPER VIEWS JORGENSEN STANCE ON EUROMISSILES

PM261029 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 20 Oct 82 p 8

[Editorial: "Anker Jorgensen's Missile Halt"]

[Text] In December 1979, NATO adopted its famous dual decision with the support of Anker Jorgensen's government. In order to strengthen Western Europe's defenses against the massive buildup of Soviet nuclear missiles in Eastern Europe, NATO decided to seek the reestablishment of military balance in two ways -- the alliance itself would on the one hand create balance by modernizing its missile defenses with comparable weapons which could begin to be deployed in Western Europe from the end of 1983, and on the other hand, the United States would seek in negotiations with the Soviet Union to be held before this date an agreement on mutual nuclear arms reductions, so that balance might be achieved at a lower level.

The new missiles will be deployed in countries to the south and west of central Europe, but not in Denmark and Norway, because the new missiles will have nuclear warheads. But they are part of joint defenses in accordance with the joint strategy which also covers Denmark and Norway against attack and the cost of deploying the new missiles is to be met from joint funds. During the debate which preceded the dual decision, Anker Jorgensen's defense minister told the Folketing that Denmark would pay its share of installation costs over a 3-year period in accordance with NATO's usual method of sharing such costs. Things should have been clear enough from this statement. And earlier this year Anker Jorgensen's foreign minister expressed his surprise in the Folketing that the Socialist Left Party could raise the question of whether the Danish Government had committed itself to paying part of the installation costs -- this was clear from the dual decision itself and from what the defense minister had said about it before it was approved by the Folketing.

"Denmark's contribution to the costs is a sum amounting to 75 million kroner over a 3-year period," Anker Jorgensen's foreign minister told the Folketing in June. But here in Denmark things follow their crooked socialist course. Anker Jorgensen is prime minister no longer, his foreign and defense ministers no longer make statements, and now Denmark is not going to pay its share -- the allocation of funds is to be left until Anker Jorgensen has seen how things are going with the missiles.

It is possible that Anker Jorgensen could block allocations to cover the commitments the country accepted during his period in government, and it could be that he will find it opportune to do so with the help of the NATO opponents in the Socialist People's Party and the Socialist Left Party. But apart from a little leftwing conniving, in poor taste and possibly expensive in terms of esteem, he would only succeed in damaging faith in Denmark within the framework of allied cooperation. He will not be able to influence the course of political events. Perhaps he will be able to make the present government announce that it is forced to fall into arrears with its payments to the alliance while the Geneva missile negotiations are going on. But in the longer term he will be unable to prevent it from honoring Denmark's commitments.

U.S. MBFR LEADER SEES TALKS IN FINAL PHASE

PM281529 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 27 Oct 82 pp 1, 22

[Unattributed report: "NATO and Warsaw Pact To Sign Agreement?"]

[Text] In the U.S. view the MBFR talks in Vienna are entering their final phase. U.S. delegation leader Richard Staar thinks that the Warsaw Pact and the Western military alliance could sign a final document as early as next spring, 10 years after the talks began.

On Tuesday [26 October] in Helsinki, Staar said that an agreement would have a positive effect on the U.S.-Soviet negotiations on strategic arms and medium-range nuclear weapons. However, the U.S. negotiator said the Vienna talks have been conducted separately. The talks cover the two military pacts' troops in Europe. Twelve states from the NATO side and eight states from the Warsaw Pact have taken part in the talks.

Staar pointed to the draft final document drawn up by NATO which was presented to the other side 8 July. According to Staar this was the first time really an initiative from the West has been thoroughly considered during the last 9 years of negotiation. According to Staar, this summer a Warsaw Pact representative said, by way of initial reaction to the draft, that it was a step in the right direction. When the talks continued in September however, the socialist nations' tone was much more dismissive.

However, the United States believes that the negotiations could be wound up by the spring, provided the parties can agree on the final stumbling blocks in a "businesslike and constructive manner." The two biggest stumbling blocks in the negotiations are the numbers of troops and the monitoring of any future agreement.

The first stumbling block covers the Warsaw Pact's troops numbers in East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia. According to NATO, there are 170,000 more soldiers than the Warsaw Pact has indicated, that is, a total of 975,000. Staar said that the Warsaw Pact's representatives have adhered firmly to their own assessment of troop numbers. He noted, however, that NATO's figures could include units which do civilian work.

As far as the other stumbling block is concerned, the Warsaw Pact has suggested that satellite surveillance of each other's troops would be enough. However, more recently they have shown signs of possibly accepting occasional observers. Staar stressed that NATO wants a clearer monitoring system which would prevent secret troop movements after the transitional phase.

The Eastern bloc was the first to present a document for an agreement. According to the Americans, the proposal could not be accepted because "it did not contain anything new."

The Western proposal wants to reduce troops in four stages. First, the Soviet Union and the United States would reduce their troops in central Europe. In the second, third and fourth stages it would be the turn of East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia, West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg. On the Western side, British and Canadian troops in Western Europe will be affected by the cuts. France has not been taking part in the talks. A figure of 700,000 men has been proposed as the maximum size for the two military pacts' armies. Including the Air Forces, the ceiling would be set at 900,000 men. The Navies have not been the subject of negotiations, Staar said.

Staar is in Finland on a 3-day private visit. During his stay he will meet Foreign Minister Par Stenback and other representatives of the Foreign Ministry.

NUNEZ THANKS FINLAND, REPROVES U.S. ACTIONS

PA280300 Managua Domestic Service in Spanish 0300 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Text] Helsinki -- Commander Carlos Nunez, president of the [Nicaraguan] State Council, launched an appeal today to the international community to help avert a war in Central America. Only with the help of the international community can we stop the United States from going ahead with its aggressive plans, Nunez said. He added that relations with the United States will improve when the Reagan administration stops giving aid to the 6,000 former Somozist guardsmen in Honduran territory. Nunez said that in the event of a war, Central America will suffer the consequences. The countries of the area will be the ones that bear the destruction, death and economic chaos.

Nunez, who is heading a State Council delegation currently visiting Finland, invited members of the Finnish Diet to visit Nicaragua so that they can see for themselves the tensions in Central America. Nunez said that if they visit Nicaragua they could help prevent a situation similar to the one in Lebanon. If we manage to prevent or delay the war in Central America, we can work with absolute freedom to improve our political system, Nunez said.

He also thanked Finland for its vote in favor of Nicaragua filling the Latin American seat at the UN Security Council.

SUBMARINE POLICY, BUDGET REVISION URGED

PM291001 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 22 Oct 82 p 2

[Olof Santesson Editorial: "Submarines and Strategy"]

[Text] The Swedish people are bound to want answers to the following questions:

Were there foreign submarines in Harsfjarden and Mysingen, and if so, how were they able to get so close to important Swedish military installations?

Do the Defense Forces have the right resources for apprehending intruders; is the overall balance between different branches of the Armed Forces and between different types of weapons the right one?

Have we been kept reasonably informed?

The directives the government will announce today ought to make it possible for the new Submarine Commission to raise all these questions and assess their significance for Sweden's future security policy.

At present a strong and irritated sector of public opinion is calling for increased resources for submarine hunts. There is an obvious risk this could lead us into a fruitless skirmish over our military budget. First we should make room for a debate dealing more with the principles involved in important sections of Swedish security policy. There is a national awareness that things have gone awry: The appointment of the Submarine Commission is a symptom of this.

Information about politically and militarily sensitive intermezzos, so-called incidents, is an obvious problem. For obvious reasons neither the authorities nor mass media in Sweden have any really soilid experience on such news reporting. The problem has, however, been much discussed within the framework of what are called pyschological defenses. Perhaps on both sides there has ben an exaggerated picture of the openness possible.

In the Karlskrona Archipelago last fall and in Harsfjarden the Defense Forces were kept busy providing quarters for the press and others. This could lead to undesirable expections. In the first incident, however, there was a boat which had run aground. In the second, however, it turned out to be an exercise in "possible" and "probable" submarines, "indications" and so on. Journalists have been irritated that their informants were often poorly informed on the situation. Unfortunately, this can often happen in really serious crisis situations.

The armed forces commander in chief has stated on several occasions that a foreign submarine actually was in Swedish waters. However, we still know little about the actual directives given to the military by those politically responsible in the last few weeks. A gradual approach seems to have been taken to the method which is to be implemented beginning 1 July next year, when some new weapons should be ready for use. The question remains, however, whether there was agreement between the demands for results from the former and the present governments and the methods, which for political reasons, they were prepared to approve. The question can be taken further.

There is much to indicate that the Navy has very few resources for prolonged submarine hunts in our difficult waters, whereas the possibility of making a traced submarine surface by using force is greater. Increasing hunt resources could give the authorities breathing space for political judgements in future concrete cases, but would probably require additional spending increases over and above the allocations already made for submarine hunts. Increasing military action capabilities seems cheap in comparison, but could swiftly turn acute incidents into tense political situations. The choice of course here could be difficult.

Efforts in peacetime to prevent intrusions into domestic Swedish waters would make great demands in terms of personnel and expenditure, and it still would not be a guarantee against incidents.

Where would the money be found? The other evening, the armed forces commander in chief repeated in a speech in Karslkrona his regret that military defenses have not been given more resources. He also raised the question of striking a new balance between traditional defenses against invasion and the Armed Forces' readiness to deal with incidents. For decades the Navy has been forced down the list of areas of spending. As recently as this year, a 5-year defense bill has passed which did not change this fundamental circumstance. This happened after the events off Karslkrona. In full agreement on the principle of giving priority to wartime defenses, both the political parties and the branches of the defense forces have allowed the Navy to give priority to submarines and surface attack capacity, that is, torpedo (missile) boats.

The question is whether many people (the politicians? and public?) are really prepared to change tack and invest large amounts in incident readiness and submarine pursuit. Public opinion, probably somewhat outraged at present, has hardly had time to realize this would alter the thrust of our overall defenses.

Nevertheless, strengthening Sweden's military capacity to deal with intermezzos in peacetime is both wise and necessary given the present state of public opinion and for reasons of credibility. Something must be done soon and without too many changes to the current defense arrangements. New pedagogical and psychological tricks are needed.

Above all, Swedish security policy could be more in need of a more carefully prepared political strategy than we realized.

FORMER EMPLOYEE CRITICIZES 'CRUDE' GCHQ SECURITY

PM281131 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 26 Oct 82 p 17

[Colin Randal report: "Security at Spy Center 'Dismayed Americans"]

[Excerpts] Americans attached to the top secret government communications headquarters at Cheltenham, the centre of a new spying row between Washington and Whitehall, made no secret of their dismay at the level of the base's security, a former employee claimed yesterday.

Reports suggesting that the headquarters has been the target of the most damaging Russian penetration of Western intelligence since the 1939-45 war came as little surprise to Mr. Alex Lawrie, 59, who worked there as a linguist for 22 years before retiring last December.

Mr. Lawrie, an expert in Portuguese and African languages, and now a Labour member of Gloucestershire County Council, said:

"It was always clear that the American people we had working there were not too happy about the state of security.

"They were probably too polite to say it in so many words, but gave the impression that our security steps were a bit crude when measured against theirs. The distinct impression they gave was that they were not very enamoured of our quality or level of security."

Since the arrest of a former employee on charges under the Official Secrets Act in July, Mr. Lawrie has repeatedly remarked on what he feels to be ineffective security at the base.

He said yesterday: "My view of the security at the headquarters is that if you turned up by accident you would probably be sent packing, but if you were determined to get in at all costs you could do so."

Mr. Lawrie described two instances which, he said, supported his claims. About 12 years ago, he said, a gang of unvetted decorators were permitted to work in the base at night and were suspected by staff of having searched desks and stolen personal items such as books or cigarettes.

"When I raised this on three separate occasions, the reply was always the same to the effect that employees, not the management, were responsible for their personal belongings," said Mr. Lawrie.

His other example concerned the staff pass system. A colleague, married to another employee, once inadvertently used his wife's pass to enter the base. "He only discovered it when he got to his desk and I can assure you he and his wife don't look remotely alike."

Mr. Lawrie, a left-of-centre Labour councillor, supports many of the policies which appeal to Mr. Wedgewood Benn, credentials which might normally be expected to inspire to campaign for the closure of an establishment devoted to electronic eaves-dropping for Western intelligence.

But he said: "I am not advocating more and more draconian measure, though I confess it always struck me that random searches, much as I would have hated them, would have been a logical measure.

"Whatever politics you are involved in, if you accept the need for such a place, you have to accept the need for sensible security.

"My central complaint is that the staff themselves should be consulted. Although you are bound to get the occasional bad apple in such a large group of people, 99.9 percent of employees are absolutely conscientious and concerned about security and should be treated as assets, not as potential suspects."

DENKTAS VIEWS KIPRIANOU VISIT TO MOSCOW

TA281641 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the visit to Moscow of the leader of the Greek Cypriot administration, Spiros Kiprianou, has no special significance. In a statement on Kiprianou's visit to Moscow, Denktas said: Although this visit is thought provoking from all aspects, I do not believe that it will affect Moscow's Cyprus policy. Recalling that the Moscow policy concerning Cyprus favored the nonalignment and independence of Cyprus and the understanding and coexistence of the two communities on the island, Denktas added, Moscow supports the intercommunal talks. Beyond that, issues such as purging foreign forces from the island and other [word indistinct] and persuasions can be discussed after peace is achieved. Therefore, Kiprianou [words indistinct] (?will not gain anything). However, the fact that a person who announced that Cyprus is Greek and who represents a community that aims at avoiding the talks and at placing Cyprus under Greek subjugation was invited at such a time is probably not very pleasant and we regret it. I do not think that the visit will have a special significance.

'ARAFAT ACCEPTS KIPRIANOU INVITATION FOR VISIT

NC290910 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 29 Oct 82 p 1

[By special correspondent Andros Mikhailidhis]

[Text] Moscow, 28 Oct -- PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat will visit Cyprus at the invitation of President Spiros Kiprianou.

This was announced by President Kiprianou to the journalists who are accompanying him on his visit to the Soviet Union.

The president had a brief conversation with the journalists, who congratulated him on his 50th birthday, before the Cyprus Airways plane took off from Larnaca Airport.

According to our information, the renewal of President Kiprianou's standing invitation to the Palestinian leader was conveyed by Foreign Minister Rolandhis during his recent meeting with Mr 'Arafat in Tunis.

The visit to Cyprus by Mr 'Arafat, who has accepted the invitation, will take place around the end of November or the beginning of December.

Acceptance of the invitation was reconfirmed to Mr Kiprianou by Mr Qaddumi, head of the PLO political affairs department, during their brief conversation yesterday at Larnaca airport.

Mr Qaddumi, who was coming from Damascus en route to Athens, also had a private conversation with Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

Mr Qaddumi is expected to accompany Mr 'Arafat on his visit to Cyprus.

UN SPOKESMAN: UN ACTIVELY INVOLVED IN TALKS

NC280912 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 28 Oct 82 p 8

[Text] According to REUTHER, a UN spokesman in New York -- referring to a report that Greece and Cyprus will ask the international organization to undertake a more active role in the intercommunal talks -- expressed surprise and stated that the United Nations is already playing as significant a role as circumstances permit.

"The report -- attributed to well-informed sources in Athens and reported by REUTER in a dispatch from Athens after the recent Kiprianou-Papandreou talks in Athens -- stated that a UN observer attended the talks but rarely participated, and that Athens and Nicosia would like the presence of a strong UN group to make suggestions and provide good services in the intercommunal talks."

In a statement yesterday the UN spokesman [in New York] stated that the UN secretary general has always provided his good services in accordance with the Security Council mandate, and that the intercommunal talks are being carried out under the secretary general's auspices by his special representative, Mr Gobbi, who is backed by strong teams both in Nicosia and at UN headquarters. The UN spokesman stated in conclusion that, as indicated in the UN secretary general's report to the Security Council, his special representative is playing an exceptionally active role in the talks, having the cooperation of both sides.

In answer to our correspondent's question last night, Mr Holger, UN political and legal adviser in Cyprus, in his temporary capacity of press spokesman, stated that he knows nothing about the statement by the UN official in New York as reported by REUTER.

However, he stated that he was aware of a previous REUTER dispatch from Athens, and added that the reference to a limited UN involvement in the intercommunal dialogue is untrue. He added: "Mr Gobbi's involvement in the negotiating process is strong, despite the fact that his mission is one of facilitation and not mediation." Nevertheless, he continued, if both sides think that the United Nations does not play a significant role, it is up to them to say so officially and make proposals.

Replying to another question, Mr Holger stated that Mr Gobbi, who returned to Cyprus many weeks ago, as of next Tuesday will have meetings with the Greek Cypriot interlocutor, Mr Mavrommatis, who will return from Geneva on Monday, as well as with the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, Mr Onan, who returned with Mr Denktas.

He concluded, saying that the next session of the talks has originally been fixed for 2 November.

ISSUES TO BE DISCUSSED AT GREEK-U.S. TALKS NOTED

NC281634 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 28 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

Simultaneously, diplomatic observers predicted that the agreement will be couched in such terms as to satisfy both sides and cover them -- especially the Greek side -- on the domestic front so that the new realistic positions of the PASOK government will be more acceptable to that segment of public opinion which had been excessively influenced by the movement's old extreme positions.

It is not accidental that on the eve of the start of the Greek-U.S. talks, a spokesman of the State Department said that "a lasting and effective U.S.-Greek defense relationship, including the granting of facilities by Greece to the United States, is in the mutual interest of both countries."

Indeed the Greek side, always according to the same diplomatic circles, would not object to granting certain facilities -- to which the U.S. side is already used to -- in exchange for the satisfaction of certain demands that are connected with guarantees of the country's territorial integrity. Such a guarantee, though it may not "pass" through the Greek-U.S. agreement but through the Atlantic Alliance -- which in principle the Greek Government seeks -- can be achieved only at the initiative of the U.S. side. For this reason the course of the Greek-U.S. negotiations will be parallel to the talks with NATO and indicative of this is the fact that government circles have expressed the optimistic viewpoint that outstanding Greek issues with the Atlantic alliance may be settled by year's end.

According to the same circles, the Greek Government will seriously take into consideration, during the relevant negotiations, certain points of the U.S.-Spanish agreement, perhaps not those that limit the possibilities for granting some greater facilities by the Greek side -- under the prerequisites we've mentioned -- but in any case those points that would create a precedent which would affect certain critical points of the Greek-Turkish dispute. For instance the Spanish side has been successful [in its agreement with the United States] getting the flight plans of U.S. military planes when they enter the Madrid flight information region. As is well known, one of the Greek-Turkish differences refers to Ankara's refusal to submit flight plans when entering the Athens flight information region.

According to other reports, it has not yet been settled whether the Greek-U.S. agreement for the bases will include secret protocols. This will be decided during the course of the negotiations but most probably it may become necessary that certain arrangements be cloaked with the exceptionally classified nature of the secret protocol.

KKE OKHI DAY MESSAGE CRITICIZES U.S. BASES POLICY

["Text" of KKE Central Committee message marking 28 October anniversary]

[Text] The KKE Central Committee greets this year's 42d anniversary of the Greek people's heroic struggle on the Albanian mountains. At that time, the Greek people en masse said no to fascism. Despite the attempts by those in power at the time to keep the Greek people divided, the latter threw themselves united into an unequal fight. The Greek people continued the struggle and wrote the immortal epic of national resistance stirred by the lofty ideals of national independence, people's sovereignty and prosperity.

Since that time, the history of this country is marked by our people's big struggles to materialize the visions of the fighters of Albania and national resistance, to shake off the new imperialist chains that were forged in our homeland after the war and to place in the hands of people their own fate and the homeland's fate.

The disturbing thing is that, while our people expected the present government to vindicate their struggles for national independence, the government is proceeding on the eve of the historic okhi [no] with the opening of negotiations with the U.S. imperialists that virtually aim at the maintenance of their bases in our country, which mortage our people's peaceful future and national independence, in return for "exchanges."

Today's anniversary does not only refer to the past: it is a call for people's unity in building a new, independent, peaceloving Greece without foreign bases, outside NATO and with a sovereign people whose toil would not be robbed by the foreign and domestic monopolies.

With this timely militant message, the Greek people are celebrating this year's anniversary of the big no.

27 October 1982.

FOREIGN MINISTER'S VIEWS ON NEAR EAST ISSUES

JN281017 Amman JERUSALEM STAR in English 28 Oct-3 Nov 82 pp 1, 32

[JERUSALEM STAR report]

[Text] Ankara -- Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said this week that Turkey strongly condemned the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and the resultant massacres in the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps. He reaffirmed Turkey's support for the Arab cause, and said there could be no peace without self-determination for the Palestinians.

In a wide-ranging exclusive interview with STAR staff writer Ahmad Dabbas, Turkmen spoke of Turkish-Arab relations, Turkey's position in the international arena and its apprehensions concerning the Gulf war between Iran and Iraq.

On the Lebanon invasion, he said Turkey believes strongly that all states in the area must respect that country's territorial integrity. One of the first prerequisites to achieve this end must be the withdrawal of Israeli forces.

Turkmen believes that now is an ideal time to achieve settlement of the Palestinian problem. The Palestinians have suffered setback in Lebanon, but have also gained a political advantage from the events there. There should now be a "creative effort" to achieve peace, he said.

He welcomed the Reagan proposals as an important change in the American position, which can contribute to a framework for negotiations between the parties. The Turkish Government also felt the Fes proposals were constructive in that they showed the willingness of all the Arab countries to search for a peaceful solution for the Middle East problem. The Fes meeting was also important because it elaborated a common Arab position, which has been lacking until now.

Asked what he saw as solution to the Palestinian problem, Turkmen emphasized that, above all, it must include self-determination for the Palestinian people; and that they must have the right to form their own state. Turkey is opposed, and has condemned repeatedly, attempts by Israel to consolidate its hold over the West Bank and Gaza. It believes that Israel's current policies and its "mounting assertiveness" are not only diminishing the chances of a peaceful solution of the Middle East problem but are "creating a security risk for the whole area".

Turkmen feels that Turkey does not necessarily have a specific role to play in the peace process but that, as a member of NATO, it is well placed to use its influence to encourage the Europeans to be more forthcoming in negotiations for a Middle East peace. He sees the fact that the Europeans have already taken a "much more advanced position" on Palestine, and have accepted the need for self-determination for the Palestinians, as a very encouraging sign.

He also reaffirmed Turkey's support for the PLO, he said Turkey already supported the PLO in all possible fields, and that it has reduced its relations with Israel to "the bare minimum." Formerly Turkey had a high level of representation in Israel but this has now been reduced to the level of second secretary. Turkey has no significant economic relations with Israel, either.

Turkmen said he understood that the question of diplomatic relations between Turkey and Israel was a "sensitive" one for the Arab countries. He hoped they would bear in mind, however, that Turkey "has its own constraints" and that its policy has to be "multidimensional." It has an important relationship with the United States, an important relationship with Western Europe; and because of this must be "very careful" in certain matters.

He said he does not think that Turkey's relationship with Israel in any way impairs its ability to help the Arab countries or to support the PLO. Asked if Turkey intended to invite PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat to visit the country, Turkmen said he already has standing invitation.

Turkmen expressed his concern about the continuing war between Iraq and Iran. Turkey has considered the war to be "a tragedy from the beginning," he said. "It is a fratricidal war" between two of his country's direct neighbours, and this involves grave dangers for all concerned. He firmly believes that it would be in the interest of both countries to put an end to the bloodshed as soon as possible and to resolve their problems in a peaceful manner.

Turkey is trying its best in this respect as a member of the Islamic peace committee, which has endeavoured to exert its good offices between Iraq and Iran. The committee has not achieved any results so far, but "the situation is complicated and further patient effort is worth while."

Turkey has not tried to play a unilateral role in the peace process, but has worked to promote the efforts of the Islamic peace conference. Representatives from Iraq and Iran have visited Turkey and the Turkish prime minister has gone to Iraq.

As the fighting has now escalated the committee will have to consider the best time to continue with its efforts.

Turkmen is optimistic about relations between Turkey and Greece. Although Cyprus is one of the "unresolved problems of the world," he sees it is as one which creates "the least of difficulties."

He said that at least on the island "the situation is calm, there is no fighting and negotiations between the parties involved are continuing." These negotiations have been under way since August 1980, and there has been substantial "give and take" between the parties.

As far as direct Turkish-Greek relations are concerned, Turkmen said "there have always been difficulties with peace" between the two nations. Turkey has always been willing to solve these difficulties through negotiations, but there has tended to be an atmosphere of mistrust between the two countries.

Recently, however, there have been moves toward a better understanding. Turkmen met the Greek foreign minister in Canada, and they decided to continue their talks and to take up, during their next meeting in December, the question of procedures for future discussions.

Turkey is anxious to develop good relations with Greece, in the belief that their long-term interests are convergent. Turkmen believes that the problems between them can be solved.

On Turkey's relations with the Arab world, Turkmen said his country has been very active in developing closer relations and hopes to do more in the future. He said there are many "deep-rooted ties" between Turkey and the Arab countries "in the field of religion, in culture and in the field of common history."

He believes that this common history, which perhaps at one time was "a negative factor," is now becoming a positive factor because both sides have "forgotten the bad days and now remember only the good days."

The relationship between Jordan and Turkey is a particularly sound one, according to Turkmen. Relations between the two countries have never been tarnished by any problem, and Jordan has a special place with the Turks. Turkey also attaches great importance to Jordan because of the "crucial role" it is destined to play in developments affecting the Middle East. Turkey is eagerly and enthusiastically awaiting a visit by His Majesty King Husayn and the government believes there is complete mutual confidence between the two countries.

Turkmen also looks forward to growing cooperation and integration among the countries of the Islamic world. He considers last year's summit at At-Ta'if to have been "a great success," and hopes that the Islamic world will build upon its achievements. Although the Islamic countries "do not represent a geographical unity," Turkmen believes they can cooperate effectively, first in safeguarding their common interest in the world, second in developing their own relations and third in upholding their common cultural heritage and values.

He regrets the differences between Muslim countries, such as the war between Iraq and Iran, but while not expecting a sudden breakthrough in relations among the Muslim states, he believes a gradual growth in cohesion is definitely possible.

Turkmen also talked about the new Turkish constitution which is currently being reviewed by the National Security Council. He stressed that the constitution is intended to lead Turkey back to a democratic system. Turkey will once again become a parliamentary democracy, and will enjoy "all the freedoms which exist in democratic countries."

GOVERNMENT WARNS U.S. ON GREEK MOTIVES

NC270957 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 23 Oct 82 pp 1, 11

[Nur Batur Report]

[Text] Ankara, (TERCUMAN News Desk) -- Following disclosures by Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou to the effect that Turkey poses a threat to Greece and that he would seek assurances from the United States, the Turkish Government has warned the United States "not to allow itself to be deceived by Papandreou."

In the representations made to the U.S. State Department, Sukru Elekdag, Turkish ambassador to Washington stressed that the Greek prime minister's arguments were totally unfounded and added: " A threat directed at Greece from Turkey is out of the question. Turkey has no territorial claims on any of its neighbors, let alone Greece."

Attention has been drawn to the true objective of the campaign against Turkey, which was launched on the eve of the Greek-U.S. negotiations in connection with the Joint Defense Cooperation Agreement and the U.S. administration has been urged not to be tricked by Papandreou. It is noted that the Greek prime minister's arguments about imaginary threats are in sharp contrast to the fundamental principle of an alliance of which both countries are members. It has been said that if one of the countries who unite on the idea of security feels insecure as to the other's intentions, that country's position in the alliance is incompatible.

In the course of these representations, the U.S. Government was asked to communicate these points to the Greek authorities, and reference has been made to reports that some time ago the U.S. administration gave Greece assurances, expressing the hope that their fears were unfounded.

It has further been stated that the Turkish Government expects the United States to preserve its present attitude toward Greece since it believes that this would be to the advantage of both Turkish-U.S. and Turkish-Greek relations. Attention has been drawn to the fact that if an assurance were given to Greece by the U.S. administration this too would adversely affect Turkish-American relations.

As is known, in 1976, when the Greek Government demanded an assurance from the United States against Turkey, then Secretary of State Kissinger responded to the Greek Government with a letter. The U.S. tendency to provide assurances to Greece provoked reactions from Ankara.

During former U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's visit to Turkey last May, journalists asked him: "Is Kissinger's letter valid? Would you refer to this letter yourself?" Haig replied: "We want Turkey and Greece to resolve their disputes through peaceful methods and through bilateral talks. The letter in question is in the archives."

GUNAYDIN DEFENDS SUSPENSION OF EX-POLITICIANS

NC260901 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 21 Oct 82 p 3

["Pressure Cooker" Column by Necati Zincirkiran: "What Were We Expecting?"]

[Text] Every military coup entails certain consequences. When we look back on the past, we remember that one prime minister and two cabinet ministers were sent to the gallows.

As for coups carried out in other countries, we wake up in the morning and hear of bloodbaths. There are the results of military intervention, even when they are justified. We should probably consider it natural that all coups end in sad circumstances. But it is true that despite pressure from various circles, the Turkish Armed Forces, which carried out the 12 September intervention, refused to set up special courts to try the politicians. Nor did they prepare dossiers which would send them to the gallows. Instead, when everything was over, they turned to the leaders of the past era and said to them: "You, as the persons who caused democracy to deteriorate in Turkey, and imperiled the future of the country, cannot engage in politics for the next 10 years. Let other people engage in politics for awhile now." This is what the Armed Forces considered appropriate.

It should not be forgotten that those who adopted this decision and who are running the government are a military administration. This administration could put on trail, either in groups or individually, the political leaders and cadres of the former regime and could have them punished through the courts. Were all of them blameless? Democracy is not child's play. But in the past, it was turned into child's play by a few leaders. Each of these leaders was exploring intricate ways and means to stay in power while the state was on the verge of collapse. It is impossible to forget all this.

In adding a temporary article to the new constitution, which is now in its final form, the leaders and administrators of the parties subjected to public prosecution have been banned from political life for 10 years. In ushering in a new era in Turkey, this era is bound to bring certain new conditions. All of us familiar with the pre-12 September tableau ask: Can General Evren be expected to address himself to the leaders he has punished and say "Gentlemen, come to the political arena and demonstrate your skills again"?

AUTHORITIES ANNOUNCE ARREST OF 50 OPPONENTS

[Statement by the Press and Public Relations Department of the 1st Army and the Istanbul, Canakkale, Edirne, Tekirdag, Kirklareli Martial Law Command -- date not specified]

[Text] It has been determined that, during the work being conducted in connection with the constitution and under conditions where every opinion can be freely discussed within the framework of the law, certain remnants of extreme leftist and separatist organizations, as well as fanatics and exploiters of religion and faith -- who are puppets of external circles, enemies of democracy and freedom and who think only of dividing the country -- started a campaign urging people to vote against the constitution and either mailed or distributed postcards, brochures and letters for that purpose.

With the help of sensible and patriotic citizens and following certain measures, a total of 50 of those anarchists and terrorists, who realize that the present Constitution will not let them have the conditions prior to 12 September 1980 for their despicable aims, have been caught with the equipment they have been using in their crimes. Numerous postcards and pamphlets ready to be mailed to various addresses or distributed were found on these persons' or in their homes. The security forces also found the printing machines which printed the pamphlets, one Kalashnikov rifle, one Sten gun, five pistols and a large amount of hidden ammunition for use in activities. Legal action has been started against those arrested.

EVREN'S ERZURUM SPEECH ON RELIGION CRITICIZED

[Text] Dear Listeners, the head of the military junta, General Evren, is continuing his tour of the country, explaining to the people the contents of the black constitution. In every province, the general is promising what the public there expects to hear. These promises are based on deceit and lies. Yesterday, in the eastern Anatolia Province of Erzurum, he tried to exploit the religious feelings of its inhabitants. In his speech, Evren on the one hand condemned the exploitation of religion, while on the other claimed it was his prerogative alone to do so. He said that to fast during Ramadan is an exploitation of religion, as is praying in public. And when our religious citizens oppose his constitution and the junta, he raves. The general concealed from the public the fact that imams of several mosques who dared to oppose the junta constitution have recently been detained.

Looking at the blue skies, the general tells the public it is a miracle that while he addresses them there is no rain, as if to say he is to a kind of prophet. This same Evren does not hesitate to detain religious officials.

All business conducted by Evren is based on deceit and lies. Though he pretends to be a believing Muslim, he never misses an occasion to lie or resort to demagogy. That is what he did during his speech in Erzurum. On the one hand he imposes by force the junta constitution, which eliminates all fundamental rights and liberties, and on the other, claims that it includes all rights and liberties. This is certainly a big lie.

Here are more examples of his deceptions: The general pretends to condemn the rule of the Ottoman sultans, yet he imposes a constitution that invests him with similar powers. The constitution makes him the sole ruler. He is beginning to believe that every word he utters is law. He sends those he dislikes to the dungeons, accusing them of exploiting religious feelings. He then claims that his father also was a hodja [words indistinct].

The head of the junta delivers all of the state's potential into the hands of the rich, those who marry off their children in the Hilton Hotel at a cost of millions of lira, and he then pretends that the military administration has brought equality to the nation. Is this statement not also a lie? His lies are already causing difficulties for him. Everything he says is [word indistinct]. The sky may not serve Evren in his prophesies, but it might serve to remind the people of the blue slip of rejection during the referendum.

In his efforts to deceive our religious Muslim citizens, Evren has begun to contradict himself. In his efforts to exploit the religious feelings of these citizens, he has made a few blunders. His lies will ultimately catch up with him. Every threat he makes will boomerang. The detention of religious officials will not intimidate our Muslim citizens, who will vote against the junta's black constitution.

Dear citizens of Erzurum, you have listened to Evren. You have heard his threats. The only thing left for you to do is vote against the black constitution that Evren says he deserves.

319TH MBFR PLENARY SESSION HELD IN VIENNA

AU291124 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 29 Oct 82 p 3

[Unattributed report: "East and West Hoping for Progress; 9 Years of Forces Reduction Talks in Vienna"]

[Text] After 9 years of negotiations, representatives of the Eastern and Western delegation at the Vienna forces reduction talks expressed on Thursday the hope that the current difficulties can be overcome and progress can be achieved in order to eventually arrive at an agreement. According to an Eastern press spokesman, Polish chief delegate, Ambassador Stanislaw Przygodzki declared that the Warsaw Pact states had left no stone unturned to show ways of bringing about a reduction of troops in central Europe. It is regrettable, however -- Przygodzki continued -- that to date, the Western side has failed to display a constructive approach, and that the draft agreement tabled by the East has been "virtually ignored" by NATO states.

Speaking on behalf of the Western side, FRG chief delegate Ambassador Walter Boss declared that at the conclusion of the ninth year of the Vienna negotiations, he was hoping for a "turning point." He welcomed the fact that this year each side had tabled a draft agreement. However, Boss drew attention to the "fundamental differences" between the two drafts. The West German chief delegate called for a businesslike discussion which, he said, could eventually lead to an "agreement in principle."

The preliminary talks on a reduction of forces in central Europe began in Vienna on 31 January 1973, while the first round of the negotiations was officially opened on 30 October 1973.

U.S.-SOVIET GRAIN NEGOTIATIONS CONCLUDE

AU291300 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] The U.S.-Soviet grain negotiations ended in Vienna today. According to U.S. reports, the Soviet Union has not made any concrete commitments regarding purchases of 15 million tons of grain which the United States had offered in excess of the long-term quota agreement.

U.S. delegation leader (Lodwick) stated in Vienna today that the Soviet Union was unable at the moment to make exact statements about the quantity of grain needed from the United States because the harvest results from the southern parts of the USSR are awaited and the import requirements cannot be established until they are ready.

The 7-year U.S.-Soviet grain agreement expires in September 1983. It envisages annual purchases of 8 million tons of U.S. grain.

CSSR SEEKS EXTRADITION OF REFUGEE FOR MURDER

AU281554 Vienna KURIER in German 28 Oct 82 p 15

[Erich Grolig report: "Dark Affair Around Defected Bearer of Secrets; Former CSSR Officer Arrested on Murder Charge"]

[Summary] Austrian authorities are currently investigating a mysterious affair concerning a Czechoslovak refugee who has been granted political asylum in Austria. He is 35-year-old Rostislav Rostocil, who was arrested on 23 October in Moellersdorf near Baden after Prague demanded his extradition on the charge that he had murdered and robbed an Egyptian by the name of Muhamed N. Kallin. "Since in the eyes of the CSSR authorities, Rostocil is regarded as a bearer of secrets, Austrian authorities are taking a rather sceptical view of the charges, because it is a well-known East bloc method to bring criminal charges against refugees whose return is sought." Criminals whose guilt can be proven are extradited by the West. In this case, the CSSR extradition request does not specify any details of the alleged crime.

Rostocil, who entered Austria in 1980 by illegally crossing the Yugoslav border and was subsequently granted political asylum the same year, had served for 7 years in the CSSR Army, the last 2 years as a lieutenant in a ground-to-ground missile batallion in Stara Boleslav in Bohemia. Even though he left military service as early as 1969, he is still regarded as a bearer of secrets according to People's Democratic practice. Fearing that he might be kidnapped, he had ignored several invitations to come to the CSSR Embassy in Vienna for a talk following his defection. Since Austrian authorities suspect that the Prague secret service is involved in this affair, they are determined to investigate the charges in a particularly painstaking manner.

OUTGOING OMANI ENVOY -- Muhammad Ali Umar Tahir, charge d'affaires of the Vienna embassy of the Sultanate of Oman, who has headed the embassy since 1979 and is now due to return home, gave a farewell reception on 27 October 1982 which was attended by prominent public figures, including Defense Minister Roesch. POLISH DEBT RESCHEDULING -- According to information from Frankfurt bank circles, agreements on rescheduling Polish debts falling due in 1982 are to be concluded between 500 Western creditor banks and the Polish People's Republic on 3 November in Vienna. Vienna bank circles have confirmed this report. Reportedly, the already concluded negotiations would have permitted an earlier signing of the agreements but in consideration of U.S. creditor banks, a date after the U.S. congressional elections has been chosen, because in view of economic sanctions of the U.S. Administration against Poland and the USSR, the rescheduling of Polish debts is a rather controversial issue. LUBBERS TO FORM NEW COALITION GOVERNMENT

[Text] The Hague, Oct 30 (AFP) -- Christian Democrat Ruud Lubbers, a former economics minister, was asked today to form a new coalition government, it was announced officially here.

The centre-right coalition of Christian Democrats and Liberals is expected to have 81 seats in the 150 Dutch lower house elected last September 8.

Mr Lubbers, aged 43, will be prime minister and the Christian Democrats, with 45 seats, will hold eight portfolios, including foreign affairs, finance, defence and agriculture.

The Liberals, with 36 members of Parliament, will take the Transport and Cooperation and Development Ministries along with four others.

This last week, the two parties reached agreement on government budget cuts and a prices and wages freeze to come into effect on January 1.

Under the new government's policies, the buying power of the Dutch will go down by three to four percent next year for the better off, and by 1.5 percent for low salaried workers.

Cuts will be made in education, housing and child allowances, while 6,500 public service jobs will disappear.

In matters of defence, Mr Lubbers will announce that the Netherlands will deploy North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) missiles if there is no progress at the Geneva European arms limitation talks.

SCHELTEMA DISCUSSES UN SECURITY COUNCIL ROLE

PM291531 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 23 Oct 82 p 3

[Netherlands UN Ambassador Hugo Scheltema interview with Pieter Graf: "In the Security Council I Will Express Only Netherlands Views"]

[Text] New York, 23 Oct -- "Views that I express in the Security Council will be purely Netherlands views. I will not be acting with a mandate from the EEC, just as Britain and France do not and Ireland has not done."

The statement comes from Mr Hugo Scheltema, the Kingdom of the Netherlands permanent representative at the United Nations and who from 1 January 1983, will hold a seat on the Security Council. Scheltema himself stresses the word "kingdom." "The kingdom still included the Antilles."

Scheltema described the work of the Security Council as extremely interesting. "For 2 years, the Netherlands will once again have an opportunity to take part in discussions and decision-making in the most important organ of the United Nations in the field of peace and security. The kingdom had a half period in 1946 and a subsequent full period in 1962 to 1964 with a seat on the Security Council."

[Question] What else does a seat on the Security Council mean?

"Extra work," was the short reply. To which Hugo Scheltema added, "not different work, but work in another UN body."

[Question] Will your staff be enlarged for this extra work?

[Answer] That is a personnel question that I cannot and do not want to answer. This is a question which the minister must look into at the right time. I can only say that the staff I have at my disposal at present are highly qualified and in my honest opinion would be equal to the work. At present, no expansion is being considered.

[Question] What problems do you anticipate in the field of peace and security?

[Answer] The problems which also face the General Assembly -- the Middle East, questions such as the war [Scheltema looks for the correct formulation) or the conflict between Iraq and Iran, perhaps the Afghanistan question, southern Africa, Namibia and of course, possible future new international conflicts.

[Question] Will there also be an improvement in information?

[Answer] In what ways is it not good?

[Question] A little while ago there was talk of Netherlands contribution to the multinational force for Beirut. The Netherlands permanent UN representative said "No" and The Hague said, "Yes, if we are asked."

[Answer] I cannot see any discrepancy. It is a hypothetical question. No request has been received. If a request were received -- well, the government has made no statement about the possibility.

[Question] Will the Netherlands permanant representation now publish so-called 'position papers'?

[Answer] I am not aware that information as far as the present permanent representation is concerned has fallen short. There can be no doubt that we have paid much attention to information. But for 'position papers' I would have to refer you to the Foreign Ministry, for it is there that the Netherlands' position is determined.

What I hope for and expect is greater interest on the part of the Netherlands media in the United Nations and in the work of this mission, because interest is considerably less than it was 25 to 30 years ago.

[Question] You will be retiring soon. Will this create any problems?

[Answer] In the middle of next year I will reach pensionable age, but I cannot imagine that the minister will send a successor who is not an expert or who does not have sufficient experience of the work here. I really do not see any problems here.

[Question] It is true that in order to win the seat on the Security Council the Netherlands made concessions on the recognition of the present regime in Kampuchea?

[Answer] No.

[Question] There is therefore no suggestion that we will not begin a slow process of recognition of the Khmer Rouge?

[Answer] There is no connection.

DEFENSE MINISTERS DISCUSS NATO DEFENSES

LD291402 Hamburg DPA in German 1335 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 29 Oct (DPA) -- The British Army of the Rhine in the FRG, which is about 50,000 men strong, will not be reduced in size. This was made clear in Bonn by Defense Minister Manfred Woerner and his British counterpart, John Nott, during the English-German summit, during which they also discussed joint interests within the framework of arms cooperation. The Defense Ministry announced after the talks that Woerner thanked Nott "for an assurance of the undimished presence fo the Army of the Rhine." The British troops were also a guarantee of the frontline defense of Great Britain in the BRG.

The Defense Ministry stressed that both sides assured that their governments are adhering to the NATO dual decision. "If the reports by our U.S. ally for a contructive result to the Geneva negotiations fail due to Soviet resistance, both countries will station the planned weapons systems."

The Defense Ministry said that Woerner informed Nott on the security and defense policy talks in the framework of the Franco-German consultations held a week ago. "There was no confirmation of speculation on alleged mistrust or concern on the part of our British guests," the ministry said.

Thatcher Berlin Speech

LD291528 Hamburg DPA in German 1403 GMT 29 Oct 82

["Excerpt" from speech given by Margaret Thatcher in Berlin on 29 October; punctuation as received]

[Text] Berlin, 29 Oct (DPA) -- "This city reminds us that we live in the shadow of a great power which denies all that we believe in, that we must be vigilant, strong and determined to defend freedom and justice if our peoples are to keep the way of life they have freely chosen. (...)

(The wall is) a gloomy monument to a violent, hopeless ideology. Every stone bears witness to the moral bankruptcy of the society it is supposed to protect. (...) The communists shrink from no means to keep the people in the country. (...)

The wall is a constant reminder that those who suppress the freedom of our Eastern neighbors are at the same time aiming to extinguish our own freedoms. We must do our utmost to prevent them from ever being successful in this.

To protect peace we need the necessary means and the will. Both must be absolutely clear if we want to deter our potential opponent. As regards the means, we must maintain an adequate measure of conventional and nuclear weapons. (...)

As members of NATO and of the EEC we have a more comprehensive collective responsibility. (...) If freedom is attacked in one place, then it will be harmed everywhere. If we in Europe do not fulfil our commitments in one place, then our readiness to fulfil them in another will be called into question."

"Berlin teaches us something else': That strength and determination not only preserve peace (...), but also can lead to a reduction of tensions, to greater cooperation between East and West. A paradox? No. Weakness provokes the attacker; strength leads to talks and negotiations. (...)

There are forces which are stronger and more effective than the machinery of war. One cann chain a man but not his thoughts. One can enslave someone but one can never dominate his spirit. Every decade the Soviet leaders have been reminded that their pitiless ideology can only survive because it is maintained by force. But the day will come when the anger and frustration of people is so great that they will no longer be contained by force. Then the building will be cracked. The cement will crumble. Poland teaches us this lesson.

They will try to shore up the building but the world knows that in Poland things will never again be as they were before. The innovations and reforms which the Polish people desire have to be introduced or there will be no lasting stability or prosperity in that unhappy country. (...)

The Kremlin knows that when given a free choice, the people choose freedom. One day freedom will dawn on the other side of the wall."

Kohl on Talks

LD291644 Hamburg DPA in German 1454 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 29 Oct (DPA) -- The official text of the final declaration [abschlousserklaerung] from Chancellor Helmut Kohl at the conclusion of the English-German consultations on Friday in Bonn:

Prime Minister, ladies and gentlemen: What State Secretary Stolze said is quite correct: The consulations in Bonn are over. But this 12th English-German consultative meeting primarily gains special significance in my view because you, Prime Minister -- and it is a great pleasure and honor for me to be able to accompany you -- will visit Berlin for the first time during your period of office after you leave here.

I must thank you very warmly for this. Your visit to Berlin is especially significant for us. It is a gesture of friendship and of the cordial feeling for all Germans, for you to visit the former capital, that we will go together to the Reichstag, and that you will have a very personal impression and a very personal experience regarding the situation in Berlin.

The division of our fatherland, the division of the city can only truly be understood if one sees it with one's own eyes, almost feels it. I thank you warmly for this. This 12th German-English summit is the first discussion we have been able to hold between both governments here in Bonn after the change of government. I had the great pleasure of being able to meet and speak to you 10 days ago in London.

The completely normal course -- I should like to put it that way -- of the talks shows the good level of English-German relations. Irrespective of the current government or of a change of government, our common conviction is shown in our fundamental political views.

It is a relationship of steady and mature friendship. It is based on the common interests of our two countries. It is embedded in our international obligations, whether it be in the EEC or in NATO. Great Britain is also a guarantor of our security, of the peace and of the freedom in our Federal Republic of German. The existence of the Rhine army is part of the history of freedom in our country. Great Britain is one of the protecting powers of Berlin. I have already referred to this.

Our talks -- both the private talks we have held and the consultation which our colleagues, Genscher and Pym, Woerner and Nott, Graf Lambsdorff and the Ministers Howe (as heard) and Jenkin and Stoltenberg and Chancellor of the Exchequer Howe have had -- served to intensify these relations.

We have of course, also talked about the internal developments in our countries, about the prime aim of our governments to revitalize the economy and to fight to reduce unemployment: particularly unemployment among the young.

We have also spoken in depth about international relations, about the world economic situation, and we agreed on the view that the increase in protectionism is a dangerous development. We have spoken about the unsatisfactory developments within the European Community, a topic which particularly affects us Germans because at the start of next year we shall be taking over the presidency, and that we should do all we can to make the Community capable of action even if times are difficulty. We are in complete agreement that it is absolutely vital for Europe that we intensify the partnership with our friends in the United States, to remove as soon as possible many misunderstandings which have arisen over recent months. That partnership for us means close ties while at the same time understandaly maintaining our own interests.

We both take the view that the solution which has now been found in connection with the steel issue is an optimistic sign for this cooperation.

We discussed the worrying development in Poland. Both governments are following with great and warm sympathy the especially difficult situation of the Polish people. We agreed that humanitarian aid must be continued. Above all, we agreed that the Polish Government must keep to the treaties which have been concluded. I refer to the CSCE final acts. This contains above all, the necessary freedom of movement for the trade unions, for the church and the promised dialogue with the church.

Regarding security policy, we agreed that the close cooperation within the alliance must be continued and that Great Britain and the FRG can make their own special contribution to his. We expressed our shared hope that the disarmament negotiations will proceed further and, if possible, produce positive results.

In this conversation, I have stressed once again that the government I lead, just like the government of my predecessor, is committed to both parts of the NATO dual decision; that we in the FRG want to be a reliable and a predictable partner in the alliance; that a promise made is valid and that the Soviet Union must know that only real successes at the negotiating table can prevent and stop the counterarming envisaged in the second part of the dual decision.

These are all the remarks I wish to make. I say thank you once again for the friendly, for the warm, frank manner in which we have spoken together. For me, it greatly encouraged our work. I should like to announce that we envisage the next consultations to take place in London in April, probably 22 April.

Thatcher Remarks on Talks

[Text] Bonn, 29 Oct (DPA) -- According to an unofficial translation, the British prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, said at the end of the German-British Government consultations:

"Chancellor Kohl, I thank you very much for the cordial welcome and for the very fruitful and pleasant talks which we have had. I also thank you for what you said about the Berlin visit. I am very pleased to make the visit, very pleased that we shall be going together. It is my first visit to Berlin. It is, of course, a unique city, unique in the structure of its government and of its protection, unique in the courage and determination of its people. I have not yet seen the wall and expect it to be a traumatic experience for me. Quite naturally, we detest walls which enclose people; but this wall is a permanent reminder that people will choose freedom when they have freedom of choice.

Now, about our talks: Chancellor Kohl and I obviously held talks on strategic issues. The detailed discussions were held between the groups of ministers mentioned by Chancellor Kohl. If you will allow me, I would like to group my remarks in three categories.

First, we discussed the problem concerning the Western alliance; and on the whole we approached these problems in a similar manner. There is the resolve to secure peace with freedom and justice, but we would like to be in a position to do this at as low a cost as possible today, on the condition that at each stage we can secure the agreement of the Warsaw Pact countries, agreements which can be ratified.

Therefore, we are working toward two things at the same time: There is the determination to secure freedom and justice, and there is the desire to do this at a lower level of expenditure, on the condition that we are able to negotiate on this. In the Western alliance there are one or two temporary problems between the United States and ourselves, such as the Siberian gas pipeline. We hope that this will be resolved soon and that the sanctions will be lifted so as to overcome this problem, so that we will be able to concentrate on matters which are so very important to all of us.

We had an extensive discussion about Poland, this tragic country whose people are so very much yearning for freedom which we take for granted; and of course, we also discussed Poland's economic situation and the need of the Polish people to survive the coming winter.

Next, we dealt with the other great area of which we both are members. the European Community. There have been very good reports from the Community over the past few days which have renewed both our belief in it and our determination to tackle our problems. The achievement of a steel agreement was one such success. The achievement so quickly of a fair agreement on the budget question was also a big success. We most earnestly hope that the first long-term agreement may now follow, which the Community has been aiming at for a long time, namely the fisheries agreement. We do not yet have a common fisheries policy, but nine of us have already reached a consensus. We hope that Denmark will join this consensus in the next few days so that we may conclude this great, new joint fisheries agreement for the whole Community. Our course has always been, and this goes without saying, very constructive as far as all the EC problems are concerned. If major budget problems arise again in the future, we will tackle them again on a strategic basis.

The third category of subjects which we discussed concerned economic questions, and we both look forward to the economic summit conference. Chancellor Kohl is, of course, to have a prior meeting with the American President. We are approaching this summit totally believing that its purpose will be to get to know each other's objectives and ways of thinking and embark on a cooperative course to the extent possible. Finally, we can achieve the best possible cooperation and the best possible chances for prosperity and stability only when each and everyone of us is able to bring his own economic house in order so as to cooperate better with the others. We are totally in favor of open trade and regret that other countries, in many different ways, do not support such a system as energetically. We note that this requires genuinely open trade and genuine competition. But at present, there are a number of things which are not genuinely open and competitive, and this too is not really fair.

If I may be allowed to say a word about the atmosphere of our talks: At our meeting in London I noted that our views are similar. We had a truly magnificent exchange of views and, if I may use this analogy, we were on the same wavelength. I believe that the talks today between Chancellor Kohl and myself and with the ministers, the foreign ministers, the finance ministers, the trade ministers and the defense ministers, have given us a great feeling of trust for fruitful cooperation in the future. One cannot ask for more. We thank our hosts very much for their hospitality and for the atmosphere which has led to such very successful bilateral meetings."

Kohl on Berlin 'Stability'

[Text] Berlin 29 Oct (DPA) -- During British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's visit to Berlin, Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl referred to the city's stability. At Schoeneberg Town Hall, the chancellor said he hopes thatthis stability will continue. Kohl advocated that East-West cooperation be continued. The four-power agreement will also have to be strictly adhered to and fully applied in the future.

Kohl thanked Mrs Thatcher for her visit to Berlin and emphasized that these expressions of gratitude are "on behalf of the compatriots in the East and West." Berlin stands for the freedom of Germany. The chancellor emphasized the openness of Berlin to influences from Europe and all parts of the world and said that the city also owes this to the willingness of the allied powers to protect Berlin.

In this connection, Kohl expressed special thanks to the British soldiers in Berlin. He referred to the common interests of the Federal Republic and Great Britain. The strongest tie is the will to freedom which must be rewon and defended daily. The will to peace in freedom is unbroken and is stronger than all ideology, the chancellor said. The historic challenges can be met when this "article of faith" is observed.

GENSCHER REMARKS ON FRG SECURITY POLICY, SCHMIDT

LD301428 Hamburg DPA in German 1239 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 30 Oct (DPA) -- Not even the so-called manifesto of the former FDP general secretary, Guenter Verheugen, which calls for an evaluation of the NATO dual decision can induce Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher to move away from the current security policy. The FDP chairman said in an interview for South German Radio that he will do everything in his power to ensure "that the continuity and reliability, predictability and straightforwardness of the German foreign and security policy cannot be called into question." It is entirely up to the Soviet Union to seize this "magnificent opportunity" for real disarmament.

Genscher said that former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's refusal to accept the top candidacy is a capitulation in the face of the internal contradictions within the SPD. Furthermore, it has not been the first capitulation either. Schmidt had already given up at the SPD's Munich party congress.

SPD NAMES VOGEL TO BE CANDIDATE FOR CHANCELLOR

LD291658 Hamburg DPA in German 1419 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 29 Oct (DPA) -- On Friday, the leadership of the SPD named the Berlin opposition leader and former federal justice minister, Hans-Jochen Vogel, as its candidate for the chancellorship. At the same time, with a view toward the expected elections to the Bundestag on 6 March, the SPD leadership once again raised the party's claim to form the government. Three days after former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt decided not to run for the chancellorship again, the SPD Executive unanimously voted to accept the candidate jointly proposed by Schmidt and party leader Willy Brandt. The Executive called on the 56-year-old Vogel to run for election at the party conference in Dotmund on 21 January as final confirmation of his candidacy for the top office.

GENSCHER RECEIVES LOWER SAXONY FDP SUPPORT

LD311756 Hamburg DPA in German 1704 GMT 31 Oct 82

[Text] Fallingbostel, 31 Oct (DPA) -- Today the Lower Saxony FDP supported party Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher and the change of coalition in Bonn, but by an extremely small majority. During the extraordinary party conference in Fallingbostel (Soltau-Fallingbostel District), 148 delegates voted for Genscher's reelection as federal party chairman on 7 November in Berlin. There were 147 votes against the motion. Regional chairman Heinrich Juergens expressed the view in the weeks preceding the party conference that Genscher is "no longer tenable."

In addition, a majority of the regional Executive managed to approve a motion supporting the coalition with the CDU/CSU. A slender majority of delegates believe that merely "the way in which the coalition agreement with the CDU came about with lack of information and grassroots party participation" is open to criticism.

The Executive's motion, approved by the party congress, says with regard to the coalition with the CDU/CSU that "liberal concepts" must be realized within it. Current agreements with the Union parties should be "supplemented from the 1980 election program."

FDP LEADERS MAKE TV PARTY POLICY STATEMENTS

LD311306 Hamburg DPA in German 1112 GMT 31 Oct 82

FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher stated on ZDF [Second German Television] today: "I see no danger of a split." All delegates at the congress agree that majority decisions must be accepted.

With regard to demands from his party that he should make it clear before the congress whether he would also resign as foreign minister following an election defeat as chairman, Genscher said: "I think it would be wrong for me, as chairman of the party to try to constrict the delegates' freedom of decision and influence their views by making a statement on this question." Everyone in the FDP now has to draw closer together. "No one has a monopoly claim to the morality of his attitude and his arguments."

FDP party group Chairman Wolfgang Mischnick is also "convinced that no split in the party will occur in Berlin." Contrary to various representatives of the party's left wing, who do not regard it necessary for the liberals to make a statement on the coalition prior to the coming Bundestag elections, Mischnick holds the view that the congress in January should decide on a coalition statement. "I personally believe that a coalition statement is necessary." Mischnick believes that a return to the SPD "is not possible under the given circumstances." He believes that a majority will decide on continuing the present coalition "naturally, under certain practical conditions, which must be worked out."

Genscher's rival candidate at the Berlin congress, Uwe Ronneburger, speaking on the same television program, stressed that the coalition agreement with the Union is only valid until 6 March. "This coalition had a brief time in office clearly limited until 6 March," Ronneburger said. "After 6 March, the decision will be made by party congresses, the voter, and not by a chairman alone." In a future coalition, the "liberal element of policy" must be expressed more clearly than in current coalition agreements with the Union.

MERMAZ WELCOMES SPANISH ELECTION RESULTS

LD201232 Paris Domestic Service in French 1145 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] There have been few reactions as yet to the results of the elections in Spain, but it is worth noting the reaction in France by Louis Mermaz, president of the National Assembly, who states that the success scored by the Spanish Socialists shows that Democratic socialism is current in Europe. All defenders of freedom today feel happy and encouraged, writes Louis Mermaz, who then goes on to say that this is the dawn of a new era in Spain.

HERNU SENDS MESSAGE TO INJURED MEN IN LEBANON

LD301500 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Text] Defense Minister Charles Hernu has sent a message to the French paratroopers injured in Lebanon. I remind you that four paratroopers were slightly injured yesterday by the accidental explosion of a grenade in a Palestinian camp near Beirut. Such incidents show how difficult our mission is, the defense minister wrote: To accomplish it, Charles Hernu concluded, our troops must have cool heads and show the great self-control they have exhibited since their arrival in Beirut. Seventeen people have been injured among the French troops in Lebanon since August.

MILITARY STUDYING NEUTRON BOMB DEVELOPMENT

NC312029 Paris AFP in English 1901 GMT 31 Oct 82

[By Jean-Pierre Bousquet]

[Excerpt] Paris, Oct 31 (AFP) -- French military advisors are apparently planning to incorporate the neutron death ray bomb into France's tactical nuclear force.

While a final decision to go ahead with such plans rests with the government, recent moves by military advisors to reorganise the French Army and redefine methods of modern warfare in built-up areas point to the coming use of the neutron bomb by the French armed Forces.

The government continues to maintain that no decision has been taken yet on the production of the bomb.

But several recent statements by ranking defence experts here show that the army has been seriously investingating the use of the limited range neutron bomb, intended to kill human beings while leaving buildings unscathed.

Colonel Bruno Chaix recently said in STRAGEGY, a magazine published by the French National Defence Studies Foundation, that vast areas in Eastern Europe that once served as ideal passages for invading forces, has now been built up and could only be taken by forces using "a high proportion of neutron arms".

Turning to the recent war in Beirut, he said that the classical military notion of front and rear lines was not totally outmoded. War in a built-up zone, he added, meant that an army could transport only a limited amount of classical weapons, but was also unable to resort to tactical nuclear arms with an explosive power of over 10 kilotons.

Col. Chaix said the Army must incorporate the neutron bomb into France's nuclear "warning strategy".

The Army, he added, must adopt new combat methods adapted to war in built-up areas and civilians must learn to cope with the possibility of a war taking place on their doorsteps.

OFFICIAL: FIRST ARMY MAY BE REORGANIZED IN 1983

NC301933 Paris AFP in English 1402 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 30 (AFP) -- France's First Army Battle Corps, partly stationed in West Germany, faces both reorganisation and spending cuts under the 1983 budget, a ranking Defense Ministry official hinted.

Georges Lemoine, secretary of state (Junior minister) for defence, implicitly confirmed this week that a plan to streamline the First Army was being studied by ministry planners.

"Evolution" was necessary to keep pace with defense problems posed by geography at home and overseas, Mr Lemoine said.

The First Army, which accounts for 200,000 men among the Army's total 350,000 troop strength, is split into three corps: The first has its headquarters in Baden-Baden, West Germany, the second in Metz, eastern France and the third is based at Saint German Paris.

It comprises eight armoured divisions and five artillery regiments equipped with a total of 30 Pluton tactical nuclear missle launchers, 1,2000 tanks, 3,000 armoured vehicles, 400 field guns and 400 helicopters.

From 1991 onwards, the First Army will handle France's new Hades tactical nuclear missiles which have a range of 350 kms (236 miles) and which will replace the Pluton, with a range of only 120 kms (75 miles).

Mr Lemoine said that besides the sort of redeployment called for in peace time, there was a need to "increase mobility and firepower, perhaps at the expense of manpower".

Informed sources said redeployment could mean the creation of more "airborne" divisions or units which would have both increased mobility and be better adapted to battle conditions in the unbanished areas of most of Western Europe.

It was also being debated, Mr Lemoine said, whether the deployment and orientation of the First Army, with its frontlines currently facing the north east, were best suited to its double defence role both to boost NATO forces and for the ground defence of France.

As for French tactical nuclear weapons, they were over-dependent geographically and materially on classical forces, Mr Lemoine said.

The French president's right to order nuclear weaponry to be used had to be boosted, he added.

Meanwhile, in a report Thursday to the Government Defence Commission, Communist MP Jean Combasteil said that with the exception of 3,000 national servicemen to be detached for gendarmerie duty, there should be "no significant changes" to the overall manpower of the Army under the 1983 military budget.

Mr Combasteil said troop strength was a vital force in urban areas of Western Europe where the terrain was unsuited to tanks.

Analysing the repercussions of a budget reduction of 3,200 million frances (450 million dollars) decided by the government, Mr Combasteil said that this year the Army would have to do without 26 motorised AUF-1 cannons, six AMX-30 B2 tanks, 55 AMX-10 P tanks, 47 AMX-10 RC tanks, 728 tactical vehicles, 50 armoured vehicles, 30 fast drilling units, and 630 million frances about 90 million dollars) worth of ammunition.

Next year however, Mr Combasteil said, supplies would include 44 AMX-10 RC, which "would be the last", 26 AUF-1 cannons, 15 short-range "Roland" anti-aircraft defence systems, 19 Gazelle SA 341 and 342 helicopters, 43 AMX-10 P and PPC tanks (against none this year), 3,000 tactical tyred vehicles and 225 armoured vehicles against 220 this year.

REPUBLICAN PARTY LEADER CRITICIZES MITTERRAND

NC301111 Paris AFP in English 1101 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 30 (AFP) -- President Francois Mitterrand is the "supreme guide of the socialist disaster" in France, outspoken former Interior Minister Michael Poniatowski has charged in the latest issue of his party organ "REPUBLICAN LETTER".

In a verbal onslaught on the Socialists in September, Mr Poniatowski called the government "a bunch of clowns" with the president as "super-clown," in a speech to the Republican Party.

In his latest attack, the former minister under President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said that France was now suffering the effects of the "mistakes, incompetence and inability of the socialist ideologists and theoreticians now in power".

Citing unofficial economic forecasts published by the European Community, Mr Poniatowski wrote that "what elsewhere is a crisis will turn here into a disaster. Downhill today, diaster tomorrow and catastrophe the day after that" he said.

Mr Poniatowski is honorary chairman of the Republican Party.

BOMB ATTACK DAMAGES SOVIET-OWNED SHOP IN PARIS

NC011110 Paris AFP in English 1057 GMT 1 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, Nov 1 (AFP) -- "Slava," a Soviet-owned jewellery shop in central Paris, was badly damaged in a bomb attack early today after being named Friday in a length article on Soviet espionage in France. Nobody was hurt.

The bomb was placed just outside the front door of the shop, whose window is protected by bullet-proof shutters, and exploded at 3 a.m., blowing out windows and damaging three parked cars.

"Slava" is the name of a watch-making factory in Besancon, eastern France, founded in 1961, in which the Soviet Union has a 90 percent share-holding.

The attack was claimed by the "Bakunin Group-Gdansk, Paris, Guatemala, Salvador" in a sealed letter addressed to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE.

A communique said that "from now on we will attack the real social parasites: Bureaucrats, shopkeepers, police who sell here the products of people exploited in Poland and the Soviet Union. We plan to internationalise the combat of Polish 'punks and hooligans,' as PRAVDA calls them."

The Bakunin group, named after the 19th century Russian anarchist, has claimed two previous bomb attacks, both on February 11 -- one against a Chilean-owned firm and the other against a French firm importing meat from Argentina.

The chairman of "Slava", until his death last January, was Maurice Dejean, a former French ambassador to Moscow (1955-64). He was for years the chairman of the Franco-Soviet Association.

The current issue of the weekly newsmagazine "L'EXPRESS' has a cover story on "Soviet spy secrets in France," and names Mr Dejean as being "close to the Soviets".

PCF LEADER MARCHAIS RETURNS FROM PRC, DPRK

NC300812 Paris AFP in English 0756 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Text] Paris, Oct 30 (AFP) -- French Communist Party leader Georges Marchais returned here today after a two-week visit to China and North Korea, and described his wide-ranging talks in Beijing as "a complete success."

Mr Marchais said discussions during the visit, which ended a 20-year break between the Chinese and French parties, "marked a broad agreement on the essential questions."

In Beijing he met Chinese strongman Deng Xiaoping, Party Secretary General Hu Yaobang and Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang.

During the visit, the two parties signed a co-operation agreement under which the French Communist paper L'HUMANITE will open a Beijing office. A Chinese Party delegation was also invited to visit France next year.

In Pyongyang, Mr Marchais had talks with North Korean President Kim Il-song.

MARCHAIS SPEAKS ON NEW PCF-CPC RELATIONS

PM291629 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Oct 82 p 5

[Apparent text of preliminary statement by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais at a press conference in Beijing on 26 October: "A Great Factor of Hope"]

[Text] Opening the press conference which he gave in Beijing yesterday morning, Georges Marchais stated:

Ladies and gentlemen: We have now reached the end of this 13-day visit to the PRC. Of course, I cannot convey to you in this preliminary statement all the impressions and assessments the comrades in our delegation have amassed as they come to the end of this visit. We have seen, heard, discovered and learned so much that we do not have enough time to describe it all this morning.

I would, therefore, like to limit myself to the two ideas: the things which strike us as being the two fundamental lessons learned from our visit.

The first is that after a long period in which a "shadow" hung over relations between the PCF and CPC, to cite Comrade Hu Yaobang's expression, our two parties have established, and are now going to have normal relations: the relations of friendship, solidarity, and fruitful cooperation which ought to exist among communist parties. That is a great event.

The second lesson is that, as I said last Thursday when speaking to the teachers and students at Fudan University in Shanghai, our visit has convinced us that the French people are kept in ignorance about too many of the realities of this vast country, about the real problems and the major achievements of the socialist society being built here.

The Restoration of Relations Between Our Two Parties

Before answering your questions, allow me to discuss each of those two points.

First, therefore, I will discuss the restoration and development of relations between our two parties. I am aware that in France, and possibly also in the international press, various -- and moreover often conflicting -- hypotheses have been put forward in an attempt to interpret the significance of our motives in coming here.

And yet, the explanation is very simple and can be found clearly written in the documents and decisions which we adopted at our 24th congress.

In that connection, I would like to recall that we explicitly stressed at our congress our desire -- and I quote -- "to develop our relations with all communist parties, including the Chinese and Albanian Communist Parties." But above all, and more fundamentally, we asserted at that congress our desire to work for a concept of internationalist solidarity corresponding to the realities of our time -- a concept which we called "new internationalism." Without, of course, limiting ourselves to that question, it seems to us that the development of relations with the CPC is a good illustration of that concept.

A New Internationalism

As I explained in reply to a question from a student at Fudan University, by new internationalism we mean unswerving respect toward all parties which have socialism as their objective of the particular path which they think best for building the original socialist society, which stems from their national conditions.

For our part, as you know, we have defined an original path for building an original socialist society -- a democratic path to a new society closely corresponding to our country's history and situation -- what we call a French brand of socialism.

And we found in our interlocutors the same desire as we have to start from their society's situation to find the appropriate answers to the social, economic and political problems which it is encountering. In short, we who are struggling for a French brand of socialism have observed here the search for a Chinese brand of socialism.

I had already stressed on 17 October, when talking to French journalists, that this common objective -- an original socialism, appropriate to our respective countries -- is a major area of agreement between our two parties.

The second aspect of the new internationalism follows from the first. If there is no "model" for a socialist society, there cannot be any "leadership party" either, enjoying prerogatives which the others do not have; there cannot be any "center" of the communist world, whether on a world or regional scale.

Thus, we are striving to maintain relations of friendship and solidarity with all communist parties in the world on the basis of independence, mutual respect, equal rights, noninterference and we are doing so on the basis of the idea that the growing diversity of experiments in struggle is a major advantage for the world revolutionary movement: that, in those conditions, different assessments, and disagreements are natural and that the main aim should be to seek all possible points of agreement for joint action with independence and originality for each party.

Open and Calm Discussion

Relations between the CPC and PCF constitute a good example of that concept from this viewpoint too. Everybody knows that our two parties have different opinions and disagreements on particular questions. We make no attempt to conceal that and we discussed them in a direct, open and calm way. And in doing so we did not merely make do with expressing rigid positions but showed a desire to make possible better mutual understanding.

For example, as I had stressed at the end of our first talks, although our respective positions on the situation in Kampuchea and Afghanistan remain unchanged, we both advocated a political solution to those two problems. As you can see, the days of anathema and excommunication are over. At the end of our talks we were thus able to pick up a broad area of agreement between our two parties and we drew up a cooperation plan.

Solidarity Against Imperialism

This brings me to the third aspect of the new internationalism: its dimensions. As we said at our congress, "we show solidarity, on the basis of the great objectives which we share, with all forces in the world struggling for peace, progress, justice, freedom, independence and socialism." We intend to contribute to developing the broadest joint action with all those forces and we think that in the framework of that emancipating struggle for the whole of mankind, the communist parties have an irreplaceable role to play.

We know -- we have noted it on many occasions here and have been informed about it as regards France -- that the restoration and development of relations between our parties is prompting great satisfaction among the French and Chinese Communists and workers. And we are convinced that all the anti-imperialist forces, all the forces of peace and justice, the workers and young people throughout the world will regard the fact that the PCF and CPC, those two great progressive forces, have been reconciled and have decided to cooperate, as a great element of hope.

That is particularly understandable at a time when imperialism's aggression, particularly that of U.S. imperialism, is considerably heightening tension in the world.

In that connection, we made a detailed examination of our respective assessments in the international spheres and that discussion enabled us to observe that there are many points of agreement in our analyses and also, of course, real differences.

Sino-Soviet Relations

Since, as I said, there is no question of avoiding the problems, I will start with the differences.

Everybody knows that our Chinese comrades think that the independence of nations and the sovereignty of their peoples are now jeopardized by what they call "superpower hegemony." In that context they reiterated to us that they described the policy of the socialist countries, especially that of the Soviet Union, as "hegemonistic." To illustrate that, they invoked the problems which exist on China's borders.

For my part I said, on our delegation's behalf -- and this is the feeling of our whole party -- that we greatly regretted the persistence of the dispute between the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries and China, between the CPSU and other communist parties and the CPC. We feel this simply because it is socialist countries and communist parties which are involved on both sides.

We informed our interlocutors, therefore, of our hope to see communist parties act in the same spirit as we have done with our Chinese comrades: looking resolutely to the future; openly discussing problems; and thus progressing, even if it takes a little time, toward the normalization of interstate relations and toward the establishment of healthy relations among communist parties, making it possible for both respect for the independence and dignity of each, and the common struggle for the objectives they share.

Like you, I noted that that was the desire expressed to French journalists on 17 October by the CPC secretary general. I also note that Leonid Brezhnev has just reaffirmed the same wish in Baku, after having done so in Tashkent. We hope that things will progress in that direction.

Many Points of Agreement

All that brings me to the second aspect of our discussions on international problems: our points of agreement, and this is the essential thing. I said that they are numerous and I will stick to two decisive questions on which our two parties expressed similar assessments.

The first is that peace is rightly the main, fundamental aspiration of peoples and that every effort should be made to preserve it and to progress toward disarmament with security for states.

The second is that Comrade Hu Yaobang and I stressed imperialism's aggressiveness and, in particular, condemned the U.S. machinations in the Near East, Central America, southern Africa and Asia.

Merely spelling out those two points of agreement and the prospects which they open up for joint action, clearly shows that normal relations between the French and Chinese Communist Parties work in favor of union and action at the international level for peace, justice, freedom and human progress. That is an excellent thing and is bound to be regarded as such by all.

I now come to the second lesson learned from our trip, which stems from what we have seen since we have been here.

The French and Chinese journalists who followed us in Beijing and in the provinces we have visited over the past week can bear witness to the warmth and kindness with which the Chinese population welcomed our delegation wherever we went. Friendship for France and the French people is obvious among the Chinese people and their leaders -- be it Comrade Hu Yaobang, Comrade Zhao Ziyang or Comrade Deng Xiaoping -- all informed us of their desire to considerably develop relations, trade and cooperation between our two countries. People here expect a great deal from France.

We consider that that fact is a great opportunity for our country. Of course, once we return to Paris we will take what action we can to ensure that that opportunity is taken advantage of, so that the relations between France and China, those two great friendly nations, can be consolidated and developed, especially in the economic and cultural spheres.

This visit has taught us a great deal as French citizens and it has also given us a great deal as French citizens and it has also given us a great deal as French Communists.

Indeed, our visit has given us clear confirmation of the assessment which we made of socialism at our 24th congress. I recall that we stressed on that occasion -- and I quote -- "the contribution of the peoples building socialism, at the same time as the diversity and present limitations of that enterprise."

A Realistic View of Socialism

In a capitalist country like ours it is clear that it is mainly -- you could even say exclusively -- socialism's mistakes which are highlighted. Those mistakes exist. We do not deny them. We try to have a lucid, realistic view of the building of socialism, that great human task, which is not free from problems, trial and error and mistakes which are sometimes tragic.

Of course, if they are not remedied in time, the latter can lead to serious difficulties in the revolutionary party's relations with the people and in the building of socialism itself. Moreover, that is what we have, unfortunately, seen happen in Poland.

But can those difficulties be used as an argument to proclaim socialism's failure? We think that that is absolutely impossible. The results obtained in all spheres by many socialist countries demonstrate this.

Since we are in China, let us see what the position is: Before 1949, before its revolution, China was the symbol of absolute poverty, and the blackest despair for the people with, alongside it, the revolting opulence of a tiny minority. We visited Shanghai. The people who experienced that period told us that they remember the days when thousands of men, women and children died in the street for lack of food or medical care, amid general indifference.

China Is Progressing

China is a developing country; it belongs to that Third World in which hundreds of millions of human being are now suffering from hunger, poverty, chronic diseases, illiteracy, and underdevelopment; that Third World in which there are 1 billion people unemployed; that Third World in which bloody colonialist or neocolonialist dictatorships are massacring, torturing, imprisoning and humiliating people.

However, what have we seen in China? We have seen a country which is still poor in many respects, but which has overcome famine and epidemics, in which supplies of food and commodities are guaranteed and which enables each of its members -- and there are 1 billion of them -- to be fed, clothed, given health care, housing and education.

We have seen a country which is working, which is striving to improve its agriculture, which is being equipped with all kinds of industries -- a country proud of its initial results which is striving to develop responsibility among its peasants and workers for their work.

Finally, we have seen a tranquil country, a country whose leaders stressed to us the importance which they now attach, after stormy years, to the development of socialist democracy and respect for socialist legality by all.

Those same leaders assured us that things had been improving year after year since 1976 and 1978, that China was progressing and that they were thus gradually making progress toward solving the vast economic, social, political and demographic problems which their country is experiencing.

You know that we are not in the habit of believing what we are told, but what we have seen here leads us to believe that assessment. If the tragic mistakes, stressed by our Chinese comrades themselves, are taken into consideration, the progress made can be assessed.

France Will Flourish With a French Brand of Socialism

All that is, of course, bound to make us think, because in our country, in France, the problems are not of the same nature or scale and our economic, scientific, technical and human advantages are much greater.

We do not have 1 billion mouths to feed; ours is a country in which the average standard of living is high by comparison. We do not have an emerging economy, ours is an industrialized country. We did not emerge from fuedalism and colonialism 33 years ago. We have 200 years of democratic traditions.

And yet, there are 2 million unemployed people in our country. There are huge social inequalities there. Factories are being closed and farmers ruined; the opportunities opened up by scientific and technical progress are not exploited. Democracy will stop all too often on the threshold of the enterprises, and knowledge and culture are still the prerogatives of a minority.

Well, that is an example of a crisis in the system. It is the very real crisis of the capitalist system -- a deep-seated, lasting, all-embracing, structural crisis.

Indeed, when you see what is happening here in entirely different conditions, how can you fail to imagine what the socialist transformation could do for France with all its advantages? Let me make myself clear, I am obviously not proposing to use Chinese recipes for French cooking. The PCF is, as I said, proposing to build a society in France designed and realized for the French people by the French people -- a French brand of socialism. In other words, it is proposing to tackle the deep-seated cause of the crisis which our country is experiencing and to provide the appropriate answers. That is the context in which we are placing our battle.

As you can see, we are leaving China with the strengthened conviction that, as was said at our congress, "France will flourish in socialism and that, in return, socialism will flourish in French style." If that was its only achievement -- and I have shown that that is not the case -- this visit would not have been in vain.

Ladies and gentlemen, those are the ideas which I wanted to convey to you. Forgive me for speaking for so long, but you will agree that I had a great deal to tell you. I and my comrades in our delegation are now ready to answer your questions.

SPADOLINI, COLOMBO DISCUSS UPCOMING U.S. TRIP

[Excerpts] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 30 -- Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo will try to patch up trade disagreements with the United States when they go to Washington next week for six-day visit starting November 2.

Reporting their plans for the visit to the cabinet in Rome Friday, Spadolini [and] Colombo labled the sanctions "unilaterally" applied by Washington against the Italian turbine manufactureres, Nuovo Pignone, "unacceptable". A "sturdy partnership" between the two shores of the Atlantic, Spadolini said, "will be all the more effective when Europe's role as an active political subject on the world scene is strengthened."

The world economic crisis, the Italian Government leader went on, "particularly gives the European-American partnership a role of propulsion and co-responsibility".

These were some of the reasons cited to highlight the necessity of "settling the differences and disputes in trade relations to both sides' mutual advantage".

In Washington, Spadolini said he will try to go over in detail "the guidelines for a global strategy" in East-West trade relations, the economic policies of the West's major industrialized nations and North-South relations with the U.S.A. leadership.

Spadolini told the cabinet that his talks with U.S. President Ronald Reagan and other members of the adminstration will deal with the major issues of common interest between Italy and the U.S. moves to revive the detente process and efforts to achieve peaceful settlements of the world's conflict.

He reiterated Italy's commitment to "restoring conditions of peace and stability in the Beirut area" and promoting moves to get the Middle East negotiations process back on its feet. He specifically cited, in this regard, the Arab peace proposals drafted last month in Fes, Morocco, and Reagan's latest Middle East peace proposals.

In his own foreign policy statement, Colombo said the Polish Government's recent step to outlaw the Solidarity independent trade union movement would "certainly not help East-West relations". Colombo stressed the "particularly intense" relations Italy had with West Germany and the moves the two countries have made to reactivate the European unification process.

POLITICAL LEADERS COMMENT ON GONZALEZ VICTORY

AU301445 Rome ANSA in English 0806 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 30 -- Italian political and labor leaders have welcomed to Spanish Socialist Party's stunning electoral victory but not without a touch of apprehension about the winner's proposition to put the Iberian state's membership in NATO to a public referendum.

Premier Giovanni Spadolini wired Spanish Socialist Party leader Felipe Gonzalez to say that the "important and significant electoral victory rewarded his correct political leadership of the party...." The Spanish party was commended for its "coherence" in pursuing "ideals of justice, progress and freedom" and "its assertion and consolidation [of] the democratic course in Spain, a key member of Europe's past and future".

Italian Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi said Gonzalez' victory was "a major assertion of Spanish democracy". The "fraternal" relations linking the Italian and Spanish parties, he added, made the Spanish victory a cause for "particular exultation and delight".

But, speaking for the Christian Democrats, former minister Vito Lattanzio said straightforwardly, "we hope that Felipe Gonzelez backs down on (referendum) plans that risk putting Spain on the edge of Europe and outside the Western alliance".

Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer said it was an important event that there is another West European nation, besides France, governed by a socialist party.

Social Democrat Party Deputy Secretary Carlo Vizzini called the Spanish vote "a great response" to the fears that have erupted for the survival of democracy in the country. "Mediterranean Europe", Vizzini added, "is opting for socialism as a government force and, for us, this is a cause for comfort and hope".

The Socialist victory in Spain was taken by the Italian Liberal Party as "evidence of the Spanish electorate's desire for change within the available democratic alternatives it had".

The "thought that the Spanish government is returning to the hands of the party from which it was taken by threat of fascist arms in 1936" provided an "enormous emotion" for socialist labor leader Giorgio Benvenuto. According to Benvenuto, secretary of the UIL [Italian Union of Labor] labor organization, Gonzalez' win had "opened a concrete prospect of Mediterranean socialism, which is in a position to strengthen the historic tendencies of northern Europe".

'ARAFAT SAYS DIALOGUE WITH ISRAEL POSSIBLE

AU291544 Rome ANSA in English 1537 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome October 29 -- Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasir 'Arafat declared that "Our program calls for the creation of a Palestinian state in every piece of territory Israel withdraws from or is liberated. We therefore favor the creation of a appearing in today's edition of the Rome paper, LA REPUBBLICA. [sentence as received]

Referring to opposition to his policy from within the PLO, 'Arafat recalled, "I was not elected president by 99.99 percent of the votes. I had a majority. There is debate between the majority and the minority. The PLO is a democratic organization".

He went on to describe the Mideast peace plan made public by American President Ronald Reagan as, "positive for the fact that an American president, for the first time, takes a position against Israeli annexation policy and negative because Reagan failed to recognize the PLO and opposed the creation of a Palestinian state".

Following the Palestinian exodus from Beirut, 'Arafat continued, "Our military force is intact. Our political strength is doubled. Arab solidarity has been strengthened and our own experience, also in assessing the role of certain mediators, has grown".

When asked if he would like to send a message to Israel from the pages of the Italian daily, the PLO chief said "I would say that dialogue between us is possible. You and we can work together for peace in Palestine and throughout the Middle East".

In this connection, 'Arafat described as his "many friends in Israel" all those activists in the Peace Now Movement and "all those who are in prison for having defended the need for dialogue to reach a just solution to the problem of Jewish and Palestinian coexistence".

Referring to his talks in Rome last month with head of state Sandro Pertini, Rome Government leaders, and Pope John Paul II, the PLO leader said, "in my encounters with the pope and President Pertini there was an exchange of ideas on the issues of peace in the Mideast.

"I listened to their opinions with interest and respect. This doesn't mean I am in agreement with all they said". The thrust of the Italian side in consultations with 'Arafat was a recommendation to strengthen the political role for his organization and wind down the military side of the PLO.

COURT LENIENT WITH COOPERATIVE TERRORIST

AU281041 Rome ANSA in English 0814 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Genoa, October 28 -- A convicted Red Brigades terrorist found guilty on the charges of participating in, organizing and leading an armed band was given a three-year sentence suspended for ten years [as received] by the Genoa criminal court Wednesday in a decision certain to spark considerable debate among jurists and the general public.

Enrico Fenzi, who was prosecuted as the theoritician behind the Genoa cadre of Italy's largest terrorist organization, benefited from the lenient sentencing allowed by recent legislation aimed at turning terrorist suspects states evidence. The terrorist will stay behind bars, however, awaiting a future trial for other charges pending against him.

Fenzi was first arrested, tried, acquited of terrorist-related charges and released in June 1980. He was taken into custody against in April 1981 in an operation in which Milan police captured one of the key figures in the terrorist organization, Mario Moretti.

In its ruling handed down yesterday, the Genoa court recalled that evidence provided by Fenzi led to the arrest of one of the city's most-wanted terrorist suspects, Francesco lo Bianco. The statement referred to the need to extend "thanks" to those "penitent terrorists" who have contributed to the battle against terrorism and noted that Fenzi, if he were transferred to a medium security prison, "would not live through the night".

In another development, one of the leading defendents in the trial of the Red Brigades' kidnapping and killing of Christian Democrat Party Chairman Aldo Moro in 1978, Valerio Morucci, and six other terrorist suspects disassociated themselves "radically from the present terrorist movement".

A letter containing what the seven described as "our renunciation of the terrorist present" was forwarded to Italian newspapers last night.

NEW CONSTITUTION SUPERSEDES COUNCIL REVOLUTION

LD292020 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] With the revised constitution coming into force at midnight tonight, the Council of the Revolution will simultaneously cease to exist. This afternoon, the council issued a farewell message which states, in part:

Many and painfully disquieting doubts trouble us concerning the future of the Portuguese. There is a growing restoration of old privileges and persistent activity by political and economic pressure groups aimed at restoring the old economic and social order and, therefore, the old political domination over society as a whole.

In the view of the Council of the Revolution there is an ever-widening gap between the constitution's economic and social blueprint and everyday political practice. The latter, it adds, is aimed at the restoration of an outmoded and inadequate economic model which will necessitate the kind of authoritarian and antidemocratic political back-up that is beginning to take shape in the repressive violence to which there has been recourse on occasions.

We have been reading extracts from a communique issued by the Council of the Revolution this afternoon at the end of its last meeting.

State Council Sworn In

LD310014 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2000 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Excerpt] The swearing-in ceremony of the Council of State by President Ramalho Eanes took place about 1 hour ago. The council is a political advisory body to the president of the republic and was created by the revised constitution that came into effect today.

The council is chaired by the head of state and has another 16 members: The president of the assembly of the republic, the president of the constitutional tribunal, the prime minister, the ombudsman, the heads of the Azore and Madeira regional governments, five officials elected by the assembly of the republic and another five chosen by the president of the republic.

BACKGROUND COUNCIL MEMBERS IDENTIFIED

LD31448 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 0815 GMT 31 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Three of the 16 members of the Council of State were not sworn in by the president of the republic on Saturday. They are Ombudsman Pamplona Corte Real, head of the Madeira regional government, Alberto Joao Jardim, both traveling abroad, and the president of the constitutional tribunal. This post is still vacant because the tribunal has not yet been set up.

The swearing-in of the Council of State coincided with the coming into force of the new constitution. The Council of State is a political advisory body to the president of the republic. The council is chaired by the head of state and is made up in addition to five figures chosen by the latter, of the speaker of the assembly of the republic [Oliveira Dias], the prime minister [Pinto Balsemao], the president of the constitutional tribunal, the ombudsman [Pamplona Corte Real], the head of the regional governments of Azores and Madeira [Mota Amaral and Alberto Joao Jardim, respectively], and five party figures elected by the assembly of the republic.

While there were not surprises regarding those elected by parliament, as their names are already known, the same cannot be said about those chosen by the president of the republic. Their names were disclosed a few hours before Saturday's swearing-in ceremony held in Belem Palace.

The major surprise is engineer Nobre da Costa, who had never been tipped as one of General Eanes' nominees. The remaining four figures chosen by the head of state are Lt Col Melo Antunes, Professor Henrique de Barros, Dr Gigueiredo Dias and Dr Miguel Galvao Teles.

Alredo Nobre da Costa, aged 59, is regarded as a technocrat, and is the grandson of an Indian Brahmin and a Danish woman. He was secretary of state for heavy industry in the sixth provisional government, minister of industry and technology in the first constitutional government of Mario Soares, and prime minister of the third constitutional government annulled by parliament on 14 September 1978.

Lt Col Melo Antunes, on the reserve list at his own request since last week, is 49. He was minister without portfolio in the second and third provisional governments and minister of foreign affairs in the fourth and sixth provisional governments. He was a member of the Armed Forces Movement and of the Council of the Revolution, as well as chariman of the constitutional committee. He is regarded as a very close friend of Gen Rammalho Eanes and is a candidate to a post in UNESCO. He also has connections with Portuguese-speaking African countries.

Professor Henrique de Barros, aged 78, was minister of state in the first constitutional government, president of the Constituent Assembly, chairman of the National Planning Council and member of the political commission of the committee of support for President Eanes' reelection. He is a prestigious political figure in the country and resigned from the Socialist Party in October last year.

Dr Figueiredo Dias was member of the constitutional committee since January 1979 by choice of the president of the republic and is currently a lecturer at Coimbra University.

Dr Miguel Galvao Teles, aged 42, is a lawyer and expert in constitutional law, as well as legal adviser to the president of the republic and a lecturer at the faculty of law of Lisbon University, where he worked at one stage as assistant lecturer to Professor Marcelo Caetano.

The remaining 10 members of the Council of State -- sworn in by the president of the republic and elected by parliament -- are Professor Mota Pinto and Dr Nuno Ridrigues dos Santos, representing the Social Democratic Party, Mario Soares of the Socialist Party, Professor Freitas do Amral of the Social Democratic Center Party, and Alvaro Cunhal representing the Portuguese Communist Party. By virtue of their office, the Speaker of the Assembly of the Republic Oliveira Dias, Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao, and the Head of the Azores Regional Government Mota Amaral, were also sworn in as members of the Council of State.

U.S. CONGRATULATIONS ON SOCIALIST VICTORY

LD291712 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] The latest foreign reaction to the Socialist victory in yesterday's elections in Spain comes from the United States where the State Department has congratulated Felipe Gonzalez and his party on the victory. A spokesman for the State Department said that the Spanish people can feel proud of the working of its democratic institutions. The U.S. administration in its official statement reaffirms its firm support for the democratic process in Spain and hopes to work closely with the next Spanish Government.

Secretary General of the Italian Communist Party Enrico Berlinguer has assessed the Socialist victory not only as an event of great importance for Spain but also for the cause of a Europe more united in democracy.

CABINET MEETS, EVALUATES ELECTION RESULTS

LD292136 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] The Council of Ministers met this afternoon at the Moncloa Palace. The cabinet, headed by Calvo-Sotelo, examined the election results. Of all the ministers, only one -- Pio Cabanillas, currently minister of justice -- will be a deputy in the next legislature. None of the others, not even the prime minister, has won a seat.

Antonio Casado reports from the Moncloa Palace: Today's meeting of the acting government lasted nearly 2 hours. It began at 1700 and ended around 1845. The Secretariat of State for Information announced that the press conference which usually follows cabinet meetings will not be held on this occasion. Instead, journalists were handed a note which reads as follows:

The Council of Ministers met today in extroardinary session at the Moncloa Palace to evaluate the results of yesterday's general election and to make some additional decisions to implement the aid measures adopted in connection with flooding in the east of the country.

EFE SPECULATES ON GONZALEZ CABINET APPOINTMENTS

[By Carmen Armesto]

[Text] Madrid, 29 Oct (EFE) -- A new page has been turned in political circles, while the old guard politicians digest their electoral defeat in the 28 October voting. And the page regarding the new men who will play a leading role in the country's politics for the next 4 years remains to be written.

They are "the president's men." Their names mean nothing yet to the electorate, save for the fact that they were part of the team that collaborated with Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez in achieving his party's spectacular conquest of power in the latest elections.

They are a group of over 12 men with a median age that does not exceed 45 years, who began their career as Socialists during the 60's and 70's while their party was underground and ran into difficulties with the authoritarian Franco regime, going into exile in many cases.

The list of likely candidates for the ministries and top posts in the new administration starts, according to observers, with Alfonso Guerra, 42, deputy secretary general of the party, who is a technical engineer and holds a degree in philosophy and letters.

Guerra is perhaps the most widely known socialist figure because of his vigorous and often ironic dialectics and also because he was spokesman for the Socialist parliamentary bloc in past legislatures. He led his party's election campaign and looms as vice president of the new government.

Jose Carvajal, who belongs to the Socialist old guard, is the strongest candidate for president of the Senate. Like Gregorio Peces-Barba, who is a professor at the University of Madrid, Carvajal may become the new president of the Congress of Deputies.

Enrique Tierno Galvan, the incumbent Madrid mayor, has indicated that he does not intend to quit his current post to take up new duties in Felipe Gonzalez' administration.

The Socialist reserves include other names that are still unknown to most Spaniards. Most of them entered politics through their careers as economists, technicians and professionals in various fields.

Javier Solana, a physicist, studied in the United States and has been a member of the Socialist executive board since the last party congress, like Guillermo Galeote, a physician, who heads the party's National Image Department.

Jose Maria Benegas was born in Caracas, (?Venezuela), while his parents were in exile following the Spanish civil war. He was elected vice president of the International Socialist Youth and is a member of the party's executive board.

The list of new men on the Socialist board includes such outstanding economists as Enrique Baron, Carlos Solchaga, Joaquin Leguina, Miguel Boyer and Ernest Lluch.

Another man who in all likelihood will be in the next government is Francisco Fernandez Ordonez, who was a minister during the previous centrist government.

Ordonez was finance and justice minister when his Social Democratic Group was part of the centrist democratic coalition but a few months ago decided to bolt the government party and join the Socialist Party. He has become known during his political career as the father of the "fiscal law" and the "divorce law," which moved ahead during his tenure as finance and justice minister.

FELIPE GONZALEZ SAYS U.S. TREATY TO BE STUDIED

PA311642 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1619 GMT 31 Oct 82

[Text] Madrid, 31 Oct (EFE) -- Felipe Gonzalez, Spanish Socialist leader and the country's president-elect, has granted a long interview to the CAMBIO 16 magazine. He said that "he will not make the mistake of underestimating the Latin American countries as a whole. Instead, he will advocate close relations with those countries."

He also said that, given that there will now be a Socialist government in Spain, "all responsible Latin American politicians, whether dictators or not, must know that we will always promote a policy ensuring democratic pluralism and the defense of human rights." According to the Socialist leader, neither the French community of nations nor the British Commonwealth should fall into the trap of underestimating the Hispanic community as a whole.

Gonzalez said: "Everyone knows that I do not like dictatorships. However, I am not going to break diplomatic relations with any Latin American government." Gonzalez also discussed the viability of the current cooperation treaty with the United States and made specific reference to Spain's integration into the NATO military alliance.

He said that technically speaking, the current treaty with the United States appears to be better than its predecessor. He added: "However, there might be points that would be unacceptable to us and that would have to be studied very, very carefully." He said the treaty will be studied to see if its philosophy establishes that bilateral relations are linked to the need to join NATO.

Based on that premise, he placed the greatest emphasis on the fact that it is up to the Spanish Parliament to ratify or reject international treaties. He said: "There can be no commitment unless there is a referendum. The people have the opportunity to choose for themselves, and the referendum on joining NATO is an example of this."

Another key point broached by the future president was in answer to the specific question as to whether Spain will establish diplomatic relations with Israel during the Socialist administration. Gonzalez said: "I believe that historical trends will allow us to reestablish relations with Israel at the same time that a solution is found for the Palestinian people. Perhaps when we reestablish relations, it will be with someone other than current Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin."

ELECTION RESULTS SEEN 'VICTORY FOR DEMOCRACY'

[Excerpts] Madrid, 29 Oct (EFE) -- Without exception, leaders of the principal Spanish political parties termed the results of legislative elections which gave the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, PSOE, an overwhelming majority "a great victory for democracy."

Landelino Lavilla, president of the Union of the Democratic Center Party, UCD, expressed his satisfaction because the elections have shown that democracy has become stronger. The UCD had previously been the government party and was the biggest loser during the elections; the party only won 13 seats in congress in comparison to 168 in 1979. In addition, he explained that the UCD was defeated because that is the price it has to pay for the prominent historical role the party has played." He also said that the PSOE success was due to the Spanish political center's shift to the right. He emphasized that the more a political opponent moves to the right (?as the Socialist Party did), the better its chances of winning.

Communist leacer Santiago Carrillo, whose party also suffered a defeat in the elections, going from 23 seats in 1979 to only 5, stressed that the PSOE-AP [Popular Alliance] bipolarization produced in Spain "is very dangerous. The PSOE will have a government, but it will not have the power." Former Spanish President Adolfo Suarez said that "the Spanish people have voted freely" and he is personally satisfied with the efforts made because the election results "are good for democracy." His recently created party, the Democratic and Social Center, CDS, participated in the elections for the first time and won two seats.

In addition to the political parties, labor unions, businessmen and the banking sector termed the participation in these elections (75.67 percent of the electorate) as positive for democracy. The two principal unions in the country -- the Communist-Oriented Workers' Commissions, CCOO, and the Socialist General Union of Workers, UGT -- hailed the PSOE victory as "a victory for the Spanish people."

FINLAND

POLISH TRIP SPARKS CRITIQUE ON POLICY COORDINATION

PM291509 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 26 Oct 82 p 2

[Jan-Magnus Jansson Editorial: "Not Enough Coordination"]

[Text] Inadequate coordination in Finnish foreign policy has become so noticeable that it has begun to cause irritation and amusement. It could also cause nostalgic sentiment of "things weren't like this before." In general it is true that the stricter regime under President Kekkonen prevented escapes from the fold. But we must be careful about idealizing the past. Blunders happened then too. The best-known case was that of Nordek [projected Nordic economic community] when a lack of cooperation between the leading personalities -- whether it was due to clumsiness or, as has been claimed, to a conscious attempt to set a trap -- led to Finland's reputation being jeopardized over an issue much more important than an invitation to a controsversial potentate or a visit to a country under martial law.

Nevertheless it is clear there should be a foreign policy framework within which actual steps are taken. It is possible to imagine that a visit by the Eduskunta speaker in his capacity as chairman of the IPU would not always lie outside this framework. Official Finland has stressed that events in Poland are the country's own internal affair. Unlike the case of the PLO, Poland is a state with which we maintain normal diplomatic ties. Nor would it be wrong to assert that the major section of Finnish public opinion sees General Jaruzelski mostly as a victim of circumstance. However, the fact remains that Virolainen's visit took place at a point in time when repression in Poland had reached what so far is its zenith.

The Eduskunta speaker should have been aware of all these circumstances and therefore was responsible for making his decision. In his actions the speaker is not the subordinate of the executive power, even though we should expect comments from government circles. There is, therefore, no reason for either the president of the republic or the government to assume a responsibility which is not theirs. However, there is every reason to express a wish for better coordination.

During the discussion it has been claimed that Virolainen's actions are a sign of his naivety in foreign policy. Perhaps, but it is just as possible that he was aware that the criticism he ran the risk of incurring is balanced by the gains made both inside and outside the country in circles which have not been particularly fond of him in the past.

The Eduskunta as such is on the sideline of events. It is represented chiefly by its foreign affairs committee and also has, apart from the powers which the constitution grants it directly, the task of shaping public opinion on foreign policy questions. It would be an important step if it were to put a greater effort into this task, which it has not carried out effectively for a long time. The fact that as long as Jowannes Virolainen is speaker, he will insist on also leaving his stamp on foreign policy which will also have an indirect effect on the Eduskunta's position on various issues.

President Koivisto considered the matter to be important enough to raise it at his press conference in Reykjavik, where he avoided all the pitfalls involved. On the subject of Virolainen's dual role as Eduskunta speaker and IPU chairman, he said that these could lead to varying expectations and that there was good reason to look "seriously" at the conflicts to which this could lead. This can be read as a minor criticism, but it can also be read as an objective statement that such conflicts could arise in the future too. The same statement could be made of Prime Minister Sorsa's involvement in a high-ranking post in the Socialist International.

Taking a realistic view of the matter, it is hardly likely that such role conflicts can be avoided, but what we can demand are firm definitions of what our foreign policy calls for and a system of consultations between the leading decision-makers which at least minimizes the risk of difficulties.

The most important thing to emerge from Koivisto's statements in Reykjavik was to be found in his firm refusal to adopt an authoritarian approach to the foreign policy debate. It is reasonable to assume it is possible to carry on a civilized debate without it being necessary to reach conclusions about it having something to do with democracy's ability to function, the president said. This is a theme which he has raised in the past in his speech at the Eduskunta jubilee, for example, and it obviously shows a deep conviction of his. Here he should have the support of all those who do not believe that democracy must function only within certain circumscribed areas.

However, debate is one thing, action another. The former does not need to stick strictly to our foreign policy line, but the latter should. When Koivisto took office some observers, chiefly foreign ones, even prophesied that he would soon be forced against his will to apply the tighter grip which was characteristic of his predecessor. It is possible that Koivisto will have to become more active in drawing up the guidelines. However, this should not be allowed to happen at the expense of his ability to wait patiently for public opinion to clarify and for a consensus to be formed -- an ability which up to now has been one of his great strengths.

VIROLAINEN VISIT: SOVIET VISAS DENIED NEWSMEN

NC291621 Paris AFP in English 1613 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] Helsinki, Oct 29 (AFP) -- The Soviet Union has refused visas to Finnish journalists due to accompany Speaker of Parliament Johannes Virolainen to the Soviet Union on Sunday.

A delegation led by Mr. Virolainen, a former prime minister and foreign minister, is to pay an official visit at the invitation of the Supreme Soviet.

Half a dozen reporters were to accompany the parliamentary delegation on the week-long trip, but last night the Soviet Embassy said that the reporters had not been granted a visa.

According to Mr Virolainen, the explanation given was that journalists could not be accommodated in Moscow because of the anniversary celebrations of the revolution.

NORWAY

MISSILE DEPLOYMENT: NATO MUST STAND FIRM ON PLAN

PM291253 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 27 Oct 82 p 3

[Norwegian Prime Minister Kare Willoch interview with Thorleif Andreassen: "Missile Affair Criticism of Us Unfounded"]

[Text] "There is no foundation for criticism of the government's handling of the missile affair," Prime Minister Kare Willoch told AFTENPOSTEN.

According to NRK [Norwegian broadcasting authority], leading circles at NATO headquarters in Brussels take the view that Norway has handled the affair poorly. The allocation of funds for installation work in connection with the possible deployment of new nuclear missiles should not have been made public. The Dagsnytt radio program claimed that this is the view taken at NATO headquarters and that the Norwegian missile conflict has created concern there.

"We have not received any information to indicate that the NRK claims are correct. However, the Labor Party has criticized the way the government has handled the question. This criticism seems unreasonable. When the government puts forward proposals for joint finances for NATO projects it would be impossible to avoid telling the Storting what the money is to be used for," Kare Willoch said, adding: "Nor were we able to conceal the fact that Norway had committed itself to involvement in this before we assumed government responsibility."

[Question] But the government is now going further than was the practice in the past with the publishing of information of such issues?

[Answer] I do not want to comment on former practice here. However, in this instance we would have failed in our duty to inform the Storting if we had not presented it with the facts. The matter was mentioned as early as 1979, when the NATO ministers' meeting decided that the installation work would be financed jointly. It is a misunderstanding to claim it is a separate item in the government's proposed defense budget. There is a sum of 3 million kroner which must be deducted from the sum Norway will receive from NATO. This is part of the system of two-way payments which all in all means that Norway receives funds. What we are asking the Storting to vote for is merely approval that payments to Norway from NATO will total 328 million kroner.

[Question] But would the government not have been wiser to have covered itself by talking to the Labor Party first?

[Answer] In our opinion on this point the defense budget is merely a cautious successor to past decisions by the NATO Council of Ministers which have been supported by the three most recent Norwegian governments. The proposal is in full agreement with the Storting's treatment of the same matter in June this year. Any reasonable view would indicate that this would be "cover" enough.

[Question] Does NATO fear the contagious effect of the Norwegian missile controversy?

[Answer] Yes, this is one of the most dangerous aspects of the new signals from the Labor Party. Look at Denmark. Anker Jorgensen is already going against what he stood for when he was prime minister. Such stances could give the Soviet Union the impression that they do not need to make any concessions in order to escape the new nuclear missiles in the West, because these missiles will not be deployed. The result could be that the disarmament negotiations could be unsuccessful and that the Soviet Union will acquire a catastrophic superiority. This is why the NATO nations must stand firm on the plan they adopted in 1979.

STORTING MISSILE DEBATE: DUAL DECISION, FUNDS

[Morten Malmo and Einar Solvoll report: "Labor Party: No Money for Missiles at Present"]

[Text] "The Labor Party view is that we should not at present approve the allocation of any earmarked funds for preparations for missile installations under the terms of the NATO dual decision," Labor Party parliamentary leader Gro Harlem Brundtland told the Socialist Left Party's Stein Ornhoi who in the debate on the king's speech at the opening of the Storting asked for a clear answer about how the Labor Party will vote in the Storting later this fall when the missile issue comes up for discussion.

Conservative Party parliamentary leader Jo Benkow said that if Norway became the first nation in NATO to draw back from accepting its share of the cost of measures on which the alliance is agreed this would do irreparable damage to Norway and to the NATO solidarity on which Norway is so dependent. Benkow warned against losing the trump card NATO has vis-a-vis the Soviet Union to persuade this superpower to reduce its nuclear arsenal directed against Western Europe.

Christian People's Party parliamentary leader Kjell Magne Bondevik also stressed that no changes should be made to the strategy drawn up to force the Soviet Union to reduce the numbers of its nuclear missiles. The ultimate goal must be the dismantling and removal of all nuclear arms and the idea behind the "dual decision" was that NATO should be able to halt the deployment of Soviet missiles from a strong negotiating position.

Center Party parliamentary leader Johan J. Jakobsen pointed out that the Labor Party's leaders are continuing to give assurances that the dual decision is unchanged and that Norway will take part in financing the preparations in line with the commitments Norway made under a labor government. However, he warned against trying to cover up real political disagreement.

Progressive Party leader Carl I. Hagen wanted to provoke an actual vote on the missile question during the debate on the king's speech, and has put forward a "concrete proposal" which involves Storting support for following up the dual decision with the actual allocation of funds. It is probable that the Storting president will reject such a vote this evening, by pointing out that the question is at present being discussed by the Storting Defense Committee as a budget issue.

The Socialist Left Party's Kjellborg Lunde said that the peace movement is now becoming so strong that it is a real threat to the military power structure and the political "men of force" who still believe that conflicts can be resolved through the use of force. The Liberal Party's Mons Espelid said that 3 years have passed since NATO adopted the dual decisions. Since then disarmament talks have only been going on for 3 months. This is not in agreement with the conditions of the so-called "dual condition," Espelid said, recommending that the debate on a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area be resumed instead.

BRUNDTLAND'S SPEECH ON MISSILE FUNDS CENSURED

[Editorial: "Brundtland's Insinuations"]

[Text] Are the government and the Conservative Party, of all people, now to be blamed because the broad national agreement on foreign and security policy appears to be developing serious cracks? Many people probably could not believe their ears when Labor Party Chairman and parliamentary leader Gro Harlem Brundtland insinuated this in her main speech in the debate on the king's speech delivered at the opening of the Storting. After stressing the value of national unity and broad support for our line must not be underestimated, Harlem Brundtland added:

Long-lasting damage could be done if a well-prepared Norwegian line and our feeling of unity on vital issues are weakened. Here, even more than in other fields, the government's own profile and actions set the tone and are by far the most crucial. Many people today are expressing concern over some of our experiences....

This boundless impudence comes from the leader of the party which is fully intent on breaking our commitments to NATO on the frequently discussed missile question. If the Labor Party were to vote against the allocation of funds for the preparations which are a result of the 1979 NATO dual decision, we would see the most serious split on a vital security issue since World War II. Despite constant efforts made by the governing party to achieve the broadest agreement possible on the issue, both former Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland and former Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund have made it clear that in a vote on the issue this fall, the Labor Party would oppose earmarked allocations for the preparation of missile installations in connection with the dual decision.

The scope and importance of this issue is most clearly shown by the fact that government circles in Washington, the capital of our most important ally, simply refuse to believe that the Labor Party will actually do what Gro Harlem Brundtland and others have said. They naturally assume that Norway will adhere firmly to the negotiating strategy and the commitments to which the Nordli and Harlem Brundtland governments were party in the past.

During the debate on the king's speech yesterday, Prime Minister Kare Willoch declared that on this issue the government has only loyally followed the commitments made by the two previous governments on Norway's behalf, with the broad support of the Storting. It goes without saying that the government in power does not want to be party to any contravention of any agreement with the Alliance on which Norway, perhaps more than any other country, is dependent.

In the work to insure negotiations on arms control and disarmament lead to positive results, we have really only one way of applying pressure to reestablish equilibrium -- give the Soviet Union a choice between reducing its own superior nuclear forces or accepting the deployment of new nuclear arms in the West. The objective is an agreement which reduces Soviet forces and in doing so makes the deployment of new missiles in the West superfluous.

PALME: NEUTRALITY DEFENDS INDEPENDENCE, PEACE

LD291422 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Report on speech of Olof Palme, Swedish Prime Minister, by (Bertil Jacobsson), date and place not specified]

[Text] The question of peace and neutrality was taken up by Olof Palme today when he addressed the teachers' union congress. Olof Palme again wanted to make it clear Sweden will use all means to repulse violations of Swedish territory, but he also wanted to make clear the Swedish government's view of neutrality.

[Begin recording] In the first place neutrality is not a military concept even though it is defended by a reasonable defense force. Neutrality is a question of confidence and a consistent policy. (?I want) to make it clear that Sweden will remain neutral. We are not going to create fears or hopes in anyone, that we shall deviate from neutrality, not even under strong external pressure. [End recording]

It is for this reason we must create confidence in regards to foreign countries, Palme said, and also pointed out that concerted effort for peace is another way of maintaining confidence in Swedish neutrality. Palme thought that we must show we are prepared to defend our independence and that we must also put up a show of force for peace.

[Begin recording] Neutrality does not consist in our building a fortress, it consists of our building up friendship by working for peace, and this must be a fundamental direction in our foreign policy. [Words indistinct], we are a small country, but we have a duty to take part in the work for peace according to our ability, whether the work concerns disarmament, aid to poor countries or actions to preserve peace anywhere in the world. [End recording]

NAVY OVERTIME CEILING CURTAILS NEW SUB SEARCH

LD291308 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] The Navy has found new signs indicating the presence of submarines in the southern archipelago. However, this discovery comes at an unfortunate time. The Navy has already used up too much overtime, they must now curtail such searches despite the latest indication. Correspondent (Per Holmgren) reports: During the night between Wednesday and Thursday, the Navy found new signs indicating the presence of one or more submarines either in or outside Harsfjarden. Unconfirmed reports say that one of the Navy's marking buoys, which show the location of submarine nets at the northern barrier between Mysingen and Harsfjarden had shifted. Thus, it may have been caused by a submarine which wanted to get through the net -- either to get out of or into Harsfjarden.

This new submarine trace comes precisely when the Navy is reducing its search for such submarines. According to Navy sources, the search for the submarine will cease after 1630 hours [local time] today. Why? Olof (Forssberg), head of the legal department of the defense staff, refers to the rules concerning overtime. It is probably due to the fact, (Forssberg) says, that the Navy has now quite simply hit the overtime ceiling and cannot therefore impose any more overtime on its personnel. Other than this comment, not much information is forthcoming from military quarters. In fact, the search leadership at the naval base in Musko has stated that we are working all the time with an opponent who has all the answers while we ourselves are running around blindfolded.

DEFENSE STAFF REPORT: GAPS IN SUB HUNT STRATEGY

[Olle Ekstrom Dispatch: "Swedish Report: Submarines Already Gone by 7 October"]

[Text] Stockholm -- Despite the use of 35 depth charges and 4 loaded mines against the suspected submarines in and around Harsfjarden in Stockholm's southern archipelago, the intruders succeeded in escaping by 7 October at the latest, 1 week after the first submarine alarm. This emerges from a report which the Swedish Defense Staff will publish shortly. The report gives a detailed account the submarine hunt in the waters in question, including the dropping of depth charges and the detonation of mines. The report will be used in training for future hunts, which Navy chief Per Rudberg would happen again quite soon, according to a statement in Sunday's [24 October] SVENSKA DAGBLADET.

The Defense Staff confirms that three mines were used 7 October. The first was probably triggered by mistake when the mine lines were activated. The fourth mine was detonated Monday 11 October. According to the Defense Staff, the submarine or submarines in Harsfjarden were able to slip out through the northern barrier because during the first few days the barrier was not as impenetrable as it was described in the mass media. For example, because of a shortage of suitable technical equipment, by slowly creeping along the bottom the foreign submarines were able to avoid detection by the passive hydrophones, which cannot search for targets. Only when the helicopters with their active hydrophones established contact again in the early hours of Friday, 8 October, was it possible to drop a carpet of depth charges in the Mysingen channel. In a gap between helicopter patrols, the defense forces lost contact with the submarine and it left Mysingen either directly, or later, at the time of the mine detonation 11 October.

Now a detailed technical investigation will be made of the electronic equipment which detonated the mine. If the magnetic coils reacted to something other than a submarine or ship, they will be adjusted immediately. It has proved impossible to verify theories that the submarine was able to slip out after firing a torpedo, for example. The search of the seabed in Harsfjarden and the Mysingen channel is continuing, but by Monday [25 October] had still not come up with anything.

ALITHIA OUTLINES PROBLEMS WITH KIPRIANOU USSR TRIP

NC311015 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 31 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] The touristic leg of the Kiprianou visit to the Soviet Union ends today (the touristic leg has been both overtly and covertly longer than the political leg of the visit) and it is expected that the Cypriot delegation will try through messages to Moscow to save face through the release of a communique -- if one is finally released -- more presentable than the one which the Soviet side insisted should be drafted during its long deliberations. The deliberations were (just like the touristic leg of the visit) longer than the actually useful time that was devoted to talks....

Diplomatic circles in Nicosia yesterday pointed out that Brezhnev has refrained in every way from offending Turkey as the power of invasion and occupation, and Turkish contentment has been expressed in a statement by Denktas.

On the other hand, the Soviet president declined to reciprocate the call for "more active support" or to agree in any way with the Athens line for repositioning [of the Cyprus problem]. This line demands the withdrawal of the occupation army, its replacement by a peace force and the facing of the problem not as...an "imperialist conspiracy" but as a question of Turkish invasion and occupation, which is really the case.

According to the same diplomatic circles, the Moscow ice will not thaw and the Cypriot delegation will arrive at Larnaca Airport in a cold sweat like "people who have come in from the cold."

In the meantime, members of the AKEL Leadership have begun talking during their confidential contacts about Kiprianou's "goofing".

According to the AKEL leaders, in his speech Kiprianou should not have raised the question of a "more active role" by the Soviet Union. Such a reference implies an indirect admission that Moscow's current role (a role which AKEL is concealing with difficulty) is not actually active. This contradiction at the expense of Moscow has been pointed out by foreign news agencies.

A second element which the AKEL leadership also considers "goofing by Kiprianou" is his reference to positions that were reminiscent of Papandreou's statements rather than of the minimum program line.

Again according to the same AKEL leaders, who are closely connected with the Soviet Embassy, Kiprianou's aforesaid "misconduct" was because he felt he had to impress both Nicosia and Athens, without taking into account the exploitation of the question by the Western news agencies (something that has already happened) and without consideration of the contradictions in which he was going to get involved.

In their confidential appraisals, AKEL circles have criticized Kriprianou for insisting on issuing a joint communique for his personal prestige, following the downgrading of the visit, without taking into account that the communique might be more degrading.

DIPLOMATIC, UN SOURCES SEE 1983 AS CRUCIAL

NC310834 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 31 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] According to forecasts by diplomatic and UN sources, 1983 will probably be the most crucial year in the course of the Cyprus problem.

That 1983 will be a crucial year for the Cyprus problem, and probably for the Aegean as well, is one of the facts that was noted during the recent talks Cypriot political parties held with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou and President Karamanlis. Specifically, fears are already being expressed that the intercommunal talks will collapse during 1983 if no unexpected development takes place.

If the intercommunal talks are suspended, according to our information, one should not rule out Mr Gobbi's resignation from the post of the UN secretary general's envoy in Cyprus. The collapse of the intercommunal talks may possibly lead to a new crisis that would result in tension in the island.

The Turkish side is already preparing to face such an eventuality through the creation of new faits accomplis, as Democratic Rally chairman Glavkos Kliridhis disclosed in his address to the 22 October rally.

The eventuality of a new crisis is, according to our information, one of the questions that Turkish Cypriot "prime minister' Cagatay discussed with Turkish leaders during his recent visit to Ankara.

Within this framework, the Turkish Cypriot leadership has been recently intensifying its efforts to secure more concrete support from the Islamic states. A first concrete evidence of such support is, according to the Turkish Cypriot press, the establishment of the Islamic Bank with Saudi, Pakistani and Egyptian capital.

U.S. Initiative Reported

NC300926 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 30 Oct 82 p 1

[Dispatch from permanent Athens correspondent Mimis S. Konstandinidhis]

[Text] Athens, 29 Oct -- I have been authoritatively informed by foreign diplomatic sources in Athens that an American initiative on the Cyprus problem is in full progress. The EEC members also know about this U.S. initiative, and it is considered certain that it constitutes part of a general effort by the West to resolve the Cyprus problem in parallel with the Middle East problem. The same sources specifically stressed that U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz has briefed Greek Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos and Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen on the U.S. initiative. It was expected that during their recent New York meeting, Mr Shultz was going to brief Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko as well.

The same sources concluded by saying: This American initiative must be considered the most important one the United States has undertaken since 1974. It aims at simultaneously resolving all the burning questions that entail great dangers to the region of the Middle East and that are causing unrest within the southeastern wing of NATO.

HOUSE LEADER LADHAS RETURNS FROM PARIS 28 OCT

NC291236 Nicosia CYPRUS WEEKLY in English 29 Oct 82 p 28

[Text] The President of the House of Representatives Yeoryios Ladhas returned home yesterday from a visit to Paris at the head of parliamentary delegation. His plane was delayed and did not land at Larnaca until after the departure of President Kiprianou for Moscow. As a result the acting president of the house, Communist Party Chief Ezekias Papaioannou found himself acting briefly, unofficially, as acting president of the republic as well. Ladhas took over the acting role upon his return and Papaioannou returned to acting in the house.

DAILY SAYS U.S. 'SPREADING RUMORS' ON BASES

NC312234 Athens KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 31 Oct 82 p 4

[By Kostas Angelopoulos]

[Excerpts] The first phase of the negotiations on the U.S. bases in Greece begins tomorrow at the Foreign Ministry. Effective tomorrow, Deputy Foreign Minister Yiannis Kapsis and the "special negotiator" Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew will alone, or practically alone, begin to discuss the political prerequisites for the two governments to proceed to sign an agreement on the U.S. bases. The texts of the previous agreements, as far as the Greek Government is concerned, do not exist. The dialogue is thus being held with the goal of formulating an agreement that will not resemble the 1953 "arrangements" -- arrangements that allowed the United States for 30 years to use its bases more or less however the U.S. Pentagon wanted and according to how the State Department perceived U.S. relations with its satellite countries.

While the negotiations begin with the Greek side well prepared -- with proposals that needed many months to be outlined -- in Athens some have undertaken to spread rumors that would establish a "difficult atmosphere" for the Greek delegation and would create inactivity and tension in its flanks.

The Americans are spreading rumors from many "channels" and in every way that Washington supposedly "does not consider its bases in Greece very important, that it has alternative solutions and that, as a last resort, if it is pressured much it will close them and transfer them elsewhere .... The Americans also do not fail to circulate other "frightening" rumors in their press, such as the current report by Jack Anderson on the "three new air bases" that the United States will establish in friendly Turkey....

On the other hand, PASOK's rightwing political rivals are playing the other other game in Greece; saying that "the negotiations have substantively ended, the negotiations are being held for the eyes of the world, the PASOK government has given in to the U.S. pressures an that the agreement will be worse than the old New Democracy had tried to sign!

Of course, the government knows very well how important the bases in Greece are to the United States. The leadership of our country's armed forces also knows that very well. Athens knows well how it is easy to say something and how difficult it is to realize the "threat" ("if you ask much of me, I take the bases and go"). This is the reason why, despite all the "rumors," the government steadily proceeded in outlining proposals which, in addition to settling an explicit time limit on the agreement, also aim at providing guarantees for national security and sound economic exchanges.

How long will the first phase of the negotiations that begin tomorrow with Mr Kapais' and Mr Bartholomew's face-to-face meeting last? The time will be determined in their first meetings. It is not expected, however, to last more than 3 or 4 months. The Greek Government does not want the negotiations to "drag" in any way. Any "slackening" will be to the benefit of the United States. This is why the Greek side insisted on outlining texts during the negotiations and refused the U.S. proposal for oral talks during the first phase, which would not have given the talks a quick pace. Things for Mr Papandreou, however, are clear; he is not prepared, as he has publicly declared, to proceed with unilateral actions. If the United States, however, refuses to provide Greece with the guarantees that it is asking for its many levels of national security and for exercising its independent foreign policy, then the decision for the withdrawal of the bases within a specific time limit would not at all be illogical.

'SETTING TERMS' FOR U.S. BASES AGREEMENT

NC291523 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 29 Oct 82 pp 1, 13

[By K. Angelopoulos]

[Excerpt] The Greek Government is not inclined to proceed with the signing of an agreement on the U.S. bases if the Americans do not accept a series of terms which Deputy Foreign Minister Kapsis will communicate in writing to "special negotiator" Bartholomew on Monday, the day of the opening of the Greek-U.S. negotiations on the political level.

According to authoritative reports, if the United States rejects the spectrum of Greek proposals in connection with the "political framework," Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou will make clear that the bases may be removed within a year's time.

For the Greek Government, a prerequisite for the conclusion of an agreement is the acceptance of the following terms:

1. The fixing of a timetable over 4 years with the possibility of renewal or annulment every year, and for a total period of 8 years after which the agreement will cease to be in force.

2. Full control, on various levels, over the operation of the bases by a committee which will belong to a special service to be established in Athens for this purpose.

3. The ruling out of installing any type of nuclear weapon on the bases.

4. In no case should the bases operate in a way that would affect our country's foreign policy.

5. Ensuring an exceptionally high monetary compensation in the form of grants (payments of a lump sum, military materiel, loans, writing off debts and so forth) on a yearly basis.

Last Wednesday, the delegations of the two countries met for the first time at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and discussed procedural questions.

It must be noted that, even if an agreement is finally signed between Greece and the United States, the Greek Government is resolved to proceed with the closure of one of the four bases (at Ellinikon, Ne Makri, Gournai or Soudha) for reasons of national security.

Operations will cease at that base although some of them will be transferred to one of the other three bases in a way and at a time to be defined in the course of the negotiations.

Government Denies Reports

NC301613 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 30 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] With regard to yesterday's ELEVTHEROTIPIA report on the Greek-U.S. talks, the government spokesman describes the published report as "conjectures and an analysis by the paper's editor."

The government spokesman added that the same applies to all reports published on the issue lately, and stressed: "We have not submitted terms and therefore in practice the talks have not yet begun. The terms that the government will lay down cannot be known in advance either to the United States or to the press."

POLITICAL INCIDENT REPORTED AMONG ARMY CADETS

[By M. Kanimas]

[Text] The entire fourth year class at the Army Cadet Officers School is threatening to resign. The cadets wish in this way to demonstrate their indignation over their commander's decision to commit before the disciplinary board next month their leader, who is also the leader of all the students, together with eight sergeants major of the same class, on the charge of ill-treating one of their colleagues who belongs to the first year class. Authoritative sources said yesterday that it is likely the cadet officers will carry out their threat.

The controversial incident for which the fourth year cadets are blamed took place 20 days ago. The "class" leader, who is the son of an Army colonel, had an argument with a first-year student who admitted that he belongs to the KKE. According to some reports, letters with KKE propaganda material were found in the possession of the first-year student.

During the "discussion" that followed, the communist cadet officer defended his ideology, thus provoking his more senior colleague, who became enraged, and as a result the two men came to blows. Eight fourth-year sergeants major then went to the assistance of their leader and beat up the first-year student.

The incident was reported to the Army General Staff by letter directly by the fourth-year cadet officer. According to other reports, the incident was communicated to the Army General Staff personally by the cadet, who went there for this purpose.

Papandreou, Averof Disagreement

NC311126 Athens ATHENS NEWS in English 30 Oct 82 p 4

[Text] The prime minister and minister of national defence, Mr Andreas Papandreou, in reply to a statement by New Democracy leader Evangelos Averof, said on Thursday:

"The leader of New Democracy is assuming an immense responsibility by making vague references to reports concerning political activities within the framework of the armed forces. Perhaps he is attributing to us his own habits.

"Mr Averof had a supreme national obligation to seek a meeting with me since I am personally responsible for the armed forces.

"He could very well refer to us his concern or any information he may have on the subject. But he had no right whatsoever, particularly on this great anniversary of the "Okhi" day, to put in doubt the devotion of the armed forces to their unique task, the protection of the country. "I have repeatedly stated, not only to the people but also to the armed forces, that my government will never tolerate any party activities in the armed forces, whichever party this may be.

"Every officer, non-commissioned officer and soldier of the armed forces has the right to have his own political leanings, but in no way has he the right to involve these political leanings in the implementation of his duties. I only hope that Mr Averof realises the immensity of his error."

Mr Averof, in his statement, said that if the reports in the newspapers concerning an incident at the Evelopidhon officer cadets academy are true, then it means that a disturbing situation seems to be building up in the armed forces. For as the incident is reported by the press, he said, it shows that an effort is being made by the communists to subjugate the armed forces with the tolerance of the government.

The government is responsible for this situation because it has decided not to examine any longer the curriculm vitae of the youths admitted to the academy, he said.

Mr Averof said that the armed forces had reached a top level of training and can guarantee in the best possible way the security of the country. But incidents like the one which took place at the academy will distract officers from their main duty and obligations. Mr Averof called on the government to publish the letter of the young cadet who was the cause of the dispute.

The government spokesman, commenting on the statement of Mr Averof, said that the relevant authorities are carrying out a detailed investigation of the matter. He added that "Mr Averof, with his statement, is no doubt trying to influence the investigation, and such an attempt is unacceptable."

GENERAL STAFF OFFICE REPORT ON TERRORISM

TA291827 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Report by the General Staff's Office on the role of terrorism in Turkey -- live or recorded]

[Text] It has been announced that so long as an international cooperation is not secured in the struggle against terrorism and so long as the desires of the countries that have certain goals concerning Turkey are not changed, international terrorism and terrorism in Turkey, which is an extension of it, cannot be prevented.

A report issued by the chief of the General Staff's Office assessed the anarchic situation in the past and prospects for the future. According to the report, 39,852 ideological incidents took place in Turkey between 26 December 1978, the day martial law was declared, and 11 September 1982. While 60 percent of these incidents occurred between 12 September 1979 and 11 September 1980, this percentage dropped to 3 in the year following 12 September 1982. While a total of 3,856 persons were killed in incidents that occurred prior to 12 September 1980, 581 persons were killed in the period following 12 September 1980. A total of 56,386 persons have been captured as a result of a series of planned operations following 12 September. Of those captured, 54 percent were leftist activists, 13 percent rightists activists, 6 percent secessionists and the remaining 27 percent constituted those who had no specific ideologies.

Of the 822,632 weapons seized in the period after the declaration of martial law, 96 percent were seized in the period following the 12 September operation. A total of 52,788 persons were arrested in connection with ideological incidents following the declaration of martial law. Of these, 26,399 persons received various punishments for their crimes. On 1 September 1982 there were 546 persons in custody in connection with ideological incidents, 17,540 persons under arrest and 6,512 convicts in prisons or being held in custody.

During the 20-month period prior to the 12 September operation, 5,347 court files were concluded while this number reached 30,420 during the period following the operation. The martial law legal authorities opened a total of 540 investigation files following claims of torture and mistreatment by 4 October 1982. While investigation is continuing in connection with 316 of these files, it has been decided that in 171 cases there was no ground for prosecution. There are still 37 files at the courts and trials involving 16 incidents have been concluded. Of those being tried in connection with the allegations, 17 persons are in custody and 76 are not. Thirty-four persons were acquitted following their trial and 15 were given various sentences.

According to the report, as a result of the investigations carried out following allegations that 204 persons were killed by torture in the period following the operation it was determined that only in four cases were the deaths caused by torture. Of the remaining 70 cases of death, it was determined that 25 were from natural causes, 15 were suicides, 5 were killed while trying to escape from the security forces and 25 were killed during clashes.

The last part of the report says: So long as all countries do not cooperate very closely and so long as the desires of the countries that have certain goals concerning Turkey are not changed, international terrorism and terrorism in Turkey, which is an extension of it, will not end. It is a fact that the atmosphere of anarchy and terror experienced in Turkey -- which is situated at the focal point of various ideologies, historic goals and economic and political interest calculations due to its geographic and geopolitical position in the world -- was also created by the political, economic and social problems existing in underdeveloped and developing countries; and that these problems were especially exploited by the perpetrators of destructive activities.

The failure to solve these problems, which were experienced in almost all the Turkish strata prior to the operation or which had reached huge dimensions through the joint efforts of domestic and foreign destructive factors, has corroded our community in all aspects and has reached a level threatening the country's unity.

Noting that every state should take measures to struggle against unlawful and terrorists' activities in a bid to secure its national unity and integrity, the report said that the Turkish Armed Forces implemented the 12 September operation and thus a historic decision which retrieved the country from the brink of a civil war.

Recalling that through the operation the plans of destructive elements to destroy the country from within were thwarted, the state was reclaimed and their functions were made operational once more and the transition to a democratic parliamentary system based on sound foundations with a constitution prepared in line with Ataturk's principles, the report added: Although armed activities in Turkey were rendered ineffective and taken under control shortly after the operation, it should be known that this does not mean that the destructive elements engaging in activities before the operation have completely been eliminated. When given the opportunity, these destructive elements are still engaging in various activities as can be understood from the following figures: A total of 1,170 incidents occurred between 12 September 1981 and 11 September 1982 with an average of 98 incidents per month; a total of 57,181 weapons of various types and sizes have been seized by the security forces during the same period with a monthly average of 4,765 weapons; a total of 327,123 bullets have been seized during the same period with a monthly average of 27,260. A considerable number of organization members are still being captured and weapons and ammunition are still being seized in operations conducted by the security forces.

The remnants of these destructive elements will want to use every opportunity in the future, as was the case before the 12 September operation, in order to cause ideological confusion among the masses, to destroy the morale of the people, to create the image that the current system is impotent, and to thus render ineffective the power and authority of the state by exploiting sensitive issues in a bid to destroy from within and from without the unity of the country and the nation of the Turkish republic; to prevent and destroy the process of contemporaneity in line with the Ataturk principles; and to establish a system guided by their own ideology and views. Because it is impossible to erase ideological views from conditioned minds within a period of 2 years, the report added that given the same conditions, those with destructive ideologies will try to repeat the past incidents with the help of outside forces. Noting that raising generations loyal to Ataturk's ideology and his principles within a strong state structure was the definite solution to rendering ineffective destructive ideologies, the report said that this can be realized only within the framework of a certain educational process.

The report added that the international character of terrorism called for measures on the same level. Recalling that international understanding and unity in action were not secured against terror, the report enumerated as follows the measures that should be taken on the issue:

Terrorism should be viewed as a threat directed against all countries and, above all, a unity of view and cooperation should be secured on taking joint measures against it. A definite stand should be adopted against acts of terror. There should be close cooperation on the issue of intelligence and information, and documents to be obtained should be transferred to other countries. Mutual aid should be secured on education, technical personnel and equipment.

No asylum should be granted to terrorists being sought for their activities, and they should be extradited as soon as possible to the country searching for them. No opportunity should be given to terrorists to obtain the weapons and explosives necessary for their activities and no opportunity should be given to their training.

The report said that if these measures are not taken, with each passing day it will be more difficult to prevent international terrorism. The report concluded by saying: If the state and the people cooperate, if there is political, economic and social unity and strength and if there is a trustworthy, impartial and successful administration, the future capabilities and opportunities of the destructive elements can be brought under control and can be rendered ineffective as is the case today.

GENERAL EVREN GIVES SPEECH ON REPUBLIC DAY

TA291614 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1555 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, Oct 29 (AA) -- "Our primary duty is to prepare a happy and secure future for the next generation, and the only way to do this is to protect and preserve our state and country. The first step towards this goal at this time is to go to the polls on November 7 (date of the constitutional referendum) and to vote according to your conscience," Head of State Gen Kenan Evren said Friday prior to the parade at Ankara hippodrome marking the 59th anniversary of the republic.

"We are celebrating the 59th anniversary of the republic in calm and security, with great expectations for the future," Gen Evren said, appealing to the people to vote "yes" if they did not want to relive the chaotic days of the pre-Sep 12 (1980 military takeover) period. Following are the highlights of Gen Evren's speech:

-- "Ataturk's spirit is in no doubt with us today. He is happy because his greatest, holiest work, the Turkish Republic, has been saved once more." Having summed up the Turkish war of independence resulting in the republic, Gen Evren said: "The nation who, at the end of centuries of struggles, took into her own hands the power to self-determination and thus opened the period of national sovereignty, indeed could not live [words indistinct] could not possibly share that sovereignty with anyone else. Liberal democracy can be crowned and complemented only with the republic, which is a merit."

"It is impossible to rule out the political and moral responsibility of former political leaders and their close associates in the way the country came to the pre-Sep 12 conditions, though no criminal proceedings have yet been concluded against them."

"During Ataturk's time and after him, certain acts of sabotage were staged from time to time against the republic and basic structure of the state, but the greatest and bloodiest one was staged during the pre-Sep 12 period."

"Following the May 27 (1960) military intervention, the 1961 Constitution was approved with good intentions but it had many loopholes leading to rapid exploitation by hostile circles. During the 10 years of its implementation, it became evident that the constitution ruled out responsibility in return for unprecedented rights and liberties. The "social (welfare) state" established in 1961 was interpreted by some as a "socialist state." Certain persons brought about arbitrary and conflicting implementations in the name of supporting the rule of the law. The separation of legislative, executive and judicial powers turned into a conflict between those powers."

Summing up the developments since 1960, Gen Evren said the amendment of the political parties law would institutionalize political morals.

Denouncing the "lords who try to have the nation reject the new constitution elaborated to bring about happy days for the nation, through treacherous under-the-board propaganda," Gen Evren asked: "Will not history and the nation ask them to reply to this question some time; "What if you accidentally succeeded in sabotaging the new constitution, what would you do? You who almost sunk this country in full sight of the nation, who stayed as server while you had the state in your hands and the most terrible sabotage against the republic was underway? They still lack wisdom."

"The Turkish Republic will live to eternity."

EVREN COMMENTS ON CONSTITUTION IN ANTALYA SPEECH

TA311546 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1525 GMT 31 Oct 82

[Text] Antalya, (southern Turkey), Oct 31 (AA) -- Turkish Head of State Gen. Kenan Evren arrived Sunday afternoon in Antalya, the second stop in one day of his 11-province official tour to promote the draft constitution. Addressing a gathering in this Mediterranean town, Gen. Evren said, in brief, they saw it fit to remain in power for seven years so that the new constitution "is not suspended" and so that "it takes roots."

"No one thinks about how we can proceed on the way of contemporary civilization without being overturned or making any further accidents or about how we will remove and correct the position of the overturned car with help from everybody but every organization seems to peck at the constitution at this place or that trying to figure out how they can gain advantages or self-interests," Gen. Evren said, adding: "Those who have great responsibility for the events which brought Turkey to Sep. 12 are not standing idle either, thinking that the nation will still do their biddings.

"I did not have any provision included in the constitution saying that former presidents of the republic will become automatically members of parliament (this was a provision in the 1961 Constitution). I do not want it. In case I have fulfilled my debt towards this great nation, this is the greatest happiness for me. In case there is any need for such a provision, they can add it to the constitution later, introduce it for other presidents. Other members of the National Security Council too, did not want to remain in power for life. We have come together, we will go together when our task is finished."

DEFENSE MINISTER ON MODERNIZATION OF AIRPORTS

[Text] Ankara, 30 Oct (AA) -- "NATO does not intend to pressure any of the regional countries to make them any concessions or to harm their independence in any way," Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken told ANADOLU AGENCY Saturday.

"The memorandum of understanding on modernization of certain airports limited to the NATO agreement and in line with NATO plans is nearing completion," the minister said, dismissing claims that the efforts were related to the Rapid Deployment Force created by the U.S. with different aims. The agreement in question is a technical agreement which foresees mutual assistance at times of major threat NATO may face under the Rapid Deployment Forces and such agreements had been made by all other NATO countries too, the minister added.

More on Bayulken Statement

[Text] Ankara, 30 Oct (AA) -- Turkish Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken told ANATOLIA AGENCY that Turkey wishes peace and stability in the region and solidarity between regional countries. "Implementation of this plan requires increased military aid," Bayulken said, stressing that a strong Turkey was the guarantee of peace and stability in the region.
Bayulken went on to say, in breif : "Turkey's foreign and defense policies are determined by his own government. Turkey's position is sufficiently clear. It is necessary to approach with prudence to comments from circles trying to create certain apprehensions concerning Turkey's foreign policy."

TERCUMAN ON U.S. PLAN TO MODERNIZE TURKISH ARMY

NC010920 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 27 Oct 82 p 4

[Article by Professor Fahir Armaoglu: "What Is Going On?"]

[Text] The activities of the Americans in Turkey have recently increased in a conspicuous manner. Many Americans, important and less important, such as Admiral Crowe, NATO commander for southern Europe; the CIA director, U.S. senators desirous of climbing the Agri mountain, director of the office for Turkey, Greece and Cyprus [title as published] of the State Department and even researchers of the U.S. Library of Congress keep entering and leaving Turkey. These people are holding overt or covert contacts with several Turks in an official or unofficial capacity. It is even said that many civilian Americans of various walks of life came to Tekirdag where NATO exercises were carried out a few days ago. U.S. consuls in Turkey's big cities are engaged in canvassing public opinion regarding the 7 November referendum and the prospective political parties.

Just as we were about to ask "what is going on?" Jack Anderson, one of the renowned TV commentators and writers of the United States, also well-known for the accuracy and reliability of his reporting, let the cat out of the United States' bag. According to Anderson, the United States will modernize the Turkish Armed Forces, but in return it demands three bases in eastern Anatolia, one of these bases being in Mus. Moreover, Anderson argues that the United States wants our Aegean army, which has been formed against Greece, to move to eastern Anatolia as this would mitigate the worries of Greece and eliminate the opposition of the Greek lobby in U.S. Congress to the modernization of the Turkish Armed Forces.

Let us first stress the existence of two factors in this report: One is securing Turkey's participation in the Rapid Deployment Force (RDF) which was formed by the United States in 1980, while the other factor refers to the removal of the Aegean army to Eastern Anatolia for the purpose of reducing tension between Turkey and Greece which would result in reactivating the southeastern wing of NATO. Let us point out that Jack Anderson published this report on the eve of the commencement of the U.S.-Greek negotiations. It is understood that with this plan, which appears to be very complicated, the United States is seeking to kill a few birds with one stone.

We hasten to point out that the United States is playing a very dangerous game with respect to Turkey. We must not lose sight of the fact that a rapid development has been observed recently in Turkish-American relations. But the Turkish Government must clearly explain to the Turkish people its attitude toward the RDF, NATO and its relations with the United States. Is there a new and extremely serious danger threatening Turkey or the Middle East that would necessitate action exceeding the framework of NATO? The Turkish nation has a right to know this before other frogs are scared.

Report Denied

[Text] Ankara, ANKA -- When Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Nazmi Akiman was asked to comment on arguments put forward by journalist Jack Anderson of THE WASHINGTON POST that Turkey is going to give the United States three military bases in eastern Anatolia, he replied that Anderson's report was "entirely the product of imagination."

Akimam made this statement in connection with this matter:

"Turkey's military strength is adjusted in accordance with the defense needs of our country. No other factor apart from the defense needs is taken into consideration in establishing this position.

"As to the military aid extended by the United States to Turkey, this too is determined in accordance with Turkey's needs within the framework of NATO. Therefore, Jack Anderson's report is purely the product of his imagination. It goes no further than this."

LE SOIR REPORTS PAPANDREOU OCT NEWS CONFERENCE

PM290935 Brussels LE SOIR in French 25 Oct 82 p 3

[Unattributed report on press conference given in Brussels by Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou on 22 October: "Greece Is Opposed to the Blocs Which Divide Europe"]

[Text] "Greece's objective is to be outside any military system, but my country must also take account of the fact that the military blocs exist just as the balance of power exists," Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou said at a press conference Friday.

"PASOK (the ruling Greek Socialist Party) has its own ideology and is not anxious to change it. For example, it thinks that Europe should not be the victim of bloc politics. The tougher U.S. line recently adopted toward the Soviet Union and the whole policy relating to the deployment of medium-range missiles both on the U.S. and Soviet side lead Greece to support the peace movement," Mr Papandreou added.

"My country also wants to turn the Balkans into a nuclear-free zone."

"We Greeks have bitter feelings toward NATO. It was because of NATO that we had the colonels and it is because of NATO that Cyprus is still partly occupied by the Turks," Mr Papandreou added.

The Greek prime minister had meetings with several Belgian ministers during his visit to our country and he reached agreement with Defense Minister Vreven for the Greek secretary of state for defense to shortly visit Belgium to examine possible joint investment in the arms and military technology sphere. Greece is seeking contacts with "small" countries which pose fewer problems, he said.

As regards Greece's EEC membership, Mr Papandreou stressed the fact that his country must be able to develop at a sufficiently rapid rate not to be "absorbed" by the EEC, hence the Greek initiative to present a memorandum to the EC. That memorandum is now being examined by the Commission, which is preparing its technical answers to the Greek requests before submitting its report to the Council of Ministers, probably in February.

The Greek prime minister spoke of the Communist's "attentive and friendly" view of his country's memorandum.

Questioned on Greece's position on the Near East -- a major question for his country, as Mr Papandreou pointed out, since it is situated where Europe and Asia meet and since its foreign policy is adapted to that position -- he said that Athens thinks that Israel's existence must be recognized by all and that the existence of a Palestinian state should also be accepted by all. He expressed his respect for 'Arafat, who is "remarkably moderate in view of the genocide in Beirut about which everybody knows."

USSR CRITICISM OF BERLIN VISIT REBUTTED

LD011208 Hamburg DPA in German 1148 GMT 1 Nov 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 1 Nov (DPA) -- The Federal Government countered on Monday the sharp Soviet criticism of the visit by Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl to West Berlin accompanied by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. A government spokesman said in Bonn that the chancellor claims it his self-evident right to visit Berlin.

This was especially the case when the chancellor, as in this particular case, accompanied Mrs Thatcher, as representative of one of Berlin's protective powers. The spokesman added that apart from this, Chancellor Kohl has repeatedly expressed the firm will that the quadripartite agreement on Berlin should be strictly adhered to and fully applied.

CHADIAN PRESIDENT HISSEIN HABRE SEEKS AID

LD301208 Hamburg DPA in German 1141 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Text] Bonn, 30 Oct (DPA) -- Hissein Habre, the new president of state of the African republic of Chad, has made an urgent appeal for help to the Federal Republic because it is a matter of "life and survival" in his country. In an interview on Deutschlandfunk, Habre asked today for help in acquiring means of transportation, the development of hospitals and medical supplies. German help will also be welcome for schools and the water supply. After 17 years of civil war, his country lacks all the basic necessities.

The Federal Government on 22 October began sending relief goods worth DM10 million to Chad. These funds are still from last year's budget but could be spent only after the end of the civil war.

SPD'S VOGEL TO STAND AS CANDIDATE FOR CHANCELLOR

LD011506 Hamburg DPA in German 1436 GMT 1 Nov 82

[Excerpt] Berlin, 1 Nov (DPA) -- Berlin SPD opposition leader Hans-Jochen Vogel intends to move into the Bundestag as Berlin deputy and stand in that capacity as candidate for the office of federal chancellor. Vogel gave notice of this final undertaking on Monday at a joint session of the SPD regional Executive and the SPD group of the Berlin House of Representatives. The deliberations were attended by the former chancellor, Helmut Schmidt and party chief Willy Brandt.

After considering all the circumstances, Vogel intends, despite his former promise to remain in Berlin until 1985 -- the end of the election period -- to follow the request to stand as chancellor candidate.

FRG-USA COMMUNIST PARTIES APPEAL TO WORKERS

LD311842 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1146 GMT 31 Oct 82

[Text] Duesseldorf, 31 Oct (ADN) -- At an international rally in Essen on Saturday, the German Communist Party (DKP) and the Communist Party of the United States of America, PPA reports, directed the following appeal to the working people of the FRG and the United States:

In a situation which is dangerous for peace and for the people's future, the Communist Party of the United States of America and the DKP jointly address the working populations of their countries, and the forces of the democratic and peace movements in the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany.

We see with concern how the dangers to world peace grow. Peace is threatened today more than at any other time since the end of World War II. Responsibility for this lies with the reactionary forces of the United States and NATO. Their lunatic nuclear armament [policy], their criminal nuclear first-strike and "limited nuclear war" strategy, their striving for hegemony and military superiority conjure up the danger of nuclear catastrophe: a thermonuclear holocaust.

Abolish Nuclear Arms Before They Destroy the World

In a nuclear war, there would be neither winners nor losers, Nuclear war spells destruction. There is no such thing as a "limited" or "winnable" nuclear war. Struggle against the nuclear war danger is literally a matter of survival for the peoples of the United States of America and the Federal Republic of Germany. The nuclear arms drive must be halted, Nuclear weapons must be abolished before they destroy our nations and our planet.

Therefore, we appeal to the workers and employees, all peaceloving people, all democratic forces, to strongly demand still more than hitherto:

Put an end to the arms madness;

stop the arms race; and freeze nuclear arms.

This would be a first step toward more far-reaching measures for nuclear disarmament.

The year 1983 must not become the year of the deployment of new U.S. nuclear missiles in the Federal Republic and Western Europe. The NATO missile decision must be rescinded.

With Passion Against Anticommunist Deception of the People

We resolutely reject the big lie of a threat from the East. We passionately fight against this criminal deception of the people. It was with anticommunism and anti-Soviet incitement, with racial and national hatred that the march into World War II, that resulted in 50 million dead, began.

We tell our peoples the truth, and the truth is that no threat emerges from the Soviet Union. In the Soviet Union, as in the other socialist states, there are no arms monopolies, no concerns which profit from armaments and war. Workers and peasants, party and government know but one objective: to secure peaceful conditions for communist and socialist construction in their countries. Socialism and peace belong together.

The Soviet Union extends the hand of peace to the nations. This is proved by its numerous proposals for safeguarding peace and for concrete disarmament steps. The Soviet Union's solemn renunciation of the first use of nuclear arms is especially important for safeguarding peace.

We demand that the U.S. Government follow the example of the Soviet Union and, before all the world, also renounce the first use of nuclear mass destruction weapons. Then there will be no first use, then there will be no nuclear arms use whatsover,

Boycott and Sanctions Policies Are Anti-American and Anti-European

Our peoples need good relations with the Soviet Union and the other socialist states. Hence, we resolutely protest the boycott and sanctions policy of the Reagan administration and its policy of an anticommunist crusade. This policy is directed against the fundamental interests of the working people of the United States, the Federal Republic and the other West European countries. It is anti-American and anti-European. Especially in view of the sharpened crisis in our countries, the growing mass unemployment, economic cooperation with the Soviet Union safeguards hundreds of thousands of jobs.

We appeal to American workers and employees, the working people of the Federal Republic and West Europe: Do not allow the Reagan policy, boycotts and sanctions to destroy your own existence. Fight against Reagan's punitive actions which are meant to hit the Soviet Union, but which are also directed against the working class of our countries.

For Increased Resistance to Crisis Burdens, Let the Rich Pay

Already today the working people of our countries have to bear the burdens of the adventurous NATO arms drive. Social rights and benefits are cut. Mass unemployment grows. Real wages fall. The young are cheated out of their future. The bitter results of the capitalist crisis, of the lunatic armaments are shifted onto the working people while at the same time the rich and superrich grow constantly more rich and more powerful. Growing worries for the working people, growing riches for big capital, these are the realities of our countries.

Our parties, who act and fight among the working people, strive with all their might to increase resistance against the policy of transferring the burdens of crisis onto the working people's shoulders.

In the interest of a successful defense of social rights and living standards, we call for an increased fight to reduce arms expenditure. Not military armament but social armament: That is what is needed right now.

Solidarity With All Who Fight Against Suppression, for Freedom and Independence

Our solidarity belongs to all people who fight for national freedom and independence, such as the brave Arab people of Palestine; all peoples who offer resistance to bloody fascist dictatorships such as in Chile, South Africa, El Salvador; and all peoples who defend their freedom and independence against imperialism's attacks such as in Cuba and Nicaragua.

We appeal to the working class, to the peoples of our countries, to strengthen solidarity with all antiimperialist forces.

Cooperation Strengthens the Democratic and Progressive Forces

We communists of the Federal Republic of Germany and of the United States of America affirm our willingness to cooperate in partnership with all peaceloving and democratic forces who are committed to safeguarding peace, and to the social rights of working people.

Comradely cooperation and unity of action of the working class multiplies the power of the people in the fight for its vital interests, strengthens the broad alliance for peace and life, and unity and solidarity give strength. Toward this we communists make our contribution.

The objective now is to do everything to safeguard peace and the future, to stop the arms madness and social cuts, to prevent nuclear missiles and to defend jobs.

LE MONDE CITES HAIG ON MIDEAST, OTHER ISSUES

PM011305 Paris LE MONDE in French 23 Oct 82 p 6

[M.T. report: "General Haig's Regrets"]

[Excerpt] Former U.S. Secretary of State General Haig has begun a short visit to France at breakneck speed. On his first day, Thursday 21 October, he successively dined with a few journalists, answered the Europe 1 Press Club's questions and then faced several hundred businessmen assembled by the Executive Club, the organization which is staging his visit and is bowing to the heavy rates charged by major U.S. lecturers (costing $20,000, Mr Haig's "performance" is, in that respect, among "the pick of the bunch," like Mr Carter and Mr Kissinger).

On each occasion, the former secretary of state was questioned on his role in the Lebanon war. Had he been informed of the Israeli plans and had he approved them, as has been alleged? Mr Haig was clear on the second point but ambiguous on the first: "From my first visit to Israel in the spring of 1981," he told the press club, "I warned the Israeli Government against what was considered, at that time, to be an intended offensive operation." At the same time, he advocated an urgent solution to the Lebanon problem which, in his view, should precede the resumption of the Camp David process. That was what happened, since the "Reagan plan" for a Near East settlement was only unveiled once that obstacle had been removed: "None of what the president said in September," he specified during the lunch, "had not been on his desk for months."

COT SPEAKS ON PROBLEMS FACING THIRD WORLD

AB291243 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 1045 GMT 29 Oct 82

["Excerpts" From address by Jean-Pierre Cot, French minister delegate to the Ministry of External Affairs for Cooperation, to a meeting organized by the Henri Laugier Association on 28 October; place of address not given]

[Excerpts] One does not need to be an expert or a very shrewd political leader to be aware of the degradation of the international situation: The economic and financial crisis affecting the North and the South as well as the East and the West; the escalating crises including those in Poland and El Salvador where fundamental freedoms are being flouted; the multiplication of conflicts especially in the Third World, resulting in the deaths of tens of thousands of people; the dislocation of economies by war, the wastage of fabulous resources, the enslavement of peoples and the exertions of pressure and influence, as well as intolerable interference by the superpowers.

This degradation of the international situation can be seen in the conflict between Iran and Iraq, in Afghanistan, in the invasion of Lebanon, in Central America, in southern Africa and so on. What does this lead to? It leads to the fact that in certain Third World countries possessing some resources, the chances of economic, social and political development are being ruined by war and the arms race. It also results in the fact that some particularly deprived Third World countries do not have the means either to develop themselves or to protect themselves. They are victims of both economic and military insecurity, and they often dearly pay the political price of their weakness and vulnerability to the superpowers.

It must be noted with bitterness that the disarmament efforts have not yielded any great result during the past few years. The failure of the second extraordinary session of the United Nations is a formidable illustration of this -- maneuvers largely dominated good will. There were a lot of accusations, denunciations and regrets, but not enough progress.

The best way of progressing in this field is to reject all hypocrises and ruses. We must not force ourselves into the belief that certain solutions are possible.

We know that several overarmed countries are opposed to all fundamental disruption of the world military situation. We know that several Third World countries are also helping to foil the disarmament effort because they are anxious to keep certain military options open.

In these conditions, let us be realistic in our reflections and proposals. We must have two main preoccupations: First of all, development and then the developing countries' right to security. We cannot have one without the other. The threats against the Third World are not only military; they are also mainly economic and political.

For 1 and 1/2 years now, France has loudly been proclaiming its solidarity with the Third World -- its solidarity in the political, economic and security fields as well as in the field of the reduction of tensions.

It has adopted clear positions against apartheid and racial discrimination and for the self-determination of peoples, independence and nonalignment. It has increased its development aid. It has supported the demands for a just remuneration for raw materials. It also supports the efforts for the launching of global negotiations.

France has often affirmed and demonstrated this solidarity because we are convinced that in this period of crisis and tension, the only solution is cooperation. We will relentlessly repeat this. We will emerge from the crisis and avoid war only through cooperation, solidarity and the security and development of the Third World. These objectives can be achieved only at this price. They will be achieved only by transcending the dangerous, selfish and narrow conception of economic and strategic national interests as well as idealist speeches which have no relationship with the hard reality of the situation.

FURTHER REPORT ON MARCHAIS PRESS CONFERENCE

PM291651 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Oct 82 p 9

[Jean-Emile Vidal dispatch on press conference given in Beijing by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais on 26 October]

[Text] After the speech which he made at the beginning of his press conference in Beijing, Georges Marchais answered the many questions of the journalists. Questioned on the content of the PCF-CPC cooperation plan, the PCF secretary general stated:

"We have invited a CPC delegation to visit France on a date which the two parties will jointly decide. Comrade Hu Yaobang warmly accepted that invitation. We proposed that a L'HUMANITE journalist should come and work as permanent correspondent here in Beijing. That proposal was also immediately accepted. We also decided in principle that exchange visits by study delegations on specific subjects should take place, that permanent cooperation between our research institutes be set up and that cooperation between our newspapers and periodicals be encouraged. In addition, it was decided in principle that exchange visits by delegations of French and Chinese Communist journalists should take place. Chinese research workers will take part in the theoretical colloquims which the Marxist Research Institute is holding next January. Finally, RENMIN RIBAO will henceforth take part in the L'HUMANITE festival. Those are a few aspects of the broad cooperation agreement adopted."

Time and Patience Was Necessary

In reply to a journalist who asked why the PCF had "taken so long" to come to Beijing, Georges Marchais said the the question of relations between the CPC and the other communist and workers' parties was not a minor question.

Those relations seriously deteriorated from the sixties onward. "As I reminded Comrade Deng Xiaoping yesterday, all the communist and workers' parties without exception, bear some responsibility," he said. "There were differences of opinion. They ought to have been discussed. It was a serious mistake to ostracize the CPC, and responsibility for that stance is shared by all."

It therefore took time and patience to remedy past mistakes and arrive at this new concept which now prevails in relations among communist and workers' parties. "And we French Communists feel we have made our contribution to that. Since the 22d congress, we have worked in earnest to restore the normal relations beteeen our two parties which will henceforth exist," Georges Marchais stated. "We did not decide to make this visit just like that, one fine day. We worked on it seriously and that is why the result has been positive."

Things Are Moving Between the USSR and China

Questioned on what he thinks might be the timing and phases of the normalization of relations between China and the Soviet Union, Georges Marchais said that he obviously could not answer that question. "What I can say," he continued, "is that things are moving. Moreover, I note that most journalists in the world are saying that. Some are doing so with satisfaction, others to their chagrin. But everybody admits it. Well, when things start moving and you have discussions, I not only hope but am convinced that progress can be made. I will not say it will be rapid but reasonable. I think that, in particular, because -- I will not say any more than this -- I have heard some proposals made by the Soviet side and some proposals made by the Chinese side. I am convinced that there is a basis for serious discussion which will scrupulously respect each side's independence. It will be a serious discussion which will not attempt yet again to lay all the blame on either side. As soon as the rather black chapter of the past is closed, as Comrade Hu Yaobang and I did for our two parties, and you look to the future in the interests of the two peoples of the two states, and more generally, the whole world, then there are real, serious possibilities of making progress."

The Kampuchean Problem

[Question] What role can the PCF play in solving the Kampuchean problem?

[Answer] Special ties woven by history exist between the Vietnamese workers' party and the PCF. THe late lamented President Ho Chi Minh was one of the PCF's founders. For years, we struggled together against French colonialism. During the long and bloody war waged by U.S. imperialism with the aim of destroying Vietnam, as Francis Coppola shows in his film "Apocalypse Now," the Vietnamese and French Communists struggled side by side. That (piece of) history made it possible to establish indestructible links between our two parties. Vietnam is close to the hearts of several generations of French Communists. What happened in Kampuchea cannot call all that into question.

The Vietnamese legitimately protected their borders against Pol Pot. With Kampuchean patriots, Vietnam saved the Kampuchean people from the total genocide which Pol Pot wanted and which had already caused the death of several million people, and the total destruction of the Khmer civilization and its vast cultural wealth. Those are the facts which overwhelm those who claim to support human rights and still support Pol Pot and his allies. Nonetheless, our solidarity with the Vietnamese workers' party is not unconditional any more than it is with any communist party.

Our position on Kampuchea is clear. Each of the three countries on the Indochinese peninsula, as it is called -- Vietnam, Kampuchea and Laos -- absolutely must maintain its own existence, its sovereignty and independence. That certainly does not conflict with special mutually advantageous cooperation. Moreover, an agreement has been reached among the three countries' governments on that basis. Well, if that agreement were not scrupulously respected by Vietnam once the Kampuchean people's security is guaranteed against the Pol Pot gang's return, if the Vietnamese troops do not then withdraw from Kampuchea, we should not only express our complete disagreement but would take action to ensure that the promises made were kept.

Consequently, there is no task more urgent for us today than to help Heng Samrin's government, Kampuchea's only legal government to rebuild its country, in all spheres, following the disaster which it experienced, to create the right conditions for a return to normal situation, in particular for the population's security and life.

As you can see, our party not only has a consistent policy on that question but it is also taking action to solve the problems posed.

Poland

In reply to the question on the CPC's and PCP's positions on the situation in Poland, Georges Marchais said that there was agreement between the two parties. "We think that it is an internal Polish affair, that that country must move toward far-reaching economic, social and democratic reforms to solve the problems and that it is necessary to do that by discussion. That is a matter which concerns the Polish people."

The Defense of Freedom

[Question] Cuban poet Valladares has arrived in Paris after spending 22 years in Cuban prisons; in addition, according to some reports, it would seem that dissident Shcharanskiy has started a hunger strike. Does that not continue to pose for you the problem of democracy in the socialist countries? And what is your position on these two particular problems?

"I expected that gesture of clemency by Fidel Castro," Georges Marchais replied. "We had discussed that question when I visited Cuba in April with my friend Maxime Gremetz. Fidel Castro had justified the sentence passed on Valladares, who, he said, was responsible for the death of young soldiers. He had assured me that he was being properly treated in prison. Nonetheless, he had promised me a gesture of clemency toward Valladares soon, when he thought the time was right. He had asked me to show discretion about that discussion. I kept my promise to do so. As you can see, the Committee for the Defense of Freedom and Human Rights, which sometimes acts openly and sometimes not, out of a concern for efficacy, played its role in that affair.

"We are taking the same kind of action in Shcharanskiy's case. I will not conceal the fact that, according to our interlocutors, it is a complicated case. And I hope that we will succeed in that case too."

L'HUMANITE REPORTS MARCHAIS PYONGYANG ARRIVAL

PM010945 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Oct 82 p 9

[Jean-Emile Vidal dispatch: "Warm Welcome in Pyongyang"]

[Excerpt] Pyongyang, 26 October -- Several thousand people waving bunches of artificial flowers, welcomed the PCF delegation when it arrived yesterday at the airport in the DPRK capital. The women were wearing the traditional long dresses in brightly-colored silky material, with high, fitted waists.

[PCF Secretary General] Georges Marchais shook hands several times with his enthusiastic hosts. The same evening, President Kim Il-song received the delegation in the hall of the Palace of Congresses which is a sumptuous building decorated with different kinds of marble. He then gave a solemn banquet during which toasts were proposed, the texts of which we will publish tomorrow.

During the meeting which preceeded the meal, after words of welcome, Kim Il-song painted a brief picture of the situation in Korea 30 years ago when the imperialist aggression was raging and when bombs and guns were pounding this country day and night. Pyongyang was reduced to ashes as were all the cities. All the trees were burned. There were only three half-ruined buildings in the capital.

"We rebuilt everything; all the buildings and trees which you can see are less than 30 years old, " Kim Il-song stated. "The Americans said that it would take us at least 100 years. But the people's strength is so great that in 30 years we have removed all traces of the war. You have seen part of Pyongyang. People do not live badly in the rural districts either."

PCF OFFICIALS HERMIER, GARCIA VISIT LEBANON

PM021113 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Oct 82 p 7

[Unattributed report: PCF Delegation In Lebanon]

[Text] A PCF delegation comprising Guy Hermier, deputy and Politburo member, and Jean Garcia, senator and Central Committee member, has visited Lebanon.

On its arrival in Beirut, the delegation was received at the French Embassy. Invited by the Lebanese Communist Party on the occasion of its 58th anniversary, it took part in the reception organized on that occasion. In Lebanon's current situation, that reception constitutes an important politcal event in which many Lebanese political personalities, including three ministers, took part.

The delegation visited the French UNIFIL forces in southern Lebanon.

Guy Hermier and Jean Garcia also visited the Palestinian Sabra and Shatila camps. General Granger, who commands the French troops of the multinational force in Beirut, received the two PCF representatives.

During its stay, the delegation had many meetings with various Lebanese political personalities -- inter alia, with the deputy speaker of the National Assembly, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee and leaders of the Lebanese National Movement.

The delegation was received by the Lebanese Communist Party leadership. The two PCF leaders were given a warm reception everywhere. Guy Hermier reaffirmed the Franch Communists' complete solitarity with the Lebanese people and support for their struggles for a free, democratic and united Lebanon.

PREMIER WANTS LARGER LEBANON INTERNATIONAL FORCE

PM011447 London AL-MAJALLAH in Arabic 30 Oct-5 Nov 82 p 22

[Joseph Fitchet report]

[Excerpts] For the first time in contemporary Arab history, Italy is playing a role in the Middle East and the Italian soldiers -- known as the Bersaglieri with their feathered hats -- are taking part in the multinational force in Sinai and in the peace-keeping force in Lebanon. This is the first time that Italian forces have been sent abroad since World War II.

Italy has its particular role to play within the framework of the Western world in that it has a distinctive policy in the Mediterranean. It also wishes once again to play an effective diplomatic role. Such a policy has its risks. A wave of anger swept Rome following the attack on worshippers leaving a small Jewish synagogue in the Italian capital. Critics have asked: "Why are Italian forces being sent to Beirut to protect the Lebanese when the Italian authorities seem unable to protect Italians in Rome?"

I obtained the answer to this and to other questions regarding the Italian role in Lebanon and the area when I met with Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini in his office.

I asked Spadolini if the recent terrorist attack in Rome would lead to a change in Italy's commitment to play a role in Lebanon and Sinai. "Absolutely not," he replied. The Italian prime minister said that the attack came from outside Italy. His aides pointed out that the method of operation and the Polish weapons used in it are similar to the method and the weapons used in previous operations in Paris and Vienna.

Spadolini said that what is important is that Italy will adhere to its role in the Middle East because it is seeking to occupy a prominent place in the West's dynamic policy in the area. The reasons for this stand are complex and interwined. Italy is now emerging from the stage of cautiousness in which it has lived for the past 30 years. Also, the Socialists are close to power in Italy, and they want to prove their worthiness in the field of foreign policy by supporting initiatives that serve Western interests. Moreover, there are strong trade relations between Italy and North Africa and other Mediterranean countries.

During his interview with me, Spadolini said that the Middle East area has proved important in showing the extent of the Italian diplomacy's success. The Italian prime minister went on: "The first thing that President Reagan did when I met him for the first time in Ottawa more than a year ago (the industrial states' summit) was to ask me whether Italy would participate in the multinational force in Sinai to ensure the Israeli forces' withdrawal." Spadolini's answer was affirmative.

Italy's participation with the United States in the Middle East has led to Spadolini's being invited to visit Washington later this month. The Middle East will be one of the major topics of the Italian-U.S. discussions.

Spadolini wishes to strengthen the international force in Lebanon (in fact more Italian troops were sent after my interview with him). He also wants the United States to use its position and prestige to prevent "any violation of human rights in Lebanon."

Spadolini added: "What we want is a balanced solution in the Middle East that will provide for restricting Israeli military strength." Although Spadolini did not meet Yasir 'Arafat during his recent visit to Rome, he, like many European leaders, is only postponing recognition of the PLO until the opportune moment. Nevertheless, Spadolini told me that his views are identical with those of President Pertini and the pope, after Pertini and the pope were accused by the pro-Israeli press, following the meeting with 'Arafat, of "encouraging Arab extremism and even Arab terror."

An influential counselor in the Italian Government told me: "We know that at a later stage we will come into conflict with certain forces in Lebanon. This is why we believe it necessary to increase the numbers of the U.S.-French-Italian forces to 15,000-20,000, so that this force can provide real assistance to the Lebanese Army in controlling all Lebanese territory and maintaining security. Of course, increasing these forces' numbers will increase Western influence in Lebanon. Italy, which for example has given guarantees to Malta against Libya, believes that the time has come for the West to help the moderate Arabs. This, at least, is what Spadolini says and believes in.

ESCAPED RED BRIGADE TERRORIST RECAPTURED

AU291537 Rome ANSA in English 1532 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Milan, October 29 -- A 28-year-old convicted terrorist who escaped from a maximum security prison last December 3 in a spectacular jailbreak was recaptured last night by carabinieri police in Milan in an operation which also netted an undisclosed number of terrorist suspects.

Susanna Ronconi, the 28-year-old daughter of a former Air Force officer, had served just over one year of a fourteen-year sentence she received from a Turin court when she and three other convicted female terrorists escaped from a hole blasted in the wall of the Rovigo prison last December. The explosion killed one passer-by. Her conviction in Turin came at the end of a trial on a series of charges related to her activities in the Red Brigades between 1976 and 1978, when she climbed to the top of the terrorist organization, and in the front line movement after 1978.

ROME PCI BODY EXPLAINS NAPOLEONE EXPULSION

PM271015 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 24 Oct 82 p 6

[Unattributed report: "Editor Roberto Napoleone Expelled From PCI"]

[Text] Rome -- The editor, Roberto Napoleone, has been expelled from the PCI. The decision was taken by the Rome Federal Control Commission, which met in accordance with item 54 of the party regulations. A communique states that "in past weeks, by granting a number of interviews to the press, Comrade Roberto Napoleone has created a political incident by prompting a press campaign against the party. This campaign has been carried out with statements released first to Milan's IL GIORNO, then to IL MESSAGGERO, on material which Comrade Paolo Robotti allegedly entrusted to him before his death.

"The Federation Control Commission emphasizes that nobody has asked, or intends to ask, Roberto Napoleone to place the material which he claims is in his possession at the party's disposal or not to publish it. He is free to do what he wants with this material. The fact remains that through his conduct, Roberto Napoleone has deliberately nurtured a press campaign against the party, thus violating the relationship of trust inherent in membership in our organization. For these reasons the Federation Commission has decided on his expulsion from the party, in accordance with item 54E of the party regulations."

Rome L'UNITA Comments

[L'UNITA editor Emanuele Macaluso commentary: "Editor Napoleone's 'Subtleties'"]

[Text] Yesterday the majority of Italian dailies gave incredible prominence to Roberto Napoleone's expulsion from the PCI, decided on unanimously by the Rome Federation Control Commission. The National Hydrocarbons Agency [ENI] newspaper IL GIORNO, supporter of the DC, was the one that went beyond the ridiculous.

Indeed, it carried the following huge front page banner headline: "Friend of Lenin's Expelled." Just like that. In other words, someone who fought in the October Revolution. And it did not stop at the front page, because further items followed in other parts of the paper. CORRIERE DELLA SERA reported the news in a prominent front page item, as if it were a major world event.

Try rereading how these and other newspapers reported the news of the expulsion from the PSI of members and intellectuals such as Tristano Codignola, Agnoletti, Ballardini, Bassanini and others. The use that these newspapers make of those who oppose the PCI shows that these newspapers make of those who oppose the PCI shows the small-mindedness of certain journalists, but also the tenacity of national and foreign forces in trying to weaken the PCI by whatever means. Whoever opposes it immediately becomes a fine person and a hero. Consider the contemptuous way in which the press attached the label "Kabul-ites" to comrades who thought differently from the PCI Directorate on Afghanistan or Poland, and how the same press tries to portray the same comrades as being pursued like the first Christian martyrs and as upholders of freedom, debate, democracy, tolerance and so forth.

But let us come to the facts that led to Roberto Napoleone's expulsion. On Wednesday 29 September Napoleone summoned a journalist from IL GIORNO and "granted" him an interview. Thus, and only thus, we learned that the papers left by Comrade Paolo Robotti, who died on 6 August, included a sealed envelope addressed to Napoleone. This envelope, the editor says, contains the names of comrades who, having emigrated to the USSR to escape fascism, were killed during the Stalinist repressions. In his interview, Napoleone says that "in these papers Robotti documents the precise responsibilities of certain communist leaders in these members' deaths." Then he adds: "I now have a great responsibility in my hands and I have not fully decided what to do with these papers." He had already taken a decision, and that was to give an interview. Indeed, only he knew about the sealed envelope and no journalist could have had the intuition to interview him on a subject unknown to anyone.

But let us proceed. Next Napoleone denied having made the remark about the Italian Communists' responsibility (which the interviewer confirmed, however) but, in another interview, with IL MESSAGGERO, returned to his disclosures and nondisclosures, while still hinting at doubts and mysteries, omissions and responsibilities. In other words, he did enough to spark off a major press campaign against the party and its leaders, past and present.

His bad faith and disloyalty reached their high point in both interviews when he referred to his relations with the party. In his interview with the newspaper that supports the DC, when the interviewer asks him why, as an editor, he did not publish everything, Napoleone replies: "I am a politically committed editor enrolled in the PCI, so perhaps my final decision will be to give all these papers to the PCI's archives, and then the party will decide what to do with them." Consider the subtlety of that "perhaps," which is the interpretative key to the entire interview. In IL MESSAGGERO (a newspaper supporting the PSI) Napoleone says precisely as follows: "In any case I am prepared to hand these papers of Robotti's to my party, which can then decide what to do with them. It is too great a responsibility for me. Barring any subsequent factors that could occur and persuade me otherwise, we shall see." There is another "subtlety" here in his "barring," which speaks volumes. It is clear to anyone that if Roberto Napoleone wanted to hand the documents to the PCI, there was no need to turn to IL GIORNO and IL MESSAGGERO to inform them of it, and there was no need for any authorization or permission if he wanted to publish them.

Napoleone neither published Robotti's documents nor entrusted them to our archives but used them to send "messages" with his "perhapses" and his "barrings" and to unleash a scandalistic and infamatory campaign against the PCI, as can be seen from all today's and yesterday's newspapers. But the PCI has nothing to hide, nothing to request and nothing to give, so these messages could not be, and were not, heeded. The only sure and incontrovertible fact is Napoleone's disloyalty to the party of which he was a member. And it is this fact that prompted the Federation Control Commission to adopt, as was its duty, a message perfectly in line with the letter and the spirit of party regulations.

He was speaking at a dinner given in his honor by Gen Melo Egidio, chief of the Armed Forces General Staff, at Sao Jorge Castle in Lisbon. Maputo Report on Visit

MB011356 Maputo in English to Southern Africa 1100 GMT 1 Nov 82

[Text] The Portuguese Armed Forces have started their full cooperation with the Armed Forces of Mozambique. The chief of the Portuguese General Staff, Melo Egidio, said this in Lisbon yesterday during lunch in honor of the visiting Mozambican minister of defense, Lt Gen Alberto Chipande. General Egidio said the two countries should work together in search of solutions that would serve the interests of the people of Portugal and Mozambique -- peoples who know each other very well.

In reply, General Chipande said the meeting reflected the profound historical and cultural ties which link the two peoples. There was a time when the Portuguese and the Mozambican armies were in opposing sides, he said. But despite this, they have managed to wipe out fascism; to defend the peace that both peoples wanted. The time has dome, General Chipande said, to join hands and establish defenses for firm and secure cooperation. The Mozambican defense minister leaves Portugal tomorrow to pay a visit to Britain.

LD292052 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Excerpts] At the ceremony officially marking the cessation of activity of the Council of the Revolution, its spokesman, Lt Col Vitor Alves made an analysis of the country's political and economic situation. Describing the prospects ahead as disquieting, Vitor Alves said that on the last day of its existence the Council of the Revolution is assailed by many concerns and anxieties.

[Begin Alves recording] The concerns and anxieties expressed by the Council of the Revolution on its last day in office are due to the social climate of frustration, disenchantment and even despondency that gradually has taken root in Portuguese society and which often manifests itself in a dangerous lack of faith in the effectiveness of the democratic institutions. This is a virus which must be fought. However, it must be recognized that the malaise does not lie with the people, rather it stems from the incapacity revealed by the political forces for finding adequate answers to the people's aspirations for greater progress and well-being, for greater equality and justice. The malaise stems from the apparent lack of political alternatives which would make possible a true democratic choice and possibly provide a way out of the present deadlock and crisis in the system. The malaise lies with the lack of effective destiny, thus bringing about the atrophy and weakening of representative democracy.

The malaise lies in the continued insistence on a political mode of speech that no longer has much in common with social reality, in recourse to oratorical styles and to a stifled rhetoric that distorts reality. It lies in a lack of ethical and political consistency that adulterates and perverts the very practice of democracy and seriously compromises the transparence and honesty which should regulate the relationship between the institutions affecting the solidity and foundations of the democratic state of law. The malaise lies in the persistent recourse to methods of interparty struggle which, when all is said and done, serve only to discredit the political parties and the politicians who find themselves regarded with growing mistrust by broad sectors of the population. GONZALEZ ON NATO PARTICIPATION, EUROPEAN DEFENSE

PA011433 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1120 GMT 1 Nov 82

[By Ramon-Luis Acuna]

[Text] Paris, 1 Nov (EFE) -- Felipe Gonzalez, the future president of Spain, has defined here his country's new foreign policy by saying that "Spain's exit from NATO, in case it should occur, does not have to be received badly among the friendly Western countries." In statements for the magazine POLITIQUE ETRANGERE, the new winner of the legislative elections expresses the firm belief that there are other formulas to contribute to the defense of the West "without the need to join an alliance like NATO."

Among these alternate formulas, Gonzalez stresses that of an "autonomous project of a European community for defense" ["proyecto autonomo de Comunidad Europa de defensa"] which his party wishes to introduce.

According to the young European statesman, "Concerning NATO, the PSOE [Spanish Socialist Workers Party] believes in submitting to the people's will as expressed in a referendum. [Quotation marks as received]

This new Spanish stance does not mean that "the cultural values of the West" won't be "firmly defended both inside and outside our borders." Furthermore, this change in stance is reinforced by the "defensive solidarity that Spain maintains through a bilateral treaty with the United States and the defensive solidarity that might derive from future treaties with the European Continent."

In his statement, which was simultaneously published in Spain by the monthly magazine MAYO, Felipe Gonzalez made it clear that "if the contents of the bilateral agreements between Spain and the United States respond in the future to the idea of equality, which must be the rule between two sovereign nations, the PSOE will maintain this military alliance with the American state."

For the Socialist leader, its definitive integration and alignment within NATO "does not benefit Spain." It does not benefit it because due to this situation "the negotiations with the EEC have not been speeded up, and the United Kingdom has not changed its stand of vetoing the decolonization of Gibraltar."

Not only have these issues not been resolved, but they are "more entangled every day," Gonzalez commented before going on to review these issues.

The solution of the conflict between Spain and Great Britain regarding Gibraltar "is completely independent of Spain's membership in or withdrawal from NATO." The PSOE does not accept the description of Gibraltar as a "strategic" colony connected with Europe's defense.

"Felipe," the name by which the Socialist leader is familiarly called, wants the "immediate decolonization" of Gibraltar and declares himself willing to resume negotiations with Great Britain. In this regard, the PSOE wishes "to count at all times" on the inhabitants of Gibraltar, who are isolated from the rest of Spain. This is a situation that he wants to resolve promptly.

There is no other possible market in Spain's future than the EEC, and the head of the next Socialist government feels that "naturally, there will be an open dialogue" with the French socialist Government, which opposes Spain's entrance into the EEC.

Although he predicts that there will be a "Madrid-Paris" rapprochement, Gonzalez can foresee the difficulties inherent to this matter, especially when he says that since his government will defend Spain's national interests "at any cost, it can understand that our French Socialist neighbors would do the same."

Nonetheless, he expects "greater sincerity" in this matter, and he proposes a search for new negotiating formulas for Spain to join the treaty of Rome, and especially to implement the practice of definitely closing those chapters which have already been negotiated separately.

PSOE'S MORAN GIVES VIEWS ON NEW FOREIGN POLICY

PM011505 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 Oct-1 Nov 82 p 2

[Interview with PSOE Foreign Policy spokesman Fernando Moran by "Th. M." in Madrid -- date not given]

[Text] Madrid -- A policy with Gaullist overtones -- that was how Mr Fernando Moran, the PSOE's main expert on international questions and a senator in the last parliament, defined the foreign policy strategy which his party will follow once in government.

"We do not think that all international problems should be approached from the angle of East-West opposition, because such a concept is bound to generalize local conflicts. That must be avoided, especially in such a sensitive region as the Mediterranean."

Mr Moran denied that the differences between the outgoing Spanish Government and the PSOE are limited to the problem of NATO membership. "It is our overall concept of international policy which is different," he stressed. "Spain has so far essentially tried to obtain legitimization of its new democratic regime from other countries, especially Western Europe. That is not enough. We, too, firmly support our country's entry into the EEC, but that cannot be the sole axis of our policy. In the same way, recognition that we belong to the Western world should not prevent us from seeking greater autonomy within it."

A Referendum

Although the PSOE program makes provision for a referendum to decide whether to keep Spain in NATO -- to which the Socialists are opposed -- it does not specify the date of that referendum. "We do not want to rush it, because we must give our partners time to make the vital readjustments in preparation for our possible withdrawal," our interlocutor stated. "What we must do immediately, however, is to freeze the current negotiations on our participation in the alliance's integrated military organization. One of our main objectives is to contribute to world detente, and we will not achieve that by joining a military bloc and thus altering the international balance of forces. That is particularly true since NATO membership does not improve our defense capability and reduces our influence in other regions, such as Latin America or the Arab world." However, Mr Moran added: "Nonetheless, Spain does not want to reduce the West's overall defense capability. That is why it accepts the U.S. right to use four bases on Spanish territory."

With regard to entry into the EEC, Mr Moran stated that it depends on "a political agreement with Paris which must be allembracing. France is potentially the ideal partner for us, given our similar interests and concepts in the international policy sphere. The problem is that the French Government has not had a Spanish policy for a long time and that today it does not have a Mediterranean policy which is in keeping with its European policy."

Finally, with regard to Gibraltar, Mr Moran hinted that a Socialist government might quickly open the border between the rock and the mainland, ending the blockade imposed by Franco in 1969. At the same time, it would present the Spanish claim to the United Nations.

POPE ARRIVES FOR VISIT; ACTIVITIES REPORTED

AU020940 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Madrid, November 2 -- Talks with Spanish Government authorities and with Socialist Premier-elect Felipe Gonzalez will make this the most political day of Pope John Paul II's "purely religious" visit to Spain. The church leader is also scheduled to pay a visit to the royal family at the Zarzuela Palace and celebrate a requiem mass for the dead at the De la al Mudeva Cemetery.

The pope arrived in this Roman Catholic country for a ten-day visit on Sunday, three days after the Spanish electorate swept Gonzalez's Socialist Workers' Party into power. He took pains to stress at the airport that his visit was of "a purely religious nature, above all political matters". He spent the entire day Monday, in fact, asserting the religious message that marked the life of St. Theresa of Avila, a church mystic and reformer, in commemoration of the 400th anniversary of her death.

Early in the morning he went to the medieval town of Avila, where Teresa was born in 1515 and where she became a nun and reformer of the Carmelite order. Three thousand cloistered nuns greeted the pope from Rome at Teresa's Monastery of the Incarnation and showed that they knew very well what "consumer society" is all about by the multitude of tape recorders they carried, for the occasion.

The pope extolled the virtues of silence and complained that it was not observed enough in this day and age. Many of the nuns were visibly embarrassed when they ventured out of the monastery with the pope for the first time in 30, 40 and, in at least one case, 52 years.

John Paul celebrated mass for an estimated 1 million outside the walls of the city. King Juan Carlos, his wife Sofia and their children were in the front row. Later in the days, the pope travelled to Alba de Tormes, some 50 miles away, where St. Teresa died on October 4, 1582. There, he ended the fourth centennial celebrations by recalling the mystic who through ecstasies, actions and ideas, was able to transmit an effective message of renovation to the church, which at the time was involved in drafting the counter-reform at the Council of Trent.

At the nearby pontifical university of Salamanca, the Polish-born pope indicated the years of the Council of Trent (1545-1563) and the period immediately following it as the "golden era" of Spanish theology. Today's theologues, he said, should take their example and pursue the guidelines laid down by the second Vatican Council in 1960's which he added, offer the same creative response to today's cultural requirements as the Trent Council did 400 years ago.

FRENCH PREMIER CONGRATULATES SOCIALISTS' SUCCESS

[Text] Carlos Castillo reports from Paris:

[Begin recording] In a note released early this afternoon, French Premier Pierre Mauroy ays that in terms of its extent and significance the resounding success of the Spanish Socialists is the most important event of the post-Franco period. He then added: I do not ignore the fact that between our two countries there still exist misunderstandings and obstacles which must be overcome. The entry of Spain into the EEC is a common concern. We must seriously work together to effect it. Our intention of achieving this cannot be doubted. Premier Mauroy concluded by saying: It is a calm people with their minds made up which have expressed themselves in massive numbers by their vote -- expressed their aim of living in peace and freedom and their confidence in the democratic institutions which they have bestowed upon themselves. FLAWS IN U.S. CALL FOR GAS FIELD EXPLORATION

[Editorial: "Norwegian and Soviet Gas"]

[Text] The skeptical views expressed by U.S. Paris Ambassador Evan Galbraith on the future prospects for Norwegian gas production are very similar to the views already put forward by U.S. Government representatives in talks with Norwegian politicians. They are also found in the assessment U.S. Under Secretary of Defense Richard Perle made during the talks he had here in Oslo in June. In short, the U.S. view is Norwegian gas will come too late -- Soviet gas could take over so much of the market in the course of the 1990's that there will be no room for Norwegian gas sales. Based on this, they reached the conclusion that exploitation of Norwegian gas fields in the north should be speeded up.

There is not much wrong in the logic of this argument, but it will not do as a guideline for a practical policy. First, it is doubtful whether the timetable could be speeded up enough to make any appreciable difference, even if Norway succeeded in scraping together the record investments necessary. Second, the technology needed has not been developed or tested yet, and gas production under the climatic conditions of the northern waters of the Norwegian Sea is not something you start without perparation.

The central point in U.S. worries is that large parts of industrialized Western Europe will become dependent on Soviet energy. It is difficult to see what the reservations are toward such a development, if it ever comes. In the first place there are disadvantages to being dependent on other parts of the world, and, secondly, this means that the dependence will be spread in such a way that no single supplier, and certainly not the Soviet Union, acquires such a dominant position that it could easily be tempted to exert political pressure.

On one point Ambassador Galbraith is right: The Soviet price policy with its short-term contracts and its prices below the market price suggest that the intention could be to underbid and consequently knock out other suppliers, including Norway. However, in a situation in which Norway has sold the whole of its gas production up to the year 1990 there is little we could do about this. As expensive as the exploitation of the gas fields now ready for exploration is bound to be -- and the bill would be much bigger if exploitation were to be accelerated -- the Soviet Union with its present overcapacity and its special price policy would always be in a position to sell more cheaply if it wanted to.

And given the situation in which the industrialized nations now find themselves, it is also most unlikely that they would commit themselves to giant investments in Norwegian waters. Such a commitment would also mean a promise to buy the gas when it would come on line. At present it is totally impossible to predict how much energy Western Europe will need in the 1990's, and no matter how appealing Ambassador Galbraith's assessments may be from a theoretical and security policy viewpoint, they are bond to fail in the face of the problems caused by the investment climate and other practical difficulties.

PRESS HIT FOR SNIPING AT BODSTROM'S VIEW OF U.S.

PM011013 Stockholm STOCKHOLMSTIDNINGEN in Swedish 20 Oct 82 p 38

[Editorial: "Bodstrom again"]

[Text] One Swedish foreign minister tells the UN General Assembly: "The conflict in El Salvador is a struggle between the remnants of an oligarchy and the people's demands for greater justice."

Another says: "In Central America centuries of oppression have given rise to a revolutionary situation."

One foreign minister says: "Our criticism of the United States covers the U.S. support for a regime which is growing increasingly more isolated and which is deeply responsible for a comprehensive reign of terror against the population."

The other says: "It is obvious that a foreign power, the United States, is playing an important role in holding up shaky dictatorships."

We say: There is a consistency in these views and this characterizes Sweden's assessment of what is happening in Central America. It is only nuances and sometimes not even that, which distinguish the first foreign minister, Ola Ullsten, from the second, Lennart Bodstrom.

For that matter there is also consistency in the actions of the United States and the Reagan administration. There are protests against Sweden when the nonsocialist government's foreign minister criticizes the United States and there are protests when the Social Democratic government's does so. Former Foreign Ministry under secretary and current Paris Ambassador Sverker Astrom rightly removed the drama from the whole business on Monday evening [18 October] in an interview on the Kanalen radio program.

It is, therefore, all the more surprising that some nonsocialist newspapers -- not only papers which support the Moderate Coalition Party, but also the Center Party's chief organ, SKANSKA DAGBLADET and an otherwise sensible liberal newspaper like NERIKES ALLEHANDA -- are unable to refrain from taking the U.S. reaction as a basis for crass attacks on Lennart Bodstrom (and the new Foreign Ministry under secretary). Social Democratic ministers must of course expect to be hunted by political opponents. The attacks are now in full swing. This is all part of the distribution of roles in politics, and shame on any Social Democratic minister who is not criticized in SVENSKA DAGBLADET or EXPRESSEN.

But the present criticism of Lennart Bodstrom possesses a meddlesomeness and an opportunist quality which leaves an unpleasant taste in the mouth. Nor is it to be found in all nonsocialist newspapers. DAGENS NYHETER, EXPRESSEN, and NORRTELJE TIDNING among those we have read, disassociate themselves from it. However it is to be found in enough newspapers to be worth pointing out, and to stress what should go without saying -- that Swedish foreign policy and Sweden's right to stigmatize violence and oppression have not changed as a result of the change in governments.

BODSTROM ON FINNISH TRIP, NORDIC ZONE, SUBS, PLO

LD012054 Helsinki International Service in Finnish 1600 GMT 1 Nov 82

[Text] Swedish Foreign Minister Lennart Bodstrom, who will arrive on a visit to Finland on 2 November, said in Stockholm a moment ago that he will not be bringing any new initiatives concerning the nuclear-free zone in the North. Bodstrom says he is coming to Finland primarily on a familiarization visit. Correspondent Juhani Lompolo interviewed the foreign minister before his departure from Stockholm.

[Begin Lompolo recording] New Swedish Foreign Minister Lennart Bodstrom will not be bringing any new initiatives concerning the nuclear-free zone in the north, but he is coming to Finland in order to hear the thoughts of the Finnish Government on the matter. This is how Foreign Minister Bodstrom described the purpose of his visit to the Finnish Broadcasting Company. He also said he is coming to Finland in order to become acquainted with his Finnish counterpart and other government representatives.

Foreign Minister Bodstrom also noted that the major issues in Swedish foreign policy are formed on a very extensive basis in the Riksdag, so that no very great changes are to be expected in the policy of the new Social Democratic Government. Bodstrom referred to the statement made in the Riksdag about the northern nuclear-free zone, which says that the government will maintain contacts with the governments of the other Nordic countries on this matter. On this basis, Foreign Minister Bodstrom is going first to Finland and later in November to Norway and Denmark.

In the past few days there has been a discussion in Sweden on the statement made by Maj Beitt Theorin, newly-appointed disarmament negotiator, according to which -- contrary to views expressed earlier -- the inclusion of the Baltic in the nuclear-free zone is not a precondition for the establishment of such a zone. According to Theorin, the Baltic would naturally become part of the zone afterward. Foreign Minister Bodstrom did not want to make an accurate and specific statement on the matter, but expressed the hope that the Baltic would be included in a possible nuclear-free zone.

In discussing with Finnish journalists the recent unsuccessful submarine hunt conducted by Sweden, he said that the government believes that confidence in Sweden's neutrality has not decreased on the international scale because of the submarine fuss. In his view, the superpowers have not questioned Sweden's desire to remain nonaligned. On the other hand, in the aftermath of the submarine hunt the Swedish Government has made it clear that in the future the government could order the military to bomb a foreign submarine in order to destroy it.

When he was asked further whether the Swedish Government intended to invite PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat to visit Sweden, Bodstrom said that the government does not have any such intentions. Bodstrom said, however, that he believes that Israel and the PLO should be able to negotiate on the solution of their mutual problems. [end recording]

USSR Talks 'Very Useful'

NC292110 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Excerpt] President of the Republic Kiprianou completed his talks with the Soviet leadership, and in the afternoon left Moscow for Riga, capital of the Soviet Republic of Latvia. Before departing for Riga, President Kiprianou met with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, with whom he discussed various issues connected with the Cyprus problem, including the issue of the missing persons.

In a statement he made to the journalists, who had accompanied him from Moscow to Riga, the president of the republic expressed special satisfaction at the talks he had with the Soviet leadership and stressed that they had been very useful. The visit to the Soviet Union, he added, is very interesting and significant. He also said that his talks yesterday with the Soviet leadership, headed by President Brezhnev, and his talks today with Chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers Tikhonov and Foreign Minister Gromyko had been most substantive and had covered the international situation, bilateral relations and, naturally, the Cyprus issue in all its aspects.

KHARAVYI ON U.S. COORDINATOR APPOINTMENT

NC291249 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 29 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Editorial: "The Responsibility of the United States"]

[Text] The appointment of Mr Christian Chapman, "senior official of the diplomatic service" of the United States, as "special coordinator" for the Cyprus issue presages a new intensive U.S. involvement in the attempt to find a Cyprus solution.

The more active U.S. involvement in the Cyprus issue -- instead of giving us hope -- fills us with concern and fear because it reminds us of the old, unacceptable plans of Ball, Acheson and Lemnitzer. It even reminds us of the recent American-Canadian-British plan. It reminds us of the U.S. responsibility, as a leading NATO power, in the great crime of the 1974 coup and invasion. It reminds us of the negative and hostile U.S. stand at many sessions of the UN General Assembly and the Security Council.

We do not deny that the U.S. Government could play, both in the past and at present, a more decisive role in the solution of the Cyprus issue in its capacity as leader of NATO and as a permanent member of the Security Council. The fact that the United States could play a positive role was pointed out to it many times not only by us, who asked it to put pressure on Turkey and compel it to comply with the UN resolutions, and not only by the Soviet Union which proposed U.S.-USSR cooperation in promoting a just and lasting solution, but also by the U.S. Congress which in 1975 reached the point of imposing an embargo on the export of arms to Turkey.

Even today, there is only one way in which the United States can contribute toward the achievement of the correct, just and lasting solution of the Cyprus issue: to press Turkey's junta to abandon its intransigence and accept a solution based on the UN resolutions and the summit agreements which have also been signed by Denktas. The key to the solution are the end of the Turkish occupation, and the "immediate withdrawal of foreign troops" as mentioned in the UN resolutions.

Greece has repeatedly stated, through its Prime Minister Papandreou, that it is willing to withdraw the small unit of the Greek forces in Cyprus [ELDYK] and finance UN security forces for a transitional period.

Although the official statement of the U.S. State Department defines "the support of the intercommunal negotiations being conducted under the UN auspices in Cyprus" and assistance to the UN secretary general as the purpose of Mr Chapman's appointement, our people are justified in being concerned over the more active U.S. involvement. This is so, not because our people do not want the assistance of all countries toward a Cyprus solution; not because they do not believe in the decisive role the United States could play; but because the NATOite Turkish occupation could be terminated even today if only the United States persuaded by force the junta to accept a solution based on the UN resolutions and on international law. Mr Chapman's involvement in the work of the UN secretary general, under whose auspices the international talks are conducted, can only bring about difficulties and confusion. Other mediators and coordinators are not needed. Mr Perez de Cuellar is well aware of the Cyprus issue and must be assisted by the Security Council and other authorized organizations.

If the U.S. Government really wants now, 8 years after the intervention of NATOite troops in Cyprus and 8 years after the NATOite occupation of 37 percent of the territory of the Republic of Cyprus, to assist in the solution of the Cyprus problem (and the inter-NATO dispute it has caused), the only thing it has to do is pressure and persuade by force its economically, militarily and politically dependent [Turkish] junta to comply with the relevant UN resolutions, the summit agreements and with international law.

TURKS ISSUE ULTIMATUM ON GREEK PROPOSALS

NC020907 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 2 Nov 82 pp 1, 10

[Text] The Turkish side has sent an ultimatum to the Cyprus Government demanding a clarification of its positions on all aspects of the Cyprus issue by September 1983 or else the Turkish side will proceed with a "reappraisal of the situation" and the adoption of all those measures which, in its opinion, are imperative.

According to our exclusive information: The Turkish ultimatum has been handed to the government through the United Nations and calls on the Greek Cypriot side to submit complete proposals on all aspects of the Cyprus issue.

The Turkish side claimed that since it has submitted concrete proposals on both the constitutional and territorial issues, the Greek side is also obliged to respond by submitting its own concrete proposals.

We are informed that the Turkish side demands that the Greek proposals be submitted immediately, without further delay, at the negotiating table. However, the government notes that such a move is impossible since we are in a preelection period, which does not facilitate the adoption of such critical decisions.

However, the government said that after the presidential elections it will proceed with the adoption of "serious decisions" on the Cyprus issue.

Following these assurances, the Turkish side agreed to move the date for meeting the demands of its ultimatum to September 1983 but warned at the same time that if the Greek Cypriot side does not submit concrete proposals on all aspects of the Cyprus issue, it will proceed with the adoption of decisions.

Reliable political circles have told O AGON that the Turkish side may break off the dialogue on the premise that it has submitted comprehensive proposals on all the aspects, whereas the Greek side refuses to reciprocate even though it has been given enough time to submit its own proposals.

The same circles have also not ruled out the possibility of [the Turkish side] adopting additional measures such as the declaration of a separate state, settlement of Famagusta and so forth.

The same circles have also remarked that recent threatening statements by Turkish Cypriot leaders are not irrelevant to the whole situation that is developing.

In this connection, it is recalled that just recently, Mr Denktas has threatened a "reappraisal of the situation" and the adoption of measures, implying that breaking off the dialogue is included in these measures. Turkish Cypriot pseudo premier Cagatay has also stated that "crucial days" are awaiting Cyprus.

MILITARY AIRPORTS REPORTEDLY BEING BUILT IN NORTH

NC011108 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS TIS DHEVTERAS in Greek 1 Nov 82 p 1

[Excerpts] Lately, the Turkish occupation forces in the north have begun work on struction of new major military projects for the purpose of facilitating the Turkish Air Force.

According to reliable information, which the Republic's responsible authorities also have, some of these projects aim at improving existing airports and building a new one at a location considered suitable for military aircraft.

A long time ago, the Turkish forces began to reorganize the airport near the small Turkish Cypriot village of Krini situated west of Geunyeli. This airport could not operate because of the topographical position of the runways in relation to the high Pendadaktylos Mountains which are very close. Thus, the aircraft could not land and the Krini runway was abandoned.

However, Turkish specialists replanned and built a new runway "facing" the opposite direction of the old one which they also extended. It must also be pointed out that other areas of the airport have been enlarged so that aircraft and helicopters can land simultaneously.

The new military airport, which the Turkish occupation forces are trying to build is in the heart of the Mesaoria [plain] near the village of Nea Sparti, (Gaidhouras).

The third project concerns extensions and other work at the occupied Tymbou airport.

AVEROF HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE: GOVERNMENT REPLY

NC292235 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] New Democracy Chairman Evangelos Averof gave a press conference today to foreign journalists and Greek political correspondents. The conference covered the results of recent municipal and community elections, which Mr Averof said, show that PASOK suffered a decline and New Democracy and the KKE were strengthened. Mr Averof noted the unprecedented terrorism that was exercised during the elections. He compared data and stressed that the election results are not analyzed by numbers alone but also in terms of political messages. Mr Averof concluded by saying that one of these messages is New Democracy's supporters are returning, but they want the party to be multilaterally revived, something that will take place soon.

Answering questions, Mr Averof stated he is not yet ready to say if the New Democracy revival will be toward more conservatism or more liberalism. He said, however, the party's positions will be very clear and that this revival will take place soon, and if possible, in the personnel sector.

Answering a question on his reference to terrorism and if he meant there isn't a mild political climate in the country -- something the president of the republic recently noted to the contrary -- Mr Averof replied that he insists on his view about terrorism and the problem with a mild climate, which has always been supported by the president of the republic, is how to implement it. Mr Averof said for 6 months he had purposely exercised mild opposition even though it did not satisfy his friends. However, he said, now that a disastrous course is being followed, he is abandoning the mild climate in hopes it may produce the opposite results.

In talks with the political correspondents of Athens press, and radio and television networks, the government spokesman made the following statement referring to certain points of the press conference by the leader of the official opposition party Mr Averof:

From the first day the government took power, it had as its first goal the reconciliation of the Greek people. Unfortunately, one could say Mr Averof, in repeated statements has division and polarization as his goal. Thus, once again the Greek people are given the opportunity to judge Mr Averof's tactics. We believe that the Greek people desire a mild political climate, a fact that was proved the day after the parliamentary elections when power passed quite normally to PASOK. Absolutely nothing happened either in the economic sector, where on such occasions a certain sensitivity is shown, or in the social sector. Perhaps Mr Averof thinks that the creation of conflict benefits him politically. Mr Averof will soon ascertain that he is adding another misconception to the many others he has had so far.

KKE APPRAISES MUNICIPAL ELECTION RESULTS

["Text" of KKE Central Committee 27 October Statement on Municipal Elections]

[Excerpts] The KKE Central Committee welcomes the great democratic victory in the municipal elections. The second round of the municipal elections completed the people's victory of the first Sunday confirming and strongly emphasizing the political conclusions from the first round.

1. It confirmed the great majority of our people express their desire for changes in the country's life. Nevertheless, it must be stressed that "new democracy" is maintaining a strong influence and tries to exploit with demagogy the people's problems and the government policy does not correspond to the people's expectations.

2. It confirmed the need and great effectiveness of the broader democratic cooperation which has secured the democratic victory in almost all the municipalities of the country. hrough its firm unifying policy, the KKE contributed determinatively to achieving the democratic victory throughout the country and particularly in Athens, Thessaloniki and Piraievs. This brings up a significant lesson of unity that must be utilized by all those who truly want change in our country: It constitues a new unifying chapter that will give a stronger impetus to the people's unity for a true change in our country. Moreoever, it answers to every anti-unity policy and attempt to divide the people's forces; it vindicates our party's preelection efforts to accomplish the broadest democratic cooperation on a pan-Hellenic scale that did not bear fruit because of the political choices by the ruling party.

3. It confirmed the great success for the slates supported by the KKE whether confronted by slates supported by conservative forces, or slates supported by the government party and other forces. Irrespective of party affiliations, the people overwhelmingly voted for most of the slates supported by the KKE in order to secure municipal authorities who would consistently struggle to resolve their problems, oppose arbitrary actions and discrimination, defend the independence of municipalities and communes and who would constructively oppose monotonous negation and blind subjugation to the central authority.

The KKE Central Committee has decided that all the party organizations discuss the first conclusions drawn from the battle of the municipal elections. It has also stressed the need to further discuss the experiences from this complicated battle and from the tactics of the other political forces. In particular, it points out the need that every democrat, whatever party he may belong to, and every follower of the change, take a responsible stance toward a government procedure in the municipal elections which, in many instances, was characterized by interventions of the state machinery in the elections battle, a bias by the mass media, favoritism, the exercise of pressures by the attempt to revive and utilize anticommunist prejudice. The Central Committee has ascertained that the people disapprove all the more of the strategy of "self-centrism" as well as the attempts by the government party to impose this strategy through various means including the contemplated unacceptable electoral law which serves the bipartisan [dhikommatika] plans. Following this realization, the Central Committee calls every democrat and every democratic quarter to joint action in voting for the simple and genuine proportional representation [electoral system], for the establishment of an electoral system that would secure the genuinely representative expression of the people and could produce a firm, democratic ruling of the country in the direction of a true change based on all the people and their progressive forces.

KENAN EVREN DISCUSSES CONSTITUTION IN KAYSERI

TA301152 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Speech by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Kayseri on 30 October -- recorded]

[Summary] My dear Kayseri citizens, I am so happy to be here at last. I was invited many times, but I did not have the opportunity to come visit you until now. Kayseri citizens are as precious to me as the citizens of other provinces. We celebrated the establishment of our republic yesterday. I once again extend my congratulations on the occasion and wish you many happy tomorrows under a republican administration.

"Following the 12 September operation, various circles of ten suggested to us; if you want this nation to achieve tranquillity and comfort and if you want the situation in the country to improve you should remain in power for at least 5 years. There were also those who said that a 10-year period would be the right course. I and my friends were not influenced by these suggestions. We knew that this country has sufficient political experience. We believed that if laws which could not be enacted until today were enacted and if the constitution was prepared in a way to suit the Turkish nation we could make a transition to a democratic parliamentary system within 3 years. We set our program accordingly. As a matter of fact, we have enacted 409 laws until now and, most importantly, we have prepared a constitution which will not bring about another 12 September. My dear citizens, 409 laws were enacted in the last 2 years and 49 were enacted during the year prior to the operation. Now it is up to you to make a comparison."

Soon after the operation, those who said that the operation was necessary, both from the left and the right, upon seeing that the unlimited rights and freedoms existing in the 1961 Constitution were being limited in the new one being prepared, began -- to use their own term -- to bombard the new constitution. They even criticized those articles that were the same in the old constitution. They wrote and spoke as though this new constitution had no positive aspects.

You will notice that I did not refer to this issue until I began my tour to familiarize the nation with the constitution. I only asked a couple of times whether they expected the same constitution or one that would bring more freedom and autonomy. As you know, during my tour I talked about the various provisions of the constitution. Here I will refer to various points as well and I will reply to criticisms.

"Now my dear Kayseri citizens, the emergency state situation was accepted in the 1961 Constitution. This provision existed in the 1961 Constitution as well. However, this state of emergency could be applied to natural disasters, such as floods, earthquakes and fires. The state of emergency could not be declared even in such cases because a law dealing with the issue had to be enacted. They were forced to declare marital law following anarchic incidents occurring in a single or a few places in the country.

"With the new constitution, the state of emergency has been accepted and it has been divided into two parts. The first one deals with natural disasters and a grave economic crisis and the second one with the spread of acts of violence and a serious disruption in public order. In both cases, the Council of Ministers which is to convene under the president will be able to declare a state of emergency in one or a few regions in the country or throughout the country. However, the decision will immediately be submitted for the Turkish Grand National Assembly's approval. If the assembly so desires, it can change the (?duration) of the state of emergency, it can lift it and it can extend it upon the request of the Council of Ministers, 4 months at a time. Moreover, the Council of Ministers can issue decree-laws during the state of emergency. However, these decree-laws will be submitted to the Turkish Grand National Assembly the same day. If the assembly so desires, it can amend or annul it.

"Obligations of citizens during a state of emergency, the way fundamental rights and freedoms will be limited or lifted, the authorities to be granted to civil servants, and methods of administration during the state of emergency will be regulated in accordance with a law to be enacted. In this way, there will be no need for frequent martial law declarations. First, a state of emergency will be declared. If incidents cannot be prevented with the declaration of a state of emergency, only then will martial law be declared."

This was one of the shortcomings of our previous constitutions. Every government used to complain about this shortcoming, but no step has ever been taken to amend the provisions. Had an initiative been taken, the opposition parties would have opposed it. This is why the government never attempted it. There is a tradition in Turkey; opposition means a party which will oppose every step to be taken by the government. It will oppose even if it believes that the law or the amendment is in the interest of the nation.

Now, my dear citizens, I would like to talk about professional establishments, some of which were derailed during the period prior to the 12 September operation. While they were supposed to function within their rules and regulations, some were engaged in political and ideological activities. Some of these establishments and associations were seized by a small group and used to serve the interests of various parties. Many times members of the profession were unable to save their association from the hands of these usurpers. The presidents or vice presidents of these professional establishments were capable of issuing declarations on behalf of the whole establishment opposing the adoption of a certain law, such as the one on the establishment of the state security courts. They behaved not like professional establishments, but like political parties.

The new constitution deals with this issue as well, stipulating that these associations be establishments that meet the joint demands of members of a certain profession, that facilitate their professional activities, that ensure that the profession develops in accordance with general benefits, and that ensure professional discipline and morals in relations among members and between members and the public. Those employed in the state public institutions and establishments and in the state economic enterprises are not obliged to join these establishments. They are free to do as they wish. Previously those who did not join professional association could not exercise their profession. These establishments will not be able to engage in activities outside their establishment goals. They will not be able to engage in politics and they will not be able to act jointly with labor unions, political parties and other associations.

"Various ill-intentioned people are using this as a means of negative propaganda. They say: You will not be able to engage in politics from now on. This is not true. They will not be able to engage in politics as a professional association. Every individual is free to join a political party and to engage in political activities. He cannot do so as part of an establishment. In addition, these establishments will be subject to the administrative and financial control of the state. Until now, they have been subjected to no control whatsoever. If they engage in activities outside their goals an end might be put to the duties of those responsible by court decisions."

These are the points that some oppose. The 1961 Constitution had none of these limitations. They were free to do whatever they pleased. Now that these limitations are introduced they claim that this constitution is archaic. This constitution brings no limitation to any establishment which functions within the framework of its goals, which does not cooperate with organizations aimed at dividing and destroying the nation and which does not harbor anarchists and terrorists under its roof. "If they are not going to engage in activities which I enumerated above, why are they concerned? This is very difficult to understand. They must have some secret aspirations. Had they dreamed that we would accept the 1961 Constitution as it is? Then what was the need for the 12 September operation?" Is it our duty to intervene every time the security and tranquillity of the country is threatened and to withdraw so that they can make the same mistakes again? We do not want to intervene each time. We want to return to our duty of defending the country.

"You see the political and economic situation in the world. There are dangerous developments in one or more regions in the world every single day. You are well aware of the Middle East situation. We are concerned that the future will be worse. A wrong step by certain forces in the region might take the whole region into bloodshed and fire. Will we be busy with domestic cleaning at such a time?"

My dear citizens, I would also like to talk about the section of the constitution dealing with rallies and demonstrations. The 1961 Constitution stipulated that everyone has the right to hold rallies and demonstrations without prior permission, provided that they were peaceful and unarmed. This right could only be legally limited for the purpose of securing public order. This is one of the rights that was most misused before the operation. We have taken this right from the West. However, this right is not used in the West the way it is used in our country. Those demonstrating in the West do not disrupt public order, municipal order and traffic. When demonstrations are held in our country all the security forces of the city have to be mobilized. Sometimes security forces have to be brought from neighboring cities for reinforcement. An incident might be expected any given moment. Arson, clashes and destructive activities have occurred many times in the past.

"Now I will tell you what kind of provisions our new constitution has in connection with the issue. First of all, as before, everyone will be able to hold peaceful and unarmed rallies and demonstrations without any prior permission. However, not anywhere he wishes. If necessary, the administrative authorities will be able to determine the place of the demonstration or the course of the march in order to prevent the disruption of city order." Furthermore, the pertinent authorities, in this case the governor's office, will be able to ban any given rally or demonstration or postpone it if there is a possibility that activities aimed at disrupting public order or violating national security requirements or destroying the major characteristics of the republic might occur. In addition, associations, foundations, labor unions and professional establishments will not be able to hold demonstrations or marches outside the framework of their establishment goals.

My dear listeners, while speaking in Diyarbakir I had said that political parties would not be able to have auxiliaries such as the youth and women's auxiliary. This was not interpreted correctly. It was understood to mean that women will not be able to engage in politics. This is false. We are opposed to various auxiliaries within a party. There is no discrimination between women and men. Since there is no men's auxiliary, there is no need for one for women either.

We have made use of our past experiences in preparing this constitution, which brings no limitations to the rights and freedoms of well-intentioned, law-abiding citizens and organizations. They will continue to enjoy all their rights and freedoms. This constitution is designed to prevent those who want to destroy these rights and freedoms and who wish to restore chaos in the country.

"I would like to draw your attention to another point. There is a great difference between the referendum of the 1961 Constitution and the current one. Our constitution is not based on parties. The previous one was backed by a party. We have not sought the support of such a party because, as you know, they have been closed down. We want to submit this constitution to your approval not for the strength derived from parties, but for that derived from the nation. The high-ranking administrators of the parties that have been closed down, and especially the leadership cadres, are engaged in a propaganda, through their former organization members, against this constitution. Do not worry; we are aware of it. Had we wanted to prevent them we could have done so. But we did not want to. We want this constitution to receive the approval of the majority despite their negative propaganda." We have not sought the support of anyone but the nation. We are based on the will of the nation. I believe that we still have your confidence. We say that this constitution will bring happiness and tranquillity to our country for a long time. We hope you believe in it as well.

I extend my love and respect to you all on my behalf, on behalf of the National Security Council members and the prime minister.

REPORT RELEASED ON DETAINED 'TERRORISTS'

NC281925 Paris AFP in English 1758 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] Ankara, Oct 28 (AFP) -- A total 56,486 people have been arrested in Turkey for "terrorist activities" during the 24 months that followed the military coup on September 12, 1980, according to a report published today by the country's Martial Law Command. Of this total, 24,598 are currently detained in military prisons. This number includes 17,540 still on trial, 6,512 who have already been sentenced and 546 being held under 45-day custody provisions, the report said.

No information was given on the remaining 31,888 people held, though some were thought to have been transferred to civil prisons and others released.

In addition, 203 former members of parliament, 80 lawyers, 46 journalists, 3,067 union workers and 15,685 members of "illegal associations" are also being brought to court, though 11,457 of these people have not been jailed prior to trial.

The report also said the fight against terrorism in the country had achieved some success. It said 742 "terrorist actions" had been committed following the coup -- of which 132 occurred between September 1981 and September 1982 -- against 33,000 attacks in the eight months preceding the military takeover.

The report also said 581 people had been killed during the first 24 months of military government, and described 218 of these people as "terrorists". A total 822,000 firearms of all sorts had been seized during the same period. Military courts have handed down 143 death sentences since martial law was declared on December 26, 1978. Twenty-one of the condemned had been executed, four had fled, and one person was killed "in a skirmish with security forces", the report said.

Accusations of "torture" were also mentioned in the report, which said 540 complaints of this nature had been made, investigations were undertaken in 53 of these cases, of 142 policemen subsequently arrested, 15 were sentenced, 34 acquitted and 93 are still on trial.

Of 204 "suspicious deaths" among detainees, investigations concluded that only five were due to torture or bad treatment, the report said. Twenty-five prisoners died of natural causes, 15 committed suicide, five were killed in escape attempts,and 25 were killed in other skirmishes, the report said.

It said 12 of the people on this list were still living and investigations continued on 117 other cases.

The report concluded that 7,390 "terrorists" were still sought by the authorities and that 25 people who fled abroad had been stripped of Turkish nationality.

TERCUMAN ON PRC DEPUTY CHIEF OF STAFF'S VISIT

NC291220 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 25 Oct 82 p 4

["This Is the World" column by Zafer Atay: "Turkey-China"]

[Text] Zhang Zhen, deputy chief of the general staff of the Chinese People's Republic, has visited Turkey. The Chinese minister of health is coming too. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen visited China a few months ago. Our head of state is planning to visit the Far East including China in the second week of December.

It is impossible to assess all these developments as "courtesy visits" or as mere "interesting coincidences." China has carried out great changes in its foreign policy. Beijing's policy is based on opposition to Moscow and the maintenance of close relations with the West. Naturally, China is carefully watching developments in the Middle East too. The team in power in Beijing at present supports NATO and the EEC. Undoubtedly, China is taking this course because it thinks it serves its national interests best. Whether you call it coincidence or not, Turkey's relations with China should be evaluated within the framework of these broad outlines.

China knows only too well that the Western alliance is the only force which can deter Moscow's expansionist policy. That is why Vice Premier Deng, who holds the reins in China, and his associates hope that the Western alliance, that is NATO, will continue to function smoothly. The same thing can be said of the EEC too. It is obvious to them that an economically powerful Europe is the greatest force that can counter Russian danger.

NATO and the EEC are important from China's national security point of view. We do not know what a dispersed NATO and an economically collapsed Europe mean to some, but to China it means more Soviet divisions on its frontiers and the removal of all obstacles in the way of Moscow's imperialist ambitions. Transferring the Russian divisions from the frontiers of a collapsed Europe to Manchuria is not at all difficult. These are the truths that lie at the center of the close Turkish-Chinese relations.

Turkey is a NATO country. It is a bridge that stretches to the Middle East. It has a long border with the Soviet Union. Although Turkey and China are far apart from each other, they have certain interests in common, such as a powerful Europe and a powerful Western alliance.

It is natural that certain speculations should be ventured in connection with the Chinese deputy chief of the general staff's visit. But thre is not much room for illusion on this matter. That is, it is not so easy for Turkey to enter the Chinese market and sell millions of dollars worth of goods. Words such as 'joint investments' are merely expressions of good will. At the root of these visits lies a Chinese desire to demonstrate strength. On the other hand, the West wishes to feel China on its side in certain initiatives it is planning to take in the near future toward resolving the Middle East question. The Reagan administration believes that even if China would not support the efforts to be exerted in this way, at least it would not obstruct them either.

Even if all these speculations proved abortive, it is important for Turkey to establish relations based on mutual respect with a country with a population of 1.1 billion, according to the latest census. We need strong and reliable friends to eliminate some of the troubles we encounter in our foreign policy.

SOCIALIST PARTY CONGRESS ENDS; KREISKY REELECTED

AU021348 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 30 Oct 82 pp 1-2

[Summary] After 3 days of deliberations, the 27th regular party congress of the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOE] ended yesterday at the Vienna Stadthalle. Chancellor Kreisky was reelected party chairman receiving 484 out of 489 valid votes. Also reelected was the entire SPOE Presidium, consisting of the following deputy party chairman: Karl Blecha, Heinz Fischer, Leopold Gratz, Hans Gross, Leopold Gruenzweig, Jolanda Offenbeck, Fred Sinowatz, Leopold Wagner and Theodor Kery. At the party Executive Committee election held on 28 October, Socialist Youth Chairman Josef Cap was not reelected following his attacks on Burgenland Provincial governor Theodor Kery on the first day of the party congress. [According to Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German on 29 October, page 1, the Election Commission nominated in Cap's place, Health Minister Kurt Steyrer, who was subsequently elected]

The SPOE Congress discussed 99 proposals and 26 draft resolutions, many of them dealing with the labor market situation. A number of proposals and resolutions were shelved pending further discussion in the party Executive Committee, while some others -- dealing with environmental protection, better training for physicians and questions of peace policy -- were adopted without discussion.

The party congress also unanimously adopted one resolution each on domestic and foreign policy. The former emphasizes that the safeguarding of jobs must have priority in economic policy and appeals ot the voters to give the SPOE a clear-cut majority in the "Austrian road" policy.

The foriegn policy resolution calls for the peaceful settlement of conflicts. "It states that the events in Poland are of the greatest importance far beyond that country's borders, and calls for implementation of the Palestinians' rights. It declares that new efforts are needed in the North-South conflict, and expressly condemns the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan." In his closing statement, Vice Chancellor Sinowatz stressed that after 12 years in power, the Socialists must continue to guard against falling victim to the temptations of power, and every Socialist should examine his own activities in this respect.

VOLKSSTIMME REPORTS ON 1978 ICA DOCUMENT

AU291346 [Editorial Report] Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German on 29 October on page 3 carries a 2,300-word report by Ignaz Jagersberger reporting part of the "country proposal plan on Poland" of the International Communications Agency (ICA), which it describes as a "'legal' front of the CIA." The report includes a facsimile reproduction of the upper part of a page of the ICA "program plan No. 5" -- "activities and projects," listing a number of grants for university professors and students of U.S.-Polish exchange programs, ranging from $10,500 to $125,000. The paper states that although the document dates back to 1978 -- 2 years before "Solidarity" was established -- its authors' aim even then was to sever Poland from the socialist camp and to destroy the socialist system in that country.

According to VOLKSSTIMME, the ICA/CIA document analyzes the chances of achieving this aim, listing the pros and cons, and provides guidelines for future work such as promoting contacts at all levels -- the universities, among independent intellectuals, and in the political field -- with the aim of promoting internal liberalization and expanding pluralism. The paper notes that virtually no U.S. money has gone to the Lublin Catholic University or other Polish church agencies, stressing that these institutions had "different financial sources." "Washington and the Vatican are marching separately, and obviously there were and are tactical differences of opinion on how to achieve Poland's rollback." Although the U.S. struggle against Poland has ended in defeat for the time being, as the counterrevolution which has come out into the open has been smashed, VOLKSSTIMME says in conclusion that the struggle will undoubtedly continue, though perhaps in somewhat different forms.

IRAN AIR FLIGHT ENGINEER DEFECTS IN VIENNA

AU021402 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 2 Nov 82 P 10

[Summary] The Iranian airline has again lost a crew member. After 34-year-old Captain Keyhan Jahanfakhr recently defected and asked for political asylum in Austria, this time flight engineer Mustafa Sanai, 27, defected on Saturday evening immediately after the Iran Air Boeing 727 landed at Schwechat Airport.

"In a teletype message to DIE PRESSE, Sanai declared that he was determined to no longer do any professional work for Khomeyni's regime of torture.' He explained this decision with his 'loathing of dictatorship and of the destruction of all personal and social freedoms.' The Khomeyni regime, he said, was responsible for the execution of over 20,000 people and the imprisonment of more than 50,000 of the 'best and most intelligent children of the people.'"

Although this time the Iranian aircraft had 3 pilots aboard as a precaution, the defection of the flight engineer delayed its departure: Only on Sunday evening was the Boeing 727 able to return to Tehran via Istanbul from Schwechat Airport.

NETHERLANDS

PUBLIC PRESSURE WILL PREVENT CRUISE DEPLOYMENT

PM021205 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 27 Oct 82 p 3

[Unnamed "own correspondent" report: "Van Agt's View That Netherlands Will Not Deploy Cruise Missiles]

[Text] The Hague -- It is Prime Minister van Agt's personal view that cruise missiles will never be deployed in the Netherlands. He thinks that there will be too much opposition from public opinion. Van Agt expressed his view in a confidential interview with British journalists who were receiving a briefing in The Hague for Queen Beatrix's mid-November state visit to Britain.

In the same interview, Van Agt remarked that he had found greater understanding in the United States for the Netherlands position. This understanding arose, he said, through asking the question as to how Americans would feel if cruise missiles were deployed on Long Island. Long Island is a densely populated part of New York State.

When the British journalists asked about the chances of survival of a new Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] - People's Party for Freedom and Democracy [VVD] cabinet, the outgoing prime minister said that he did not expect it to last long. He said that the CDA would be the cause of a break with the VVD. According to Van Agt, "internal surveys" have shown that the CDA rightwing has recently grown. If things did come to a break with the VVD, Van Agt said, the CDA would suffer losses in possible elections.

PLO TO OPEN INFORMATION OFFICE IN THE HAGUE

PM030945 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 26 Oct 82 p 3

[Unnamed "own diplomatic correspondent" report: "PLO Opening Office in The Hague"]

[Text] The Hague, 26 Oct -- The PLO will shortly open an information office in the The Hague. The office, which will not have diplomatic status, will be temporarily housed in the Arab League building. This was confirmed this morning by a Foreign Ministry spokesman.

As then Foreign Minister van der Stoel announced in 1977, no special permission is necessary for such an office. However, the Palestinian representatives must not interfere in Netherlands internal affairs and they must not endanger Netherlands relations with other states. This latter stipulation means that the office's activities must not damage Netherlands relations with Israel.

The head of the PLO office will be 'Abdul Rahman 'Alawi, who is presently second in command at the PLO mission in Bonn.

UNSC SEAT DEMANDS IMPROVED MINISTRY PERFORMANCE

PM011443 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 21 Oct 82 p 7

[Editorial: "Satisfaction"]

[Text] The election of the Netherlands to the UN Security Council is a pleasant success for our diplomatic corps. In the last few months there has been intensive lobbying on all fronts. It is satisfying that the final decision by the UN General Assembly was made quickly and quietly.

The seat on the Security Council means additional responsibility and an additional burden for the new minister of foreign affairs. The Netherlands position on all problems and crises which arise will suddenly be a weighty factor in international politics. This position must be clearly and swiftly formulated after each new development -- or at least more swiftly than is often now the case.

It is therefore hoped that the new foreign minister will be an expert who possesses the necessary experience in foreign affairs, in the functioning of the diplomatic machine and in dealings with the Second Chamber. Both the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy [VVD] and the Christian Democratic Appeal have candidates who meet these requirements.

The persistent rumors that the VVD would like to propose an outsider for this ministerial post will, it is to be hoped, turn out to be groundless. The VVD in particular should know how serious the consequences of appointing an incompetent and politically inexperienced minister to this post would be. It goes without saying that the minister will have to keep the Netherlands Parliament informed of the activities of the Security Council. For their own part, Chamber members would be wise to observe a certain amount of restraint where delicate matters are concerned and not immediately call the minister to account, something they are otherwise fond of doing.

He will need more room to maneuver than in the past. An integral part of membership in the Security Council is that efforts must be made to exert as much favorable influence as possible on events through quiet diplomacy. Such a strategy must not be thwarted through every political development being dragged across the cobblestones of the Binnenhof [location of Netherlands Parliament].

The world press will also show greater interest in the Netherlands' position. For this reason, statements made in New York must be carefully harmonized with those made in The Hague. In the past, there have been one or two hitches here. At the end of September, for example, a Netherlands Foreign Ministry spokesman denied in New York that the Netherlands was prepared to supply troops for a multinational peace-keeping force in West Beirut, while at the same time there were statements in The Hague that the Netherlands would do so if asked.

Such a slip is embarrassing for a small country like ours, for which so much of the rest of the world is abroad -- for a member of the Security Council it would be a blunder which would harm the Netherlands' image. Now that the Netherlands has a seat on the Security Council, the Foreign Ministry's information department must be equipped with the proper instruments. These include a strictly coordinated staff, the timely drafting and translation of "position papers" and, above all, a clearly defined philosophy on the basis of which the Netherlands will determine its position. Two months is not long to get all this off the ground.

SPD'S VOGEL ON CHANCELLOR CANDIDATE APPOINTMENT

DW021207 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1650 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Interview with Dr Hans-Jochen Vogel, opposition leader of the Berlin House of Deputies, by reporter Schmidt-Holtz; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] As a candidate for chancellor who is entering the Bundestag election campaign right after being nominated, how do you assess your chances?

[Answer] I am a realist. This won't be an easy fight, and the prerequisites at the start could naturally be a bit better. The party is very much motivated however, and I can sense how my fellow party members and supporters are taking an active part in the contest.

The new government has already made mistakes and it looks as though it will make even more mistakes. The internal FDP disputes over that party's central problem will make a lot of people stop and think. We are fighting for a position that will give us a certain influence over our country's fate.

SEW OFFICIAL SPEAKS AGAINST EUROMISSILES

LD022318 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 2056 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Text] West Berlin, 2 Nov (ADN) -- "The deployment of the new U.S. nuclear systems in Western Europe must be made politically unrealizable by means of the people's struggle." This was stated by Dietmar Ahrens, deputy chairman of the SEW, in West Berlin today at a meeting which marked the 65th anniversary of the October revolution. He warned that the new missiles increased the danger of nuclear war to a terrifying extent.

He said that the SEW had given itself the tasks of strengthening the struggle for the social interests and the democratic rights of the working people of West Berlin; increasing its contribution in the worldwide struggle against the nuclear war plans of the U.S. Administration and the NATO leaders and for peace, democracy and social progress; combatting anti-Sovietism even more resolutely; and further consolidating the fraternal relations between the SEW and the CPSU and the Soviet Union.

A CPSU delegation, headed by Aleksandr Aleksankin, member of the CPSU Central Auditing Commission and deputy chairman of the Presidium of the RSFSR Council of Ministers, also took part in the meeting.

BERLIN COURT SENTENCES POLISH 'HIJACKERS'

LD281316 Hamburg DPA in German 1242 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Berlin, 28 Oct (DPA) -- Seven Polish hijackers were sentenced to up to 4 years in prison by the 16th criminal bench of the Berlin regional court today for attacks on air traffic. According to the court, the men had caused a civilian airliner of the Polish airline LOT to change course to Berlin-Tempelhof during an internal flight from Wroclaw to Warsaw on 30 April this year in accordance with a "premeditated plan by all of the hijackers." This was the eighth hijacking of a Polish plane to West Berlin since 1969.

LE MONDE VIEWS REACTION TO PSOE VICTORY

PM020915 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 Oct-1 Nov 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Madrid, NATO, France"]

[Text] There seems to be general satisfaction -- in Paris, which is scarcely surprising, and in Moscow and Washington for ambiguous reasons. The Soviets seem bound to welcome the victory of a party which has announced its intention of withdrawing Spain from NATO when it has only just joined. But the Reagan administration has also taken the Socialists' victory calmly.

Washington welcomes an election result which helps to "consolidate democracy." Mr Felipe Gonzalez is a reassuring deputy chairman of the Socialist International who has always kept his distance from Mr Carrillo's Communists even when the latter still represented 10 percent of the voters.

But the State Department spokesman also made remarks which were not very alarmist on 29 October concerning Spain's Atlantic alliance membership. According to him, the Spanish Socialists do not give the slightest priority to the question of a possible withdrawal. It is therefore premature to discuss it. The same calm attitude is being adopted by the Christian Democratic government in Bonn.

Mr Felipe Gonzalez has stated many times that he is opposed to bloc politics. He sees no advantage in his country belonging to a pact directed against the Eastern bloc while possible threats would tend to come from the South. But the PSOE leader does not want to alter the balance of world forces either. He agrees that the Americans should keep their military bases in his country. And he probably wants to prevent Spain's integration into the Atlantic alliance's military organization. But will he submit withdrawal from the alliance itself to a referendum, as he said he would in the past? In the end, he might very well adopt a stance comparable to that of France, which is a member of the Atlantic alliance but not of its unified command.

It is in his relations with Mr Mitterrand's France that the PSOE secretary general can innovate most or to the contrary, experience most setbacks. The two men have known and respected each other for a long time. It seems that the Elysee is trying to facilitate, in a very practical way, an agreement between the Madrid authorities and ETA [Basque fatherland and liberty], whose leadership has taken refuge in France. If such efforts do not succeed, the thorny problem of the extradition of Basque terrorists against whom proceedings are being taken in their country is likely to be posed.

Mr Gonzalez frequently accused France -- when Giscard d'Estaing was president -- of serving as a refuge for ETA. He has just stated that cooperation between the two countries in the struggle against terrorism has improved. But will he be able to get his fellow citizens to accept the liberal stance adopted by Mr Mitterrand and Mr Badinter on the right of asylum for activists who are sought for political motives?

Finally, the Spanish Socialists, who had hailed Mr Mitterrand's original intention of having a Mediterranean policy, think that this intention has until now, scarcely been put into practice. Paris' policy, they say, is still concentrated on Bonn. They would like the PS government to return to its original policy and help overcome "the misunderstandings and obstacles" which, as Mr Mauroy has just recalled, persist between the two countries, especially with regard to Spain's candidacy to the Common Market.

KOLINGBA SAID 'DISAPPOINTED' WITH AMOUNT OF AID

PM021443 Paris LE MONDE in French 29 Oct 82 p 6

[Jean-Claude Pomonti report: "Bangui Thinks Its Relations With Paris Have Improved but Regrets Inadequacy of French Aid"]

[Text] The "official working visit" to France by [Central African Republic] President Kolingba, who was due to leave Paris for Bangui this Thursday, 28 October, made a great contribution toward improving Franco-Central African Republic relations although it did not result in the substantial increase in French aid desired by the Central African Republic.

By receiving General Kolingba at the Elysee, by praising the Central African Republic military's efforts at "recovery" and "stringency" and by stressing the "legitimacy" of their authority (to cite Mr Cheysson's expression), the French have removed doubts about the reservations they were thought to have toward the Bangui government. The "Patasse affair" [footnote: Mr Ange Patasse, leader of the Central African Republic opposition, made an unsuccessful attempt to seize power in Bangui last March. He took refuge in the French Embassy on 5 March and left the embassy 13 April for Lome aboard a French military plane. Since then he has remained in the Togolese capital, where he has obtained political asylum] and the other incidents which puncutated Franco-Central African Republic relations after the military came to power on 1 September 1981 are now a thing of the past. Both sides are acting as if the political dispute was over.

In the cooperation sphere, however, the Central Africans had difficulty in concealing a degree of disappointment on Wednesday. They certainly did not think that France would grant them the package -- a little more than Fr 1 billion -- which they hoped to negotiate. For instance, the French Government apparently pledged to contribute Fr 28 million at the end of the 1982 fiscal year whereas the amount submitted by Bangui was Fr 76 million. Similarly, France is to make a Fr 100 million countribution toward covering the 1983 budget which, the Central Africans estimate, will have a deficit of Fr 160 million.

While recognizing at the highest level that France has financial constraints, the Central Africans nonetheless complain that they have to "negotiate budgetary aid each month" (the French contribution to paying the civil servants) -- an obligation which is regarded as "humiliating." In addition, some officials have difficulty in understanding why, in an atmosphere of restored -- or, at least, displayed -- political harmony, Paris is not making an additional gesture in the economic aid sphere as a good will gesture.

The French admit that it is not just a question of available finances but also of "not saying yes to all the requests" made by Bangui. Development projects, they say, must be negotiated individually. In addition, current aid (Fr 440 million in 1981, of which Fr 100 million is in the form of a direct subsidy to the Central African budget) is already deemed "fairly considerable."

Indeed, the problem of development aid for the Central African Republic remains, but following President Kolingba's visit to Paris, it seems to have a good chance of being treated in a more serene way. Paris now seems to think that the Central African Republics military has made a good beginning. Perhaps it remains to convice the latter that the limits of aid, which, moreover, is fairly consistent, may simply be financial and not necessarily reflect political reservations.

JOSE PAOLI TO BE NEW AMBASSADOR TO IRAN

PM021127 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 Oct-1 Nov 82 p 5

[Unattributed report: "Mr Jose Paoli Appointed Ambassador in Tehran"]

[Text] The Journal Official for Sunday 31 October will carry the appointment of Mr Jose Paoli as ambassador in Tehran. He will replace Mr Guy Georgy.

The latter was recalled on 12 August 1981 following the anti-French demonstrations sparked from the affair of the patrol boats supplied to Iran by France and captured at sea by dissident Iranians. The Tehran government for its part, announced that it was requesting the withdrawal of Mr Georgy, who has since been appointed ambassador in Algiers. The embassy staff, considerably reduced when the U.S. diplomats were being held hostage, has been restored to a normal level for several months. Iran is represented in Paris by a charge d'affaires.

PS JOURNALIST ON DEPUTIES' VISIT TO USSR

PM011323 Paris L'UNITE in French 22 Oct 82 pp 13-15

[Claude Estier report: "Moscow 1982" -- first paragraph is editorial introduction]

[Excerpts] Claude Estier has just visited the Soviet Unionwith a French parliamentary delegation. He recounts what he saw and heard in Moscow, Georgia and Azerbaijan.

The problems of peace, security and disarmament have been a leitmotiv in all the Soviet leaders' speeches for a long time. At the end of September, they again occupied a major place in Leonid Brezhnev's remarks during Indira Gandhi's visit to Moscow and also in his Baku speech. The Kremlin's theory on that subject is well-known and can be summed up as follows: The USSR is attached to the detente policy, which became possible when the military potential of the opposing alliances to which the European countries belong attained a relative balance. Any attempt to upset that balance will lead to a new stage in the arms race and will increase the danger of war. The Soviet Union has given a unilateral pledge not to use nuclear weapons first. It has introduced, also on a unilateral basis, a moratorium on the deployment of nuclear weapons in the European part of the USSR and is in fact, reducing their number on its own initiative. It is in favor of a radical reduction in medium-range nuclear weapons and of the limitation and reduction of strategic weapons [footnote: This presentation of the Soviet position is taken directly from a pamphlet published by the Military Literature Publishing House in Moscow and entitled "Whence the Threat to Peace?"]. The conclusion is that it is the U.S. and NATO leaders who are responsible for the pursuit of the arms race and the instability it is causing in the international situation.

It is easy to dispute this view by recalling, for instance, that in the early seventies when the Americans relaxed their effort to deploy missiles in Western Europe, the Soviets continued to deploy the SS-20. It is nonetheless true that the USSR has in recent months, made a number of proposals which may deserve to be explored a little more than they hitherto have been. In any case [CPSU Central Committee Secretary] Boris Ponomarev tried to convince us of that when he stressed that the deployment of the NATO missiles also poses a threat to France, adding: "The Pershing missiles are not deterrence weapons but offensive weapons which serve the idea of a limited war in Europe. The USSR is interested in a considerable reduction of arms in Europe, but it will never accept a situation which gives the United States a considerable advantage." General Akhromeyev, first deputy chief of the Armed Forces General Staff, who was taking part in the talks, tried to show us that this is indeed the case at present, given that in his assessment of NATO weapons he added together the U.S. missiles, the British nuclear force and the French deterrent force, whereas on the Warsaw Pact side only the Soviet Union has nuclear weapons. But the discussion became somewhat bogged down when, after we had pointed out that the French deterrence force could not be included in the NATO framework since France had left the NATO military organization, we were told: "We think it legitimate that France should have its own defense system, but if it agreed to reduce its own arms and took part in the negotiations in Geneva or elsewhere, that would have a very positive effect."

That exchange of views, which did not enable us to go beyond agreement on major principles, is indicative of the difficulty in taking real steps forward in the sphere of disarmament and security. I am not taken in by the fact that the Soviets always approach these problems from the angle most favorable to them. But I believe they are sincere when they tirelessly repeat that the main duty is to avert the threat of nuclear destruction which hangs over mankind. Some 37 years after the end of World War II, that country is still deeply scarred by a cataclysm which caused 20 million deaths and untold destruction. When visiting Georgia, which Hitler's armed forces never even reached, we stopped in front of a huge monument to the memory of "those who did not return." At the top of the monument is a little museum which keeps alive the memory of the terrible years between 1941 and 1945. All the pictures which could impact on the younger generation are assembled there, including a full-length portrait of Stalin, who in a way is the local son and who, several Georgians too young to have know him told me, probably made mistakes but ought to be respected for winning the war against the Nazis....

The Soviets' sincerity when they pronounce the word "mir" (peace) is more difficult to accept when they explain their position on Afghanistan or Poland. With regard to the latter subject which, in the final communique, we explicitly included among "disagreements frankly discussed," it has to be noted that the Kremlin leaders limit themselves to an analysis which is brief to say the least and which is based on two assertions: 1 -- The situation in Poland is a matter which concerns the Poles; 2 --The Solidarity leaders are provocateurs manipulated by the CIA whose sole aim is to overthrow the Polish socialist regime and make Poland leave the Warsaw Pact.

A Desire for Improved Relations

When he pointed out that on 31 August, 8 months after the proclamation of martial law, hundreds of thousands of workers demonstrated and that it is impossible to destroy such a movement by deciding to dissolve the organization leading it, our interlocutors said nothing until one of them found a diversion by launching into a violent diatribe against trade union practices in the United States.

That leaves Franco-Soviet bilateral relations which, inevitably, are still influenced by the Polish and Afghan affairs. Throughout the talks on that subject, however, we noted a desire on the Soviet delegation's part to improve those relations and, moreover, that corresponded to the French delegation's thinking. But it is important to see it as a complex political, economic and technical problem.

On the political level, the tough line adopted toward the Soviet Union by the French Government which emerged from the spring 1981 election and by the president of the republic himself has so far prevented any meeting at the highest level. Nonetheless, dialogue has not been interrupted, and several signs during our visit showed us that the Kremlin, whose distrust of the new French Government was obvious for several months, is now prepared to adopt a more open attitude. The political changes which have just come about in the FRG and which clearly worry Moscow are probably a factor in that better understanding of Socialist-led France.

Nonetheless, the difficulties which have arisen in economic and commercial exchanges between the two countries in the past 2 or 3 years are not easy to overcome. Whereas trade was almost evenly balanced until 1979: Despite a constant increase in the volume of imports and exports, there has been a growing imbalance to France's disadvantage since 1980, and it is likely to reach Fr 10 billion in 1982. That imbalance can be partly explained by the fact that 80 percent of our imports from USSR are hydrocarbons (oil, gas), the price of which has virtually doubled since 1979.

But that does not justify everything. The relative reduction in French exports to the Soviet Union is due to falling sales of our durable goods, which have only partly been replaced by supplies of agricultural products. Nonetheless, numerous contracts are being discussed, and the Soviets say that it has not been possible to conclude or implement them hitherto owing to technical difficulties introduced by the French civil service. This in fact relates to the delicate problem of financing Soviet purchases on credit, since France has aligned itself with the new interest rates fixed by "consensus" among the OECD member countries, whereas other suppliers like Japan and even the FRG are still using much lower rates for the USSR.

Our interlocutors were, nonetheless, attentive to the argument which we put forward to them, stressing that trade cannot be treated solely from the economic and financial angle but must also be treated from a political angle. There is no doubt that the Soviet leaders appreciated France's firm stance in face of the threats of U.S. sanctions in the gas pipeline affair. An approach now seems to be being made -- on which Research and Industry Minister Jean-Pierre Chevenement may take action during his forthcoming visit to Moscow -- for the conclusion of a contract with French enterprises worth around Fr 4 billion for desulfurization of the Astrakhan gas deposit. The signing of a major agricultural agreement during [agriculture minister] Edith Cresson's recent visit to the Agroprom exhibition, in which 200 French firms are taking part, follows the same trend.

So there are possibilities for reversing the trend of the past few years and seeing our exports to the USSR regularly increase, as is laid down in the economic cooperation agreement covering 1980-1985. However, it is still impossible to disregard the political obstacles which are working against that outlook. In that connection, the French parliamentary delegation certainly helped to reopen a necessary dialogue between Paris and Moscow. But a great deal of water will still have to flow under the bridges of the Seine and the Moskva before there is a return to the preferential relations which France and the Soviet Union had at the time when they worked together to help establish detente and bring about the conclusion of the Helsinki Final Act, which we still hope will not be just a memory.

COLOMBO URGES CREATION OF PALESTINIAN STATE

AU011437 Rome ANSA in English 0828 GMT 1 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 1 -- Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, preparing to accompany Premier Giovanni Spadolini to Washington tomorrow for consultations with U.S. Government leaders, has mapped out a three-phase process which must lead to a country for the Palestinian people.

In an interview appearing in the Sunday edition of the big Rome daily, IL MESSAGGERO, the foreign minister asserted, "the Palestinian people must finally be given a country, they have the right to one; but there must also be safeguards for Israel's right to its security".

Colombo said that the long and difficult avenue to follow to achieve this goal would begin with the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon and the full recovery of that nation's sovereignty.

The second step, he continued, would be the reciprocal recognition of all the sides in this peace process, a phase which would lead, finally to giving a country to the Palestinians along with sufficient guarantees for the security of Israel.

One of the priority issues on the agenda for talks in Washington this week to be conducted by Spadolini and Colombo is the situation in the Middle East. France, Italy and the United States are the three countries in the multilateral peacekeeping force deployed in Beirut.

Following his trip to the United States, Colombo will accompany President Sandro Pertini to Amman for talks with King Husayn of Jordan.

ARGENTINA ASKED TO IDENTIFY BODIES FOUND

AU021604 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 2 -- The Italian government has asked Argentina to "cast light on the victims and their identities" Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo said today in connection with the recent discovery in Argentina of mass graves outside the capital thought to contain the bodies of people who disappeared during the South American nation's "dirty war" on terrorism from the mid to late 1970's.

On Monday, the Foreign Ministry said it would attempt to obtain information on the fate of missing persons of Italian birth or origin in the country. Colombo made his statement shortly before his departure for Washington along with Premier Giovanni Spadolini.

The premier said he was following "with profound concern" these developments in the South American country surrounding the discovery of unmarked graves containing the bodies of the "victims of the military regime". Spadolini referred to the Rome government's "firm intentions to press the Buenos Aires government for precise information" and said that the option of "recourse to other initiatives" was still open.

"Timely steps have been taken to identify missing Italians or people of Italian origin among the bodies found in the mass graves discovered recently", the premier concluded. The foreign minister, in his statement, referred also to the political prisoners and the "sorrow of the mothers and relatives" seeking to find out the reason for their detention.

He said that the "discovery of the mass graves on the outskirts of Buenos Aires and in other areas in Argentina has thrown into relief those undeniably tragic pages in the history of that country with its countless victims. This development, Colombo continued, makes it imperative for the Argentine Government to cast light on these victims, on their identities and on the existence of political prisoners..."

"In this complex phase of a full return of democracy to Argentina, a phase followed in Italy with interest and concern, reasons of state cannot take precedence over the sorrow of so many families awaiting news of their loved ones for years. "This Italian Government request is linked to others recently advanced by other quarters of the republic and the government itself and to those less recent, but no less authoritative, in the unfolding of these sorrowful and tragic events.

"We ask this", the foreign minister concluded, "for Italians and Argentinians of Italian origin, as we have always done, as well as for others caught up in the same fate."

Embassy List

AU011525 Rome ANSA in English 1512 GMT 1 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 1 -- Italian diplomats and diplomatic offices in Argentina intervened with the Argentine authorities on several occasions between 1975 and 1980 in an attempt to obtain information on the fate of mission persons of Italian citizenship or origin in the Latin American state, according to Italian Foreign Undersecretary Raffaele Costa.

Interviewed for today's edition of the Turin daily LA STAMPA, Costa claimed that official moves by the Italian Government would "have not had any better outcome". Costa was interviewed after reports from Buenos Aires that the safe of the Italian Embassy in the Argentine capital holds a list of 321 Italians missing in Argentina.

According to Costa, the list, which the embasssy was held for two years, was built up from information supplied by the families of the missing persons. Costa said he had firsthand experience of the difficulties involved in talking to the Argentine authorities about human rights problems in June when he managed "only with difficulty" to run through a list of Italian-born Argentinians who died in the fighting with Britain over the Falklands.

"All I got to know, I collected through our community without any help from the Argentines", he told LA STAMPA, adding that, as regards the missing "desaparecidos", it was Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo who in August voiced the "desperate hopes" of thousands of mothers for news of their relations.

Other newspapers, for example, the Rome PEASE SERA, wondered why the Italian Embassy in Buenos Aires had kept the list of the Italian desaparecidos hidden and, in a front-page editorial, pointed out that the Argentine military rulers were now faced by "a deadline."

"The world will have to know that repression in Argentina has not hit only rebels captured arms in hand, or suspected rebels, or trade-unionists who were organizing strikes, but also citizens and intelectuals who were reasoning over the country's travail. The world will have to know that, in all probability, the most recent revelations did not occur by chance, but also because of internal plays among the military, maybe because of the willingness of some representatives of the regime to pull themselves out of the mud and the blood".

LABOR-INDUSTRY BARGAINING SESSION FACES PROBLEMS

AU281207 Rome ANSA in English 0832 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 28 -- The hurdle cleared by Premier Giovanni Spadolini's government in the lower house yesterday, a confidence motion followed by a secret ballot passing a government decree to increase the value added tax, was counterbalanced by the negative outcome of another labor-industry bargaining session on national labor contract renewals and the cost of labor.

Earlier this month, the opening round of negotiations between the leaders of the CIGL-CISL-UIL trade unions confederation, on one side of the table, and private industry (Confindustria) and state industry (Intersind), on the other side, failed to get off the ground because of what were described as "procedural difficulties". The two sides were brought back together yesterday through the mediation of the premier.

Sources close to the talks said in the evening that no progress was made toward bridging the gap between Confindustria's insistence on across-the-boards bargaining, to include contract renewals and the sensitive issue of automatic wage indexing, the "scala mobile" or "escalator", and the labor position. The leaders of the labor confederation are equally adamant on negotiating new contracts first, to replace agreements which have expired over the past two years, and handling the wage indexing issue separately.

Yesterday's meeting ground to a halt with Confindustria lamenting that no negotiations are possible before November 12, at the earliest, when the trade unions will have completed a sounding of the rank and file on proposed changes for the 1975 agreement which provided for equal and automatic increases in the cost of living allowance for all workers. This agreement was unilaterally declared invalid by Confindustria in the summer.

A further chill was thrown into labor-management relations with the announcement in the evening that the powerful textile workers and metalworkers' unions decided to reject industry proposals on contract renewals.

CRAXI LINKS EARLY ELECTIONS WITH LEGISLATION

AU291953 Rome ANSA in English 1932 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, October 29 -- Early elections in Italy cannot be avoided if the Rome Parliament does not manage to pass pending legislation, above all as regards economic affairs, according to the Secretary of the Italian Socialist Party Bettino Craxi. Craxi was speaking today at his party's Central Committee. The Socialists are junior partners in Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini's ruling coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Liberals, and the premier's own Republicans.

"Early elections are not a foregone conclusion," said Craxi, "but they cannot even be ruled out .... if this Parliament finishes down a one-way street, we, and not we alone, will have tomake our deductions."

In other remarks, Craxi said the government's economic policy is a "tower of babel," also arguing that he had done well in provoking a (?government) crisis this August. According to Craxi, the Socialist Central Committee cannot voice a view on Christian Democracy Secretary Ciriaco de Mita's proposal for an "electoral pact," even though he said he was confirming the "line of cooperation", with the Chrisitna Dmeocrats.

Craxi also had words for proposals from the Italian Communist Party, the biggest party in the Parliament after the Christian Democrats, for a "democratic (?alternative)" to (?govern) the country.

Craxi argued that accepting this idea would be to acept the "failure" of the current policy of cooperation with his own present government partners.

ZAGLADIN CONTINUES 'FRANK' TALKS WITH PCI AIDES

PM291425 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 26 Oct 82 p 3

[Text] Rome -- Vadim Zagladin has concluded his talks with the PCI, meeting yesterday afternoon with Enrico Berlinguer, after talking again with Gian Carlo Pajetta, Adalberto Minucci and Antonio Rubbi.

The PCI press office has announced that Pajetta, Minucci and Rubbi have held with the CPSU international section first deputy chief (who was accompanied by Enrico [as published] Smirnov of the international section "a mutual briefing on the two countries' situation and economic problems and on the state of relations between the USSR and Italy, which both sides agreed can and must develop in the interests of the Italian and Soviet peoples. The discussions continued in the most frank atmosphere, as at the previous conversation, and it is the shared opinion that meetings can be useful when they take place, like those of the past few days, within a clear context, thus permitting an exchange of information and an illustration of each side's positions, within respect for each side's autonomy of assessment and formulation."

It was after these conversations with Pajetta, Minucci and Rubbi that Zagladin met with Berlinguer.

Pajetta Views Talks

PM011635 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 28 Oct 82 pp 1, 20

[PCI directorate member Gian Carlo Pajetta invterview with Ugo Baduel in Rome; date not specified]

[Text] Rome -- Comrade Vadim Zagladin left Italy yesterday at the end of his week's visit. The visit aroused broad attention in the press and on television, and various interpretations have been given or attempted on several sides. Zagladin himself took stock of his meetings in Rome in an interview with LA REPUBBLICA published yesterday. We asked Comrade Gian Carlo Pajetta who, together with Minucci and Rubbi, had two lengthy conversations with Zagladin, to give his assessment of the encounter.

[Question] The press and television have given great prominence to Zagladin's meetings, even displaying some surprise at these relations, following what is still called "the wrench." In fact, some newspapers have tried to give the impression -- sometimes for ulterior motives -- that the entire issue boiled down to whether or not this 'wrench' would be "patched up."

[Answer] I would say at once that I believe that these meetings with Zagladin were a good thing and that they served to broadly confirm our position, which -- this is a point that people often try to forget -- has always been to reject and resolutely to rule out the use of terms such as "excommunication." On the other hand, when our discussions broached important issues and led to divergent conclusions and the debate could in no way lead to a unification of political assessment, our stance has always been to reject the use of terms such as "split" or "wrench" -- the latter being a more recently coined expression, which we cannot blame on what we used to call the bourgeois press or on the Soviet comrades.

I notice that in his interview with LA REPUBBLICA Zagladin was keen to stress that what took place was "a frank, comradely discussion." I would add to this -- precisely because it seemed to cause some surprise in some newspaper -- that Comrade Zagladin was given the opportunity for a public debate, like the one that took place in Bologna; for an exchange of ideas in the forms that lend themselves least to propaganda pressures, at the foreign policy studies center; and for a very broad discussion of interparty relations, regarding which the communiques have acknowledged the frankness in which it took place, partly and principally with regard to the issues on which divergences of assessment remain and which neither party could avoid considering important or on which neither could foresee a solution of the divergences. This all seemed natural to me, and it is part of our democratic method to speak freely and to allow free speech.

On the other hand, because of our conception of debate, which we want to see increasingly frank, we considered it useful that Comrade Zagladin granted interviews to newspapers and spoke on television. Perhaps this may have seemed strange to careless journalists who portrayed a Zagladin imprisoned by our security and unapproachable.

[Question] Let us talk about the interview released by Zagladin yesterday: What do you think of it?

[Answer] I would proceed from the statement by Zagladin that not only was the discussion "comradely" but that the desire is for it to continue to be so (though, having rejected the term "wrench," which seemed to imply prior organizational ties, I also reject the terms "patching up" or "attempted patching up" used by some papers).

A comradely discussion, then. When on 30 December 1981 -- promptly, I believe and with the utmost lucidity -- we adopted our well-known stance on the proclamation of so-called "state of war" in Poland, PRAVDA replied to us in a lengthy article from whose tone, I believe, it was difficult to recognize a desire for a "comradely" discussion with us. At that time I used the term "attack on our party" -- an attack which, furthermore, we made fully known to our comrades by publishing it in L'UNITA. Then we published our reply, which was calm but clear, not open to misunderstandings and in which we also raised the question of method and tone as a political issue.

[Question] So now there have been discussions, in calm terms. But apart from method, has anything changed in substance in the debate between Italian and Soviet communists?

[Answer] It clearly emerged that -- however important the question of method was and still is and however important it is that there be no return to the tones and terminology used then by PRAVDA and KOMMUNIST -- with regard to the substance of the issues, we certainly were not led to believe that we were mistaken then or that we were hasty or, I must unfortunately say, too pessimistic about the prospects. We have stated this explicitly in the past few days' communiques, in connection with our stances and those of the Soviet comrades, which still remain profoundly different over the Polish question.

[Question] But there were more than divergences during these conversations.

[Answer] Certainly. There were divergences — and not insignificant ones, either -- but there was more besides; there were also mere differences of assessment and points of agreement. We agreed on the gravity of the international situation, and for our part we favorably assessed the new Soviet stances and their declared intention to make a thorough commitment to balanced and controlled disarmament -- an element considered essential by both sides.

However, we were keen to stress once again our concept of the peace struggle as a movement that cannot be identified with one side's diplomatic activity or considered as uncritical support for the work of Soviet diplomacy. It was in this connection that we pointed out that we considered it inopportune to attend the Paris conference of communist parties. It seemed to us an unidirectional initiative. So, even though we consider the publicly announced Soviet proposals interesting — as we consider the statements made to us interesting -- we confirmed our opinion that a new concept (because of the variety and range that it involves) lies at the root of the broad peace movement that has emerged and that it alone can guarantee its maximum extent and effectiveness.

[Question] In your opinion, what were the most important conclusions reached?

[Answer] Everything that I have told you brings me back to the generally positive assessment of the encounter and, more generally, to the issue of the discussion of the fundamental issues of detente and disarmament, which we believe must involve an increasingly broad area of the international workers movement. I myself have had contacts in recent weeks with the British Laborites and the German Social Democrats; Comrade Chiaromonte has just returned from an interesting visit to France. Some people ask us: is it possible to conduct discussions? We reply: When have we ever refused to say that we "must" discuss?

[Question] Discuss, certainly -- but on what terms?

[Answer] The first condition is always to explain oneself clearly and to know that one can neither minimize nor try to eliminate certain divergences without there being real changes in the international situation. For instance, a discussion of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan makes sense to us if it brings nearer the political solution that we believe must replace the, let us say, "anomalous" situation that has been created in the country.

[Question] Were there any convergences and close viewpoints during the conversations?

[Answer] Yes, as I have already said. On the Middle East, for instance, in the opinion that it is necessary to guarantee the Palestinians a homeland and to respect the existing states within their legitimate borders. To find a compromise, while taking account of the necessary solution of the profound disagreements within the Arab world, in the direction of the Fes conference proposals. There was also agreement on the recognition of Europe's specific function not only within that region but more broadly in international politics and relations.

[Question] Did you discuss China? What did you say to each other?

[Answer] It seems to me not only that the Soviet comrades believe that something new is happening, but that they do so with optimism, albeit cautious. It seems to me that in a process of quest for international understanding and solidarity which, given China's importance, affects every part of the world, the resumption of contacts and dialogue between the PCI and CPC, which now dates back some years, was certainly not a negative element, as some then feared and even explicitly stated.

[Question] In conclusion, on the subject of the results of the meetings, how do relations between the parties appear now?

[Answer] To sum up in a few words such a complex issue, which extends beyond CPSU-PCI relations, I would talk in terms of a new and clearer recognition -- and this undoubtedly did occur during these conversations, at least as far as we are concerned -- of the assertion of each party's full autonomy and of its right to defend it jealously.

[Question] Was there any discussion of the different stances that have emerged within our own party?

[Answer] Yes. For our part, we said that it must be clear that matters concerning the PCI's political life concern our country's communists alone, inasmuch as various opinions and other people's assessments, though always legitimate, must not and cannot ever lead to any kind of interference. As for Comrade Zagladin, he said that he recognized the full legitimacy of our position and, of course, he said that this is a principal valid for everyone.

PREMIER BALSEMAO EXPLAINS ECONOMIC OBJECTIVES

[Unattributed report: "Social Consultation Guideline of Overall State Budget"]

[Excerpts] "A policy of social consultation and the amendment of prices and incomes policy, social security and labor legislation" were the major aims pointed out in Oporto yesterday by Pinto Balsemao for 1983. The prime minister, speaking at the closing session of the North Employers Council's congress, disclosed to employers at the stock exchange the main guidelines of the next overall state budget, citing specifically a tax reduction scheme aimed at the capitalization of private enterprises. Pinto Balsemao stated that "private enterprise must be the driving force of our economy."

"Employers must know how to promote growth, modernization and development, since they alone know the markets, command the production technologies and have management ability and experience," he added. "As far as it is concerned, the government fully accepts responsibility for combating the crisis and is preparing to present a draft budget and major planning options bill which will represent a considerable effort at containing the public sector deficit. The envisaged budgetary cuts will entail substantial sacrifices for all sectors of the public administration. It is essential that, in return, the resources freed in this way be used efficiently in the expansion of the economy and consequent creation of employment," Pinto Balsemao stated.

The prime minister criticized "certain trade unions and certain employers," accusing the former of "acting in accordance with undemocratic party political aims," and the latter of "forgetting their innovatory and investment role and confining themselves to pursuing personal interests, investing considerable amounts of capital outside the country."

"The budget for 1983 represents a considerable effort at containing the public sector deficit, and at the same time the government will maintain the policy of controlling monetary growth, as well as the creeping devaluation of the escudo for as long as is deemed strictly necessary," Balsemao said. He also described these measures "as aiming at control of inflation, limiting the harmful consequences of the crisis and working immediately on the resolution of the economy's underlying problems."

In line with the budget and the major options for next year, the prime minister highlighted the new law on the delimitation of sectors [of the economy] as "the greatest challenge to employers' capacity for enterprise and investment," and the changes in the legal framework for agricultural activity.

Among major aims for 1983 the prime minister mentioned social dialogue, "implementing a policy of social consultation and the amendment of prices and incomes policy, social security and labor legislation."

Concerning the last-mentioned issue, he said that "it is becoming necessary to surmount the current laws' rigidity so as to move rapidly closer to the legislation in force in Western Europe and the principles advocated by the ILO."

Balsemao also referred to exports, announcing that the government is studying the possibility of setting up trading enterprises to support marketing, promotion and publicity activities for Portuguese products abroad.

Acknowledging that the "symptoms of the national crisis are quite grave," Balsemao also revealed that, as short-term measures to combat it, "the growth of public sector expenditure will be controlled and the expansion of credit restrained, so as to control inflation and curb our balance of payments deficit."

In connection with the balance of payments difficulties, the prime minister emphasized that, since Portugal has problems identical to those of the EEC countries, "only a stringent monetary and budgetary policy can constitute a valid and responsible response," so as to "create conditions for us to be able in the medium term to enjoy balanced and steady economic growth."

PRESIDENT VETOES GOVERNMENT PLAN TO CLOSE ANOP

LD022122 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Excerpts] The president of the republic has vetoed the government decree seeking to close down the ANOP news agency, a presidential spokesman said this evening. The announcement about the veto [words indistinct] came on the very day when NOTICIAS DE PORTUGAL, the news agency set up to replace ANOP, began operating. Explaining the reasons why he decided not to promulgate the government decree, Ramalho Eanes reminded that in the program submitted to the Assembly of the Republic the government gave a formal political undertaking to reorganize and to provide funds to ANOP, helping it to expand its news coverage area. This being so, the president of the republic did not see how he could endorse the breaching of a formal assurance given to parliament, without the consent of the sovereign body to which it was given, the ANOP agency said quoting the presidential spokesman in this evening's firsthand report.

The presidential veto appears to leave only one alternative for the government; to transfer the issue to the Assembly of the Republic by changing the decree into a proposal for discussion by parliament. But it must be noted that the issue has already sparked off quite a controversy among various political parties and even some members of the ruling Democratic Alliance itself.

'CONTENTIOUS' ISSUES WITH GUINEA-BISSAU SETTLED

LD282254 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 28 Oct 82

[Text] Portugal and Guinea-Bissau found today solutions to the contentious financial issues outstanding since the independence of Guinea-Bissau and decided to set up joint ventures in the agricultural and industrial spheres. Portuguese and Guinean Government delegations meeting in Bissau since 20 October for the latest session of the Portuguese-Guinean joint committee announced in a solemn session today the settlement of nearly all contentious issues, problems and disagreements between the two states and also between private groups and companies from both countries.

A new page has been turned in the history of relations between the two countries and a new phase has just started, Portuguese secretary of state for cooperation and development and head of the Portuguese delegation Luis Fontoura said in a speech delivered at the closing session of the talks. Announcing the establishment in the near future of mixed companies in which Guinea-Bissau will have a majority stake, Luis Fontoura said that these prospects point to a deeper and closer cooperation geared toward further development.

PSD'S RODRIGUES DISCUSSES COALITION'S FUTURE

PM291029 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 17 Oct 82 p 3

[Excerpt] Social Democratic Party (PSD) Deputy Chairman Nascimento Rodrigues has described as premature any decision about the Democratic Alliance's possible continuation beyond 1984, thus rejecting the proposal of Freitas do Amaral, who very recently acknowledged that the three parties should remain in coalition for many years. In his statements, which were made on Portuguese television's Channel 1, the Social Democrats' deputy chairman said that coalitions should be reviewed at the proper time, although he expressed the hope that the current coalition will remain until 1984, since it was for that period that it received the electorate's support to govern.

KING JUAN CARLOS RECEIVES FELIPE GONZALEZ

LD021756 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Text] King Juan Carlos I of Spain received PSOE Secretary-General Felipe Gonzalez in an official audience at the Zarzuela Palace. This is the first official meeting between the king and the future Spanish prime minister since the PSOE's victory in the legislative elections last Thursday. The meeting was very cordial as was the telephone conversation the two had after the Socialist election victory when they spoke after the first results were in.

Gonzalez on Meeting

LD030032 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Report on 2 November interview with Felipe Gonzalez by Juan Ramon de la Cuadra; place not given]

[Excerpts] This afternoon the attention of the news media was focused on the audience which the king granted to the future prime minister, Socialist Felipe Gonzalez. After an audience with King Juan Carlos which lasted 1 and 1/2 hours, Felipe Gonzalez explained why he had requested this audience.

[Begin recording] [Question] What were the subjects which you discussed with King Juan Carlos?

[Answer] It was a fairly wide-ranging conversation and, I think, a very satisfactory one. It was very satisfactory in all regards because we discussed subjects ranging from the domestic situation to the international situation and economic matters. There was also a wide-ranging (?review) of what the stabilization of democracy in Spain will mean for Spanish-America which I believe is one area which could be a somewhat different element in the foreign policy of a government formed by the Socialist Party. There was also a review of many other foreign policy subjects.

[Question] Is government policy to be decided by the Executive Committee?

[Answer] No, it is not a government for the Socialist Party, nor for Socialist Party members and not even for Socialist voters, even though they are the ones who have given the government the job of governing, but rather for the Spanish people. It follows that if this qualitative distinction [margen de autonomias] is not made, mistakes will begin to be made which will immediately be interpreted at a popular level as an absurd distribution of power which should not happen in a political party and fortunately does not happen in the Socialist Party.

[Question] Again with regard to the future government, does the assessment made by the press agree with yours?

[Answer] At times it agrees with some of our assessment, but, curiously, in general it does not agree. At the moment (?I am looking at) some ministerial departments in which there are a number of people but there is not yet any (?substitution of these people) and, surprisingly, they are not those which the media say are the most difficult. For this reason I ask you to be patient. [end recording]

LA VANGUARDIA: GONZALEZ NEEDS EVERYONE'S SUPPORT

PM021419 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 30 Oct 82 p 5

[Editorial: "Planning the First 100 Days"]

[Excerpts] As soon as the county confirmed his absolute majority, Felipe Gonzalez addressed the entire country and not just the ardent supporters accompanying him at that moment.

The party secretary general and future prime minister issued an appeal to "the political forces, the institutions, the autonomous communities, the provincial and municipal councils, trade unions, employers' organizations and the media" to consider themselves involved and to lend their "committed support"; every Spaniard's cooperation within his own sphere, he concluded, is indispensable in achieving the objective of progress in Spain.

Felipe Gonzalez has an absolute majority in the Congress of Deputies. Therefore he doesn't need anyone else in order to govern. But he is well aware that the government of a nation in difficult circumstances is not simply a matter of parliamentary majorities. Felipe Gonzalez needs everyone. He knows it. And this is why he is appealing to all of us to cooperate with this need, which is so heartfelt at present, to achieve progress in Spain.

The Socialist leader is not confronted with hostility in the more responsible circles which he addresses. Political passion must not be so blind as to fail to see that solidarity is necessary and that we must all be able to depend on each other. Naturally, this is a mutual condition. When the Socialist leader addresses the political and social institutions, he expresses his good will. Does this exist on the other side too?

The country has many problems. Not all of them can be tackled at once. The new majority's ability to govern will become apparent by the priorities it sets. We believe that everyone realizes that the first priority must be to tackle the economic situation which, though serious worldwide, is even more so in our country. It will take more than a parliamentary majority to tackle it: It will require everyone's determination and hard work.

There must be clear talk in order to ensure understanding. Electoral propaganda of all kinds depends on encouraging simplifications and euphoric outlooks. Then comes the time to govern. And this demands realism -- that of lucidity and cautiousness on the government's part; of an understanding of the citizens' problems and real conditions.

A new era is beginning for Spanish democracy. We are suddenly passing from a minority government forced to depend on the other parties, to the extent of its exhaustion and disintegration, to a majority government that requires no one else in parliament, though it needs everyone within society. As we said yesterday, the country has expressed a clear message through the ballot boxes. It desires a strong government and a strong opposition. And this must be achieved without starting with hasty and futile tensions, and without confrontations reminiscent of unhappy periods in our history. We have an example of an efficient two-party system in the North, in particular, in Britain. Since the people have opted for a two-party system and since the principal opposition party has proclaimed its advantages, it would be well to adopt one of its most reasonble customs: That of granting an initial waiting period -- confident on the part of some people, critical on the part of others. This would provide 100 days to carry out a taking of stock by them, 100 days for the government to establish itself in the complex machinery of an administration and civil service which must also display a great sense of responsibility with regard to their efficiency.

ANSA REPORTS ON POPE'S 2 NOV ACTIVITIES

AU030845 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) Madrid, November 3 -- Pope John Paul II moves into the fourth day of ten-day "purely religious" visit to Spain today with meetings with representatives of the Spanish Jewish community, university students and youth groups.

On Tuesday, the pope had the most political day of his visit with a private visit to the Zarzuela Palace with King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia.

Later, the pontiff and the royal family were joined,for the official part of the encounter, by the country's leading political leaders: outgoing Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, Socialist Party leader and next Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez (whose party won an absolute majority in last week's elections), rightwing opposition leader Manuel Fraga Iribarne and Communist Party leader Santiago Carrillo.

"Even though my visit to Spain is of a purely my greetings and my respect for the legitimate representatives of the Spanish people, who chose them as their delegates to lead the nation" [as received] the pope told the group.

The pope later visited the World Tourism Organization and received, at the Apostolic Nuntiature, representatives of the 114 countries accredited to the Spanish Government, stressing the importance of diplomacy in the road to peace.

In the afternoon, the pope celebrated a mass in downtown Madrid's Plaza de Lima for a crowd of one and a half million people who gave him a rousing welcome.

The pope reiterated the importance of the traditional "Catholic Family" and he repeated the church's ban against divorce, abortion and contraception.

Spain legalized divorce one year ago and may soon legalize abortion in restricted cases.

Pope's Meetings, Talks

[Text] (ANSA) Madrid, November 2 -- Pope John Paul II, in the course of meetings with King Juan Carlos and the royal family, the Socialist premier - elect, Felipe Gonzalez, and other political leaders on the third day of his visit to Spain, said that he wished to greet "and pay my respects to the legitimate representatives of the Spanish people" despite what he described as "the eminently religious nature" of his visit.

After his meeting with the royal family, the pontiff held talks with the outgoing premier, Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, and with Gonzalez, whose Socialist Workers Party was swept to power in the general election held last Thursday on the eve of the pope's arrival here.

Speaking of the respects he wished to pay to these representatives, "chosen by the Spanish people as their delegates to uphold the future of the nation," the pope said that this is "respect which I want to place beyond all doubt, if any doubts could have been insinuated before my arrival, and which I want to reiterate today in your public presence."

USSR OIL TALKS; USSR DRILLING SHIP OUT OF ACTION

PM291121 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 27 Oct 82 p 28

[Kjell Dragnes Report: "Oil Cooperation With The Soviet Union Will Be Discussed"]

[Text] Within the next 3 weeks, a delegation from the Norwegian Export Council expects to travel to Moscow to discuss the projected oil cooperation in greater detail between Norway and the Soviet Union in the Barents Sea, Departmental Chief Tor Andresen told AFTENPOSTEN.

The proposals were received 10 September and Norway's major objective is to have Norwegian petroleum consultants work with the Russians in a consultative capacity on possible future production projects. The information received from the Soviet Union so far has been extremely general, and it is not clear where it wants to begin operations and what equipment it is interested in.

AFTENPOSTEN has been told that one of the Soviet Union's Finish built drilling ships, the Valentin Shashin suffered an accident during test drilling in the Barents Sea in August. The drilling rod was either broken or bent when the ship moved out of position. The three drilling ships the Soviet Union has bought from Finland -- two have already been delivered -- are equipped with so-called dynamic positioning equipment, which is supposed to keep the ship stationary over the drilling site. The equipment was supplied by Kongsberg Vapenfabrikk, which also services the equipment in the ships' home port of Murmansk.

There is still considerable Norwegian interest in supplying equipment to the Soviet Union, although it is clear that a proposal that the Norwegians pay for exploration costs with oil if finds are made is unacceptable to Norway. The Norwegian interest in mainly due to the plan to complete entire platforms in Norway and then haul them to the oilfields. Norway has also developed equipment suited to the conditions which the Russians will face in the Barents Sea.

The export council does not expect a revision of the COCOM [Coordinating Committee for Export to Communist Areas] regulations covering the export of advanced technology to the Soviet Union and the other Eastern Bloc countries to create any problems for oil cooperation since the initial plan called for Norway to provide consultative services which would not be affected by any tightening of the regulations.

GOVERNMENT SEEKS MISSILE ACCORD WITH LABOR PARTY

[Terje Svabo Report: "Government Wants Joint Missile Solution With Labor Party"]

[Text] The government is now making a major effort to reach a joint solution with the Labor Party on the so-called missile issue. The goal is to reach agreement between the two major parties in the course of this week. According to reports received by AFTENPOSTEN, there have been very high-level talks between the two parties in the last few days. The strategy is that agreement should be reached on a statement to be contained in the Storting Defense Committe's report which would stress both the commitments contained in the NATO dual decision and the great importance Norwegian political circles attach to the section of the decision dealing with negotiations with the Soviet Union.

The reason for the present conflict is that the present government, unlike previous Labor Party governments, has been very open about the NATO infrastructure program. Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad has made no attempt to hide the fact that Norway will contribute to this program.

After this information became public, the Labor Party's national executive adopted a resolution which is seen by many as a turnabout. The new attitude was reiterated by the party's parliamentary leader, Gro Harlem Brundtland, in the debate on the king's speech in the Storting last week when she said: "It is the Labor Party's view that at the present time we should not use earmarked allocations of funds for the preparation of missile installations in connection with the so-called dual decision."

However, this statement does not necessarily mean there is a deadlock on this issue. The point is that Norway's share in the NATO infrastructure program is one which means income for the country. This is because Norway receives much more from this NATO program than we pay into the kitty. In formal terms therefore there is no need to vote on an item of income, but in political circles there is no doubt that the Socialist Left Party will force a vote on the "missile question."

The question is whether the Labor Party will be able to refrain from voting with the Socialist Left Party. This is the objective of the talks which we have heard are taking place at a very high level between the Conservative and Labor Parties. The government has stressed how important agreement on this issue is for the nation's interests. There is little reason to think the Labor Party will disagree about this.

One possible way of solving the problem is for the government to withdraw the draft defense budget and later present a budget with an "other expenditure" item where the missile allocations are not specified. This would be in line with the way the Labor governments did things. However, central sources in the Conservative Party have pointed out to AFTENPOSTEN that such a retreat is out of the question. The government does not consider that abandoning the openness it has adopted on defense issues would serve any purpose.

This leaves the possible solution that the two parties do their utmost to reach a joint statement in the Storting Defense Committee's report on the defense budget. A further objective is to get the Christian People's Party and the Center Party to support the report -- and this is not likely to be much of a problem if the two major parties are able to reach an agreement.

The committee's report must stress Norway's determination to adhere to the dual decision and stress that greater importance should be attached to negotiations, while reducing the pace of preparations for the new missile installations.

Today no one in the Labor Party or Conservative Party is sure whether it will be possible to reach such an agreement. However, it is clear that the government has done as much as it can to keep the channels of contact with the Labor Party open on this issue, and it would probably have been easier for the Labor Party to agree to a compromise if its Danish sister party had not followed its example on this issue.

The Defense Committee has until 12 November to present its report, but every effort is being made to determine by the end of this week whether agreement between the Labor Party and the Conservative Party is possible on the missile issue.

LABOR PARTY'S 'ARAFAT VISIT 'OVERSTEPS THE MARK'

PM291041 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 26 Oct 82 p 2

[Editorial: "The Labor Party on the Move"]

[Text] In his book "Little Country What Now?", Storting Deputy Knut Frydenlund describes how last year he found himself in a strange situation in his first speech in a Storting foreign policy debate advocating a change in Norwegian Middle East policy, and of stressing the limits on what a foreign minister, a post Frydenlund held for 8 years, can do.

Now the Labor Party, represented by two former government members and a member of the Storting Foreign Affairs Committee, is to pay a visit to Yasir 'Arafat of the PLO. One of the delegation's members will be Knut Frydenlund. No matter what else might be said of these plans, the future visit does at least show there is a solid basis for his assessment of the freer position of the Storting deputies and probably also of the Storting's influence.

But there is also emerging quite a reasonable basis for some remarks on the Labor Party's qualifications as an opposition party. These have become so weighty that we wish the party remain a long time in this role. Once upon a time, and not as long ago as this fairy-tale beginning perhaps suggests, the slogan was: In opposition we will not support anything we cannot fight for in government. The reverse should also be true. In opposition the party should not go too far in breaking with what it stood for in government. The government takes the view that diplomatic recognition of the PLO will come the moment the Palestinian organization concedes Israel's right to exist as a state. When Foreign Minister Svenn Stray says that it appears as if the Labor Party has deviated from this line, his formulation of the situation is a pretty precise one.

It is quite correct that there is often a need to seek new roads in politics, for there are examples enough of countries and parties which have ossified in an ingrained dogmatic pattern. There is therefore no reason to exclude the possibility that soundings to find out whether the PLO may have altered its views could be positive. However, the Labor Party's visits are now beginning to overstep the limits of what is acceptable in Norwegian political life. It is not so long since Party Deputy Chairman Einar Forde, another prominent and well-qualified opposition politician, shouldered the considerable burden of sitting face to face with Poland's military dictator, General Jaruzelski. Much can be said of the general, but not that he is a typical friend of the trade union movement which the Labor Party is otherwise glad to support.

Another member of the delegation to the PLO is former Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg, who was also in Warsaw and who has, if nothing else, an independent and interesting view of how a candidate for the chairmanship of Oslo City Council should carry on his campaign.

In our view some strange things are taking place within the Labor Party at present. Could this be because the party, to borrow the poet's words, feels that it has arrived on the wrong planet after losing its cabinet seats?

ANDERSSON: LITTLE CHANGE IN DEFENSE BUDGET

PM021027 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 22 Oct 82 p I1

[Erik Liden Report: "Minor Changes in Defense Budget"]

[Text] "In all essentials the 1982 defense bill remains unchanged. However, I will make a few very peripheral changes in the draft defense budget. The budget for the JAS project will be subject to special analysis," Defense Minister Borje Andersson said in his first questioning session in the Riksdag. Kerstin Ekman (Liberal Party) from Goteborg had asked the defense minister whether in light of the government declaration, the overall planning thrust behind Sweden's total defense forces would be changed.

"The 1982 defense bill was passed by a Riksdag which agreed on the majority of issues," Borje Andersson said. The most important exception was the JAS, where the Social Democrats thought the project should be investigated further before a decision was made. This will happen with the assessment of the authorities' plan program and funding proposals. The results of this investigation will be made public in the draft budget. Borje Andersson stressed that apart from this, there will only be limited deviations from the adopted course.

Kerstin Ekman asked several times whether the defense forces' overall budget will be reduced. She was not given a definite answer by the defense minister, who repeated his initial phrase that in all essentials, the defense bill remains unchanged, and declined to say anything further.

KUZICHKIN DISCLOSURES MAY CAUSE USSR DEPARTURES

PM021015 London THE SUNDAY TELEGRAPH in English 31 Oct 82 p 1

[Norman Kirkham and Christopher House report: "Russians May Leave After Spy Checks"]

[Text] Several Russian diplomats and key officials in London are expected to be sent home to Moscow following the British interrogation of Soviet spymaster Vladimir Kuzichkin and the alleged leaks of highly-sensitive information from Britain over a number of years.

Some Russian diplomats may have gone home quietly already. A Whitehall spokesman commented last night that it was not normally government policy to differentiate between expulsions and "re-postings" of Russians made at the request of the Foreign Office.

The Russian defector Kuzichkin, whose asylum here was made known last week, is believed to have identified members of a KGB network operating in London and Western Europe.

British officials were refusing yesterday to confirm or deny a report that the government is considering a demand that Moscow must recall at least half-a-dozen Russians now serving in London.

Prompt action is likely, however following the vital disclosures made by Mr Kuzichkin during long hours of interrogation at a safe house outside London.

If Mrs Thatcher and her ministers decide to "go public" and give details of explusions rather than hush them up, her announcement could recall the freeze in relations with Moscow 11 years ago. Lord Home, then Sir Alec Douglas-Home and foreign secretary, expelled 105 Russian diplomats and officials in a massive clean-out of the Soviet espionage operations in this country.

There is no suggestion of such a large-scale purge now, although the KGB is thought to have reestablished much of its former strong base in London.

Mr Kuzichkin, 34, was a senior official of the KGB's Directorate S. which controls operations of Soviet agents abroad. He has volunteered important information about Russia's operations in the Middle East and the link-up with agents in London and West Europe.

Several re-postings among the army of Russian officials here have been reported recently, but it is not clear whether these have any connection with the defection of Kuzichkin or the leaks concerning British espionage operations.

If Mrs Thatcher does embark on public expulsions now, it would help Britain to "save face" in some measure after a reported breakdown in British security. There has also been a full-scale re-vetting of some "sensitive" staff and a check on former employees.

Russian sources said yesterday that they were not expecting the embassy staff to be reduced and any men who left after the completion of their tours of duty would be replaced.

When Parliament resumes on Wednesday, Mr Ted Leadbitter, Labour MP for Hartlepool and the man who first raised the blunt spy scandal in the Commons, is to ask Mr Pym the foreign secretary whether the Foreign Office has or is about to expel some Soviet diplomats.

Mr Leadbitter said last night that the purpose of his Commons question will be to try to get Mr Pym "to qualify the assertion that we have caught a 'big fish' (Mr Kuzichkin) and what steps have been taken to send some Russians back home and uphold British security."

PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU RETURNS FROM MOSCOW TALKS

NC022031 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Text] President Kiprianou returned this evening from his visit to the Soviet Union, where he had talks with President Brezhnev and other Soviet Leaders. President Kiprianou was met at the airport by the house president, who filled in for him; ministers; the Soviet charge d'affaires and other members of the diplomatic corps; heads and representatives of parties; house members; the chief of the National Guard and the police; and other officials.

Kiprianou Makes Statement

NC022136 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Statement by Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou on 2 November at Larnaca Airport on returning from the Soviet Union -- recorded]

[Text] My visit to the Soviet Union was extremely useful and fruitful from many points of view. The invitation and the visit itself, as well as the way in which I was received by the leaders of the Soviet Union, both in Moscow as well as in the Soviet Republics of Latvia and Georgia, considerably strengthened the entity of the Cypriot state.

The talks we had with the leaders of the Soviet Union, headed by president of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and Secretary General of the CPSU Central Committee Leonid Brezhnev, as well as the separate talks we had with chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers Tikhonov and his aides and with Foreign Minister Gromyko, were extremely useful and basic.

The talks with Brezhnev covered the international situation, the Cyprus issue and bilateral relations. During the talks with Tikhonov, there was a further exchange of views on relations between the USSR and Cyprus. In the private talks with Gromyko, a detailed discussion was held on specfic aspects of the Cyprus issue.

During our meetings in Moscow we raised the question of the missing persons, and I must say that the Soviet side displayed great understanding.

In regard to the International situation, the central focus of the talks was the necessity for utmost priority on the question of stemming the arms race in order to create the prerequisites for a new intensive and effective effort for international detente which will gradually lead to the securing of lasting peace and security in the world.

Regarding relations between the Soviet Union and Cyprus, beyond the agreement in principle for the commencement of negotiations for a comprehensive economic cooperation agreement, I must say the official statement by the Soviet side that it will continue the same policy with regard to the annual purchase of Cypriot wine products, as well as its willingness to immediately solve our special export problems -- such as this year's lemon produce -- particularly pleased us. In general, it was agreed to strengthen and broaden bilateral cooperation in all fields.

As was natural, the Cyprus problem was the main international problem discussed in detail. We clearly explained our positions and views and stressed the imperative need for the termination of the Turkish occupation. We also stressed that the full implementation of the UN resolutions, without any further delay, will provide the desired solution of the Cyprus problem; something that would benefit not only all the Cypriot people and Cyprus as an independent and equal UN member state, but at the same time would constitute a positive contribution to the cause of peace and security in the region. In general, we gave a full picture of the Cyprus problem and of our views, and I was very pleased with the understanding displayed by the Soviet leaders during our talks.

Special attention was given to UN General Assembly Resolution 3212 of 1974. This resolution was adopted unanimously by the Security Council, which is of special importance. As is well-known, this resolution, which was the UN verdict immediately after the invasion, confronts the questions of occupation and foreign intervention -- military or otherwise -- as well as the violation of the Cypriot people's inalienable rights, and particularly the refugees' inalienable rights to return to their homes and properties.

During the talks, the Soviet side repeated the proposal for an international conference under UN auspices, a proposal that has been accepted by the Cyprus Government from the beginning.

For our part, among other things, we raised the recent proposal by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou, which we explained and expressed our support for, as well as the question of the priority of Famagusta as envisaged in the pertinent agreement of 1979.

There was not much discussion on the internal aspect of the Cyprus problem, which is natural. However, both sides stressed the need for the unity of Cyprus and its people. It was stressed that in order for a stable peace and calm in Cyprus, the Republic of Cyprus must become a fully independent, sovereign, territorially integral, united and demilitarized state with its nonaligned policy respected by all.

In any case, the focal point of Soviet policy which clearly emerged from our talks, is the full and earliest implementation of the UN resolutions.

In general, I am pleased with my talks in the Societ Union. The Soviet Union's support of the Cypriot people, who are struggling for their freedom and rights, is clear. There were positive and substantive results from the talks with the Soviet leaders, and the extent of the importance of these results will, I believe, become evident at a later stage.

Upon returning to Cyprus, I want to thank the Soviet leaders for their understanding and firm support, as well as for the warm hospitality and welcome accorded to us during our stay.

Denktas Comments on Visit

TA030638 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0500 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] Commenting on the Brezhnev statement to the effect there are two communities living in Cyprus with their own inalienable rights, President Rauf Denktas has said he hoped this statement would help Greek Cypriot Leader Kiprianou find the right way to solve the Cyprus problem.

Answering a question by a Turkish Cypriot news agency [TAK] correspondent on Kiprianou's recent visit to the Soviet Union, Denktas reiterated that the independence and sovereignty of Cyprus could only be realized within the framework of the rights and interests of the two national entities based on a federal partnership. Problems like disarmament and others, Denktas said, could be negotiated by representatives of the two communities within the framework of national guarantees. The first condition is to agree to the existence and partnership rights of the two communities, he added.

Pointing out that for years Kiprianou avoided these realities, Denktas said the Soviets were well aware of this fact. Denktas continued: If this visit to the Soviet Union does not bring Kiprianou back to his senses, then the hope of coming to an understanding with him for a federal solution based on the intercommunal partnership will grow weaker. The fact that Kiprianou complained about the missing persons issue during his visit to Moscow while he paralyzed the functioning of the missing persons autonomous committee in which the UN secretary general's representative also participated has, I believe, given Brezhnev an idea of the degree of sincerity of the Greek Cypriot side's stand. I believe that Kiprianou has had a difficult visit to Moscow as he was not able to convince anyone with his lies.

O AGON Appraises Talks

["My Opinion" Column by the "Observer": "The Pros and Cons -- Kiprianou's Visit to Moscow"]

[Text] Attempts are being made by some quarters to present President Kiprianou's Moscow visit as a "triumph" and a "universally historic trip" and by others as a "disaster" or "worthless event." However, as proven by facts, the visit was not a universally historic event nor one of worthless importance. Moreover, it cannot be described as a "triumph" or "disaster."

President Kiprianou's visit to the Soviet Union has its positive aspects, which cannot be ignored or underestimated, but also leads to some disappointing conclusions that cannot be concealed or ignored.

What are the positive results of the visit? Primarily, the strengthening of relations between small Cyprus and a superpower plays a decisive role in the formulation of international political developments. For instance, a visit by President Kiprianou to the Soviet Union can be considered as equally significant as a visit to the United States. Another positive fact is the strengthening of the status of Cyprus as a state. Mr Kiprianou was received as president of the Republic of Cyprus and accorded the honors of a head of state. This is particularly significant for Cyprus, which is now facing [an attempt at] undermining its entity as a state and the questioning of its legitimate government. These are basically the positive points of Kiprianou's visit to Moscow.

At the same time, however, it is impossible to ignore the fact that this visit has failed to contribute toward a more positive and active change in the Soviet stance on the Cyprus issue. Mr Kiprianou has failed to persuade the Soviet leadership to clearly and unequivocally denounce Turkey by name as an aggressive country and as an occupation force which must withdraw without any further delay from the independent, nonaligned and sovereign Republic of Cyprus.

Of course, we are not so naive as to believe that President Kiprianou's visit was sufficient to assist in a more positive change of the Soviet policy on the Cyprus issue. The Soviet Union has drawn up a policy on the Cyprus issue based on its own military-political interests in the region. It certainly has some serious reasons for not wanting an open denunciation of Turkey by name, and these reasons cannot be removed by a visit of the Cypriot president to Moscow.

However, if the Soviet Union has some serious reasons for not openly denouncing Turkey as an occupation force, the Cypriot people have the absolute right to criticize the Soviet Union for refraining from this condemnation. If the Soviet Union proceeded with a straight and bold denunciation of Turkey as an occupation force in Cyprus and rigorously demanded the immediate withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus, this would constitute a tremendous lever of pressure on Turkey, a pressure which Ankara could not ignore forever.

However, the Soviet Union refrains from exercising this pressure. It does not denounce Turkey as an occupation force nor does it call on Turkey to withdraw its troops from our island. In the final analysis, this constitutes ENCOURAGEMENT [capitals as received] for Turkey to continue its unreasonable behavior, to continue the occupation of Cypriot territory and to promote its expansionist designs against Cyprus.

This stand by the Soviet Union deeply grieves the Greek Cypriots, who for some time truly regarded the Soviet Union as their strongest and most consistent supporter. We recall the strict warnings by Khrushchev, Fedorenko's fiery speeches at the United Nations and [former Soviet Ambassador] Yermoshin's indomitable efforts in Nicosia. All this has saved Cyprus many times.

Today, the Soviet leaders do not talk in the same voice as their predecessors. For instance, we hear Mr Brezhnev talk about the Cyprus issue without mentioning the word Turkey. He does not say a word about occupation, but continuously mentions the "legal interests of the two communities of Cyprus" but, again, without defining for us what the legal interests are of the community that represents the 80 percent and those of the community of 18 percent....

The joint communique will be released today. We do not know its contents as yet. It will certainly not be far from what Brezhnev has declared. It will certainly not denounce Turkey. This is Mr Kiprianou's most disappointing experience from his visit and the most discouraging prospect for the Cyprus issue....

TURKEY'S TURKMEN TO MAKE OFFICIAL VISIT TO USSR

NC030948 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 3 Nov 82 p 1

[Text] According to information from diplomatic sources, Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen will soon pay an official visit to the Soviet Union in response to an invitation from Moscow. The Turkish foreign minister's visit to Moscow had been arranged, according to our information, in conjunction with the invitation for Mr Kiprianou's Moscow visit which initially had been canceled and then was delayed for three years. However, contrary to Mr Kiprianou's visit, which on Moscow's insistence was described as regular, Turkmen's visit to the Soviet Union will be an official one.

Specifically, the invitation to the Turkish foreign minister was extended simultaneously with the invitation to Mr Kiprianou, and this is why there was no reaction from the Turkish side.

At the same time, we were informed that the Turkish Cypriot leadership had raised the question of a visit to the Soviet Union in the event that Mr Kiprianou visited Moscow. This question was raised by Denktas at his meeting with Soviet Ambassador Astavin in Nicosia.

With the Turkish foreign minister's visit to Moscow, however, the Soviet Union is bypassing the Turkish Cypriots' request without offending them at the same time.

The date for Mr Turkmen's visit to Moscow, which will most probably take place in November, is expected to be announced in the next few days.

PAPAIOANNOU: REMOVE UK BASES, U.S. RADIO, TURKS

He said the POGO gathering was directed at the political situation prevailing in Cyprus, and asked for the dissolution of the British bases and the U.S. radio stations and the withdrawal of the Turkish occupation forces and all other troops. Referring to the AKEL-Democratic Party cooperation, Mr Papaioannou said that all democrats are welcomed to it.

DENKTAS REJECTS NEW PROCEDURE FOR CYPRUS PROBLEM

TA021456 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Text] President Denktas has said that the Turkish Cypriot side will oppose any suggestion by the Greek Cypriot side that an international body be set up to assist the UN secretary general in his efforts for a Cyprus settlement. He was referring to news reports that the Greek Cypriots would be putting forward a proposal at the United Nations next March that a new procedure should be followed for settling the Cyprus problem.

Mr Denktas said there was no reason at all for changing the procedure, and the aim of the Greek Cypriots was, as he put it, to push the Cyprus problem into the international arena. He stressed that the framework of the present negotiations was drawn up by the agreements he had reached at his summit meetings with the Greek Cypriot leadership. The evaluations of the UN secretary general and his opening speech had made it clear that this was accepted by the two sides. These were documents which helped the continuation of the intercommunal talks in a sound way. However, the president said, for various reasons the Greek Cypriots were inclined to slow down the tempo fo the talks and avoid discussing substantive issues, giving the forthcoming presidential elections as an excuse.

Mr Denktas repeated that the Turkish Cypriot side wanted the talks to continue twice a week, and that the Turkish Cypriot objective was achieving a bizonal and bicommunal federal solution guaranteeing the lives and property of the Turkish Cypriots.

DENKTAS CONCERNED OVER REPORTED 'ARAFAT VISIT

TA300922 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 30 Oct 82

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that he does not believe PLO leader 'Arafat would visit Cyprus at the invitation of Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou. Replying to a question by a TURKISH CYPRIOT NEWS AGENCY [TAK] correspondent in connection with press reports to this effect, Denktas said he does not believe 'Arafat would accept the invitation. Such a visit, Denktas said, would be tantamount to his visiting Israel, and added that he would consider such a move as a hostile act toward the Turkish Cypriot community, which has been waging a struggle for its independence for 18 years in a bid not to surrender to the grip of Hellenism. In the same way that a visit by me to Israel would distress 'Arafat, his visit to the south would affect us.

PAPANDREOU INTERVIEWED ON DOMESTIC ISSUES

NC012010 Athens TA NEA in Greek 1 Nov 82 p 5

["Text of part one" of Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou's "exclusive" interview with TA NEA managing editor L.V. Karapanayiotis — date not given, number of parts unspecified]

[Excerpts] Question: The results of the municipal elections give us the opportunity to appraise the political situation as it coincides with the completion of your first year in office. Let us begin with an easy question. Are you personally satisfied?

Answer: In the year that has elapsed the PASOK government has begun laying the bases for the creation of an economically and technologically developed society characterized by pluralism, multiplicity of voices, a high quality of life and social justice.

In the year that has elapsed, the people's participation in and alignment with the government's task — as it has been clearly proved by the municipal elections — show that something very big, something very significant has happened in our country, and this something constitutes a guarantee for our present and future. What has happened is a spectacular elevation of the people's involvement in politics.

Personally, I am proud of the upgrading of the people's political conscience, which has been proved by the municipal elections, and deeply satisfied with the people's increasing participation in the planning and implementation of the change's program within the framework of modernizing the institution of local self-government.

Question: Mr Prime Minister, a peculiar, if not unprecedented, phenomenon has been noticed in the past few days. All the political parties appeared to be celebrating the results of the municipal elections as their own victory.... In the end, who won and why?

Answer: The big victories of the municipal and communal elections are the cause of change and the institution of local self-government as well as democracy and decentralization. With regard to the political parties, there is no doubt whatsoever that PASOK won an unprecedented victory in the history of the country and Europe. PASOK members or friends, on slates that were supported by the movement, were elected in 70 percent of both the municipalities and communes. Every forecast and all the objective targets were overfulfilled.

This is the first time in Greece that the municipal authority in the capital and the big cities has not belonged to the opposition.

We are the only country in Europe where the mayors and community leaders are not controlled by the opposition. If the other parites are bragging about it, this is to our credit. They probably think that, with the triumph of PASOK, new roads are opening for local self-government and they are rejoincing about it.

Question: For instance, even the rightwing has celebrated, maintaining that there was an increase in the votes it received. Mr Prime Minister, how sound is this argument?

Answer: It is the right of the rightwing to celebrate a result where it has lost two-thirds of its strength in the municipalities and communes. However, even with regard to percentage comparisons in more than 100 municipalities, slates supported by New Democracy received percentages considerably lower than in the parliamentary elections both in big urban centers and in small towns. There remains one indisputable criterion for the rightwing: It has disappeared from the municipalities and communes as a result of the local self-government issue. If this is not a defeat in the municipal elections, then what is?

Question: Of course, there is also the other side. The KKE maintains that it has impressively increased its strength. Do you believe that its satisfaction is justified?

Answer: I do not know what the objective targets set by the KKE were, to be able to judge today whether its leadership is or is not satisfied. However, I cannot refrain from pointing out that the KKE won in 8 municipalities but lost 15 of its bastions.

By rule, the vote in the municipal elections is different from the parliamentary elections. However, I believe that while in the 1981 parliamentary elections the KKE increased its percentages compared with the 1977 parliamentary elections, on the contrary, in many cases the slates it supported in the 1982 municipal elections received a considerably reduced percentage compared with the 1978 elections. I should also point out here, with particular emphasis, that the slates supported by the KKE carefully avoided to make reference to the party which supported them.

Question: It is obvious, Mr Prime Minister,that in reference to the implementation of change there are also "claims" by the KKE that "there can be no change without the KKE." How do you view this position?

Answer: Historic experience shows that developments do not occur in accordance with the desires or goals of the leaders of any one or the other party. If developments are to be authentic and democratic, they must have the approval and consent of the people. The KKE leaders' position that "there can be no change without the KKE' is nothing new. It was introduced into political affairs and has been a recurring political theme of the party since 1980.

One could observe that the results of the historic confrontation of 1981 were not simple chance election percentages or lifeless numbers without significance. On the contrary, they represented and defined ideological trends, and they expressed views on parties, organizations, positions, options, leaders and programs. They are an unquestionable and authoritative registration of political, social and ideological differences which are taking place among the Greek people.

There is, here, a fundamental error in the concept of the KKE's leadership, which ignores the social, political and geographic peculiarity of our country. They ought to learn -- and there are many experiences for this -- that in countries of our area and specifically the Greece of 1982, bipolarity is not artificial.

Thus, we have a bipolar system between PASOK (as the basic pole of attraction and the lever of the people's forces) and New Democracy (the primary representative of the oligarchy). Under these conditions, the Greek people -- with maturity and determination -- gave their vote to PASOK as an agent for change to act independently and with its own strength.

At the same time, the sovereign Greek people said no to any "regulatory trends" stemming from a spirit and logic for central negotiation and pressure from above.

For the leaders of the KKE, "claiming" the "responsibility" means participation and control of developments. This is being attempted because the KKE leaders believe that "petty-bourgeois" PASOK has exhausted itself, that it requires a "counterbalance" and that it "needs" the guardian of the "revolution." All these things are nothing but spasmodic attempts by the KKE to extricate itself from the sidelines and its own vile circle. Yet both these are the result of the KKE's own erroneous strategy, and the self-limitation of its role is closely related to its own character and practices.

It is time we stated the great truth which, perhaps, also contrasts to habit and sentimenality; it is time we separated the component elements of the KKE. They are:

A) Its social and popular base and its original ideological principles.
B) Its eventual development, struggle, offer and action.
C) Its current strategy, political line and the tactics of its leaders.

We respect and recognize the particular character, the significance and the progressive character of the first two elements. We do, however, consider that the third element is contrary to the demands of the times and the historic international and national situation. It is contrary to conditions for the survival, integrity and independence of the nation and contrary to the strengthening and deepening of the democratic institutions.

The strategic realignment of the KKE, based on its position toward the challenge of change, is a complex process. It is connected to its own character and relations. This realignment must have precedence over any "claims."

I state that it has to do with:

-- The KKE's insistence on outdated ideological dogmatisms, such as "the dictatorship of the proletariat," the "all-people's state," the "theory of stages" and so forth.

-- The KKE's attachment to the chariot of bipolarity and its acceptance of the Yalta and Potsdam agreements and cold war blocs.

-- The KKE's concealing its own views on questions of political and social alliances, of relations between democracy and socialism and self-administration, of the transitory and future character of a socialist society, its institutions and its multiparty system.

-- The role of mass movements both in claiming as well as exercising authority, the possibility of independent and free organization and expression and action by them, and the true participation of mass movements in controlling and directing political and social processes.

-- The division of time and policy into a time for preparation, a time for attack and a time for claiming authority.

These are critical issues and they cannot be evaded. The leaders of the KKE have the obligation to explain them clearly to their members and friends and, primarily, to the Greek people. It is a fact that within the leadership mechanism of the KKE there are clear, different and delicate shades of trends. Some adhere to dogmas, to a blind and unilateral reading of history and to a certain devotion to the model of existing socialism. Others timidly extend feelers toward modernization, within the framework of their obligations and principles, toward compromising on the differences and problems of our times and our country. Irrespective of these differences within its leadership, what is important is the central expression which only guarantees prolongation of the crisis in strategy instead of forecasting a solution of this crisis.

PRESS CONFERENCE HELD WITH BULGARIAN UNIONISTS

NC291344 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1200 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] Mr Petur Georgiev Dyulgerov, chairman of the Central Council of the Bulgarian Trade Unions, held a press conference at the offices of the General Confederation of Greek Labor [GSEE] this morning. The Bulgarian trade unionist, who is also a member of the Bulgarian State Council, extolled the personal contributions of the presidents of Greece and Bulgaria, Karamanlis and Zhivkov, and of Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, to the development of friendly relations and the restoration of a climate of confidence between the two countries. He also stressed that relations between Greece and Bulgaria today constitute an excellent example of how friendly relations between states with different political systems can be developed.

Earlier, an address was delivered by GSEE President Orestis Khatzivasiliou, who confirmed that today there are favorable conditions for further developing and consolidating the cooperation between the trade union organizations and the working people of the two neighboring countries. The two sides agreed on the need for a meeting among the presidents of the trade unions of the Balkan countries in order to help in the establishment of the nuclear-free zone in the Balkans, which is desired by the governments of the two countries.

The GSEE president, GSEE Organizational Secretary Rovertos Spiropoulos and Mr (Khoikov), in charge of international relations in the Bulgarian trade unions, announced the concrete program of contacts and cooperation between the Greek and Bulgarian trade unions in 1983. The program provides for the exchange of visits by trade union cadres and working people of the two countries.

Their positions are included in the joint communique released today at the conclusion of the talks. The joint statement refers to the Cyprus problem and says that following the unacceptable invasion of Cyprus, the Cyprus crisis has not yet been resolved. It stresses that a fair Cyprus solution for the sake of the interests of Greek and Turkish Cypriots alike is possible only through the preservation of the independence, territorial integrity, sovereignty and unity of Cyprus based on the UN resolutions.

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES NATO DUTIES, RDF

NC030853 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 31 Oct 82 p 1, 8

[Text] Ankara (special) -- In a statement yesterday, National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken said certain airfields would be improved in accordance with a technical agreement concluded with NATO and added that these airfields had nothing to do with the Rapid Deployment Force (RDF) formed by the United States for use outside NATO. Bayulken noted that Turkey is implementing a modernization project intended to first meet its own national defense needs as well as to strengthen its defense within the NATO region.

The national defense minister provided this brief answer when asked to comment on reports that Turkey was being pressed by the United States to undertake active military duty in regions outside NATO: "The matter you are referring to has been taken up periodically by various sources since 1981 in a manner that suits their objectives. It is particularly noteworthy that these sources have built their nests in some European countries and are waging a vicious anti-Turkish propaganda war almost daily in addition to the frequent references which certain notorious foreign radios are making. Both myself and other competent officials have repeatedly and clearly expounded the NATO policies to be pursued by Turkey outside the NATO region. Taking into consideration efforts being exerted to cloud the minds of the public and certain comments being made by some well-meaning persons influenced by such efforts, I wish to expound our standpoint once again.

"As is known, with a view to rapidly countering dangers that the area may face from outside, particularly those which may prevent the flow of oil to the West, the United States has been directly taking certain measures and inviting its NATO allies to a specific solidarity. Again, as is known, the United States has in fact formed a RDF against situations which cause anxiety in the area."

Referring to the improvement of certain airfields in Turkey and to the rumors concerning the RDF, the national defense minister made the following comment: "On the other hand, Turkey is engaged in implementing a modernization program for its armed forces for the purpose of first meeting its national defense needs and then fulfilling its important duties for the defense of the NATO region. The United States in particular, and the FRG, which appreciate Turkey's importance to the area and NATO, and other NATO allies in general, admit that for this program to materialize swiftly, more military aid than what has so far been given is needed. This has been stressed at every NATO conference and in every communique subsequently issued.

"For the purpose of rendering more operative this important aid which our ally the United States has been giving us over the years for the materialization of this program, we established an executive group between us on the basis of the defense and economic cooperation agreement signed in March 1980. With the same objective in mind, we formed a high-level joint defense executive group in 1982. On the other hand, the (MOU) [expansion unknown] NATO memorandum, which has been under discussion for years envisaging the fuller development of certain airfields as part of the NATO defense, is about to be finalized.

"As I have stated, this technical agreement, which is entirely confined to the NATO alliance, is stipulated by a program known as "rapid reinforcement force" connected with military cooperation among the NATO countries when faced with a serious danger. All NATO countries have already concluded such technical agreements. It must also be emphasized that these airfields, which are considered as NATO infrastructure installations and which exist in every region of our country, are being constantly used by our civilian aircraft as well. This technical agreement cannot be linked with the Rapid Deployment Force organized by the United States for another purpose."

EVREN GIVES SPEECH ON NEW LABOR LEGISLATION

TA311432 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 31 Oct 82

[Speech by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Adana on 31 October -- Recorded]

[Summary] My dear citizens of Adana, on behalf of myself as well as the members of the National Council and our prime minister, I would like to express my gratitude for the great affection and welcome you have accorded us. As you will remember, I was in Adana on 16 January 1981. In my speech then I primarily dwelt upon the activities of trade unions during the period prior to the 12 September 1980 operation, reminding you of the way some of the trade union bosses had misused your dues. I promised you then that we would provide state supervision of trade unions. Today I will speak to you about those parts of our Constitution that deal with labor problems and the functioning of labor unions.

Dear citizens, let me first warn you of the lies fabricated by certain circles to the effect that if this constitution is ratified in the referendum, workers will not be allowed to participate in political activities, cast their votes during elections or even stand as candidates in elections.

"All these rumors are lies; they are blatant lies. But our well-intentioned workers who never suspect others, are sometimes deceived by such lies." A group of workers travelled to the capital to find out if there was any truth in these rumors. After they learned the truth, they returned to their province, satisfied with the explanations they received. If there are other workers who have been deceived by such rumors, I want them to learn the truth.

Dear citizens, you still remember the 100 million lira damage caused by the destruction of the Izmir cotton thread factory of Taris. It is the state which has paid this damage. Let us add the future damage caused by the lost time the repairs lasted and until the factory resumed its activities. "We have all experienced in the period prior to 12 September similar unlawful strikes, illegal occupation of the work places which have caused great damage and which have affected our economic life, creating grave problems."

Let me give you a few examples to illustrate my point. At that time, Turkey, a country which produces and even exports tobacco and which has the factories to meet the cigarette needs of its inhabitants, was faced with a scarcity of cigarettes. For years this problem could not be solved. Cigarettes were being sold on the black market. The reason was industrial action by the workers of these factories. Today, though no new factory has been added, the needs of the citizens are satisfied and even a portion of our cigarettes are being exported. The same was true for the production of light bulbs.

"Those who aimed at undermining the national economy were resorting to strikes for political reasons, keeping the factories paralyzed for months and years. If the trade unions who forced the strikes could pay the wages of the workers or at least half of it or part of it, it would be all right. However, all they could pay the workers was 1,000 or 2,000 lira a month, condemning them to hunger and suffering. Though the worker would not be able to receive his pay or would get a small payment, the officials of the trade union which forced the strike would get their full salaries."

An electric battery factory that supplied our armed forces was forced into a strike which lasted for 2 years. We were obliged to meet our needs by importing them. It is possible to recall hundreds of similar incidents, my dear citizens.

Let me now explain to you what we have done in the constitution concerning the labor issues. The articles of the constitution connected with labor have been the ones which have been most criticized. I and my colleagues in the Council have examined carefully all criticism levelled against these articles.

Let me recall for you one fact: We are all soldiers and we do not have the experience of a worker or employer. This makes it possible to have an impartial approach to these issues. Since we do not belong to either of the two groups, we have the possibility of weighing these problems in the light of the best interests of our country. We have examined each and every part of the Constitution with great care and attention. Taking into consideration the amount of criticism, we have paid special attention to articles concerning the labor life.

History has proved that in the past the worker has been exploited by the employer and the interference of the state has prevented continuous rifts between workers and employers as the state has always acted in favor of the workers who represented the weaker side. It was seen that if the state did not take the necessary measures to protect the workers they were subject to injustices. Since we were not an industrialized country, such incidents did not happen in our country for a while, but now with the advent of the republic industrialization has begun in our country. "With the intention of preventing the labor conflicts which occurred in Western countries, a labor law was enacted in 1936 which allowed the state to organize labor life and the relationship between the worker and the employer. Thus a bipartite relationship has been transformed, as it can presently be seen in certain Western countries, into a tripartite relationship."

"In other words, in labor life, the employer and the employee do not deal with one another alone. The state is between them. My dear citizens, since the employee needs more protection than the employer, the state has intervened in employer-employee relations with the aim of actually protecting the worker. Labor law has thus assumed a new aspect. I would like to recall that the most important rule governing labor laws is that in the event of a delay in the interpretation of labor laws regulating employer-employee relations, the interpretation will be made in the interests of the worker."

With the establishment of labor unions, collective wage agreements, strikes and lockouts, labor relations have become more healthy. However, these were soon derailed and misused. I categorically state that our workers are not to blame for this. We can not hold all of our unionists responsible either. It would be very unjust to claim such a thing. A majority of our unionists are patriots and are concerned about the interests of their country. However, because of a handful of unionists, unionism has deviated from its actual goal. Strikes became tools for ideological struggles. Frequent strikes threatened production. Our workers were forced to strike and were left hungry during strikes. Various union lords forced our workers to occupy various work sites, to set on fire raw materials and the products.

Now let us review what kind of measures have been taken, and whether or not they are unjust and unnecessary. These are the provisions governing labor life, my citizens: The Constitution says that it is the right and duty of everyone to work. The state takes measures to raise the workers' standard of living, to develop labor life, to protect the workers, to support employment and to create an atmosphere conducive to preventing unemployment. The Constitution has given these duties to the state. "The Constitution then continues: The State will take measures to facilitate and protect labor peace in employer-employee relations. No one is to be made to work at a position not befitting to his or her sex, age, or ability." Children, women and those physically or psychologically handicapped are especially protected from the standpoint of labor conditions. It is the right of those who work to rest.

Now let me talk about the right to form labor unions. Workers and employers have the right to form labor unions without prior permission with the aim of securing their economic and social rights and interests. They are free to establish labor unions. They are also free to become a member of a union or to withdraw membership from a union. No one can be forced to join a union, to continue his membership or to leave a union. Workers and employers cannot join more than one labor union at a time.

Employment at a certain worksite can not be linked to membership at a specific union. One must be a worker for at least 10 years in order to become an administrator of a union. This condition did not exist before. People who had no connection whatsoever with workers were brought to administrative post at labor unions. The rules and regulations, administrators and functions of labor unions have to be compatible with the characteristics of the republic and democratic principles as stipulated by the Constitution.

Now, my dear citizens I will talk about labor union activities. Labor unions can not act in contradiction to Article 13 of the Constitution. They cannot pursue political goals either. They cannot engage in political activities. They cannot be supported by political parties and vice versa. A labor union is designed to protect the economic and social rights of workers. Those who wish to engage in politics can either join a party or establish one. The Constitution also stipulates that the way in which union dues are to be paid. The state administrative and financial control over labor unions and union revenues and expenditures are regulated by law. Previously the state had no administrative or financial control over the unions. I will talk about the consequences of this lack of control in my speech in Izmir. Unions cannot use their revenues for purposes other than those specified in their rules and regulations. Union revenues are to be deposited in state banks. This regulation is aimed at protecting workers' money.

"I will talk about the right to strike and the situations in which an employer can resort to a lockout at another city. I would only like to state for now that the right to strike still exists. However, a lockout is not a right but a situation that is created against a strike. Therefore, while including in the Constitution, we did not say the right to strike and the right to lockout." We said "the right to strike and lockout." Lockout is not a right. However strike is a right. As you can see, my dear Adana citizens, my speech dealing with workers rights has taken such a long time. "While preparing this part of the Constitution we were very careful; we listened to the views of all those concerned.

"Some of those opposing our labor and workers rights aim at establishing socialism in our country. They want to achieve their goal by pretending to protect workers' rights. These people succeeded in the past in bringing their own men to the administrative posts of many unions. They manipulated our innocent workers. They made them hoist red banners. However, they will not be successful. Their masks have been removed. Our workers today recognize them for what they are. We could have gotten rid of them all had we wanted to. However, had we thrown into the streets all those who were involved in these ugly incidents, their families and children would have been destitute. We did not resort to such action. Our aim is not to sacrifice human life. We want them to chose the right path. We are trying to show the right path through education. I chose to dwell on these issues in Adana because this is an industrial province and it has many workers.

"We have tried to prepare this Constitution very carefully. "I believe that it is suitable to the country's realities and that it will not bring back the pre-12 September days. We submit it for your approval. I extend my love and respect to you all and I wish you a happy future."

Evren Speech in Izmir

TA011324 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 1 Nov 82

[Public speech by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Izmir on 1 November 1982 -- recorded]

[Summary] My dear citizens, your city suffered greatly during two periods; one, during the war of independence and the other prior to 12 September 1980. However, those who made you suffer during the war of independence were enemy forces who came from outside to occupy our country, while those who shed the blood of our citizens during the second period were the misled sons of this country. That is what is so sad.

"Today, an ideological and economic war is going on throughout the world." "We emerged from such a war. We won the first round but the war continues and there will be further attacks. We must be ready for such attacks. We must take certain measures and be continuously alert if we do not want to fall into similar sad and terrible situations. Naturally, the main measure was the Constitution which will shed light on all the laws. Do you think we would have won this war had we left the 1961 Constitution in force? Absolutely not!"

Those who lost the first round of the ideological war are continuing to defend the old Constitution. Very democratically we let them speak. You can be sure that had they won the first round they would not have let anybody criticize them.

The new Constitution brings certain limitations on basic rights and freedoms. It bans communism, fascism or dictatorships. Those who lost the first round were angry because they would not be able to arrange rallies and shout protests over Articles 141 and 142 of the Turkish Penal Code [articles which ban communist propaganda]. "Those two articles were included in the penal code in 1936, during Ataturk's presidency. They are not new. In other words, Ataturk was also against communism. There are people who try to misinterpret Ataturk's remarks or sayings. There are people who try to misinterpret his remarks on statism. However, Ataturk included these two articles of the penal code during his time."

With the new Constitution, certain powers have been given to the executive, that is, the president and the government, in order to eliminate a vacuum of authority. "As in the past, the president will be elected by parliament but for a period that is 2 years longer than the normal term of the parliament which elected him. In other words, the president will serve the country during two different parliaments. The president is not only head of the executive branch but head of state as well. There are certain powers which cannot be given to any of the three big bodies [the legislative, executive and judiciary], so they are given to the president."

The president appoints the prime minister who in turn forms a government which is made up of one or more parties. That government must then receive a vote of confidence from the legislative. When the president is elected, he must resign from his party if he is a party member and he must resign from his seat in the legislative. In other words, the president must be nonpartisan while the government is partisan.

"Everybody agrees that the executive branch must be strengthened. The president and the government make up the executive branch. Which one of them must be strengthened? Should both sides be strengthened, or just the nonpartisan president? Or the partisan government? The partisan government has certain powers, but those powers which might lead to serious conflicts and unease between the government and opposition have been delegated to the president. There are certain other powers that must surely be given to the president, because it would not be right and in fact would be impossible to give them to other bodies.

"Let us look at the powers granted to the president by this Constitution. Certain people seem to be very critical of this. Let us look at them and you decide with your common sense. The first duty is to convene the Turkish Grand National Assembly whenever necessary. Say the Assembly is in recess and new developments have taken place and must be debated by the Assembly. Why should he not be able to convene the Assembly? He is the head of state and of the executive.

"The second duty is to make the opening speech of the Assembly. He does it if he wants to. In November, or October, when the Assembly opens, he delivers a speech. Maybe he has certain requests from the Assembly. Should he not talk?

"Another power is to publish the new laws. The previous presidents used to do that as well. The laws come to him, he signs them and publishes them within 15 days. Who will do that if he does not?

"Another power is to send the laws back to the legislative to be debated once again. This is a new power. Why? Because in the past there was a senate which used to do this. However, the senate and the assembly used to have the same color; the same party that the majority in the assembly had the majority in the senate as well. Consequently, laws were being passed very slowly. There was no big benefit. A law might have been passed by assembly in a hurry, it might have certain deficiencies. In that case, the president sends it back. In other words, the president will carry out a duty which used to be fulfilled by the senate. Who should do that if not him?"

"A new power granted to the president by the Constitution is to hold a referendum, if necessary, on the laws to amend the Constitution. The president might consider a constitutional change against the interests of the nation or the country. Furthermore, the Constitution will be approved by you, by the people. So the president will hold a referendum to see whether the people approve the constitutional change.

"Another power is to decide on the renewal of Turkish Grand National Assembly elections. That is a new article as well. The reason is to prevent the recurrence of past experiences where a government could not be established for months. Let's say a prime minister cannot form a government in 45 days. The president will then discuss the situation with the head of the Assembly and declare new elections. In that way, a government will immediately be formed out of fear of elections. Otherwise, there is no choice -- elections are held and the party that gets most of the votes forms the government. That is, it is the president who will decide on whether to hold elections in such cases.

"Another duty is to appoint the prime minister or to accept his resignation. Of course, who else should do that? It used to be like that in the past as well."

"With the new Constitution, if the prime minister asks him to, the president can appoint or release ministers. The prime minister submits his government list to the president who then approves it or not. That was the case in the past as well. The new stipulation is that the president can fire a minister if the prime minister asks him to. He could not do that in the past. The regulations were that the government resigned, the prime minister resigned, then the same prime minister was reappointed who would then form a government leaving the undesired minister out. That was a long and complicated path."

"Another power is to chair the Council of Ministers when necessary. That was the case in the past as well. The new clause we added says that he can convene the Council of Ministers under his own chairmanship. If necessary, he can say the Council of Ministers must convene and he will head it. Since he is the head of the executive, he must naturally have this power."

"Another new duty which was criticized was his power to decide on the usage of the Turkish Armed Forces. It might be that the assembly is in recess and the country is faced with a sudden attack. Should the president wait for the assembly to convene and decide? "

A new power granted the president is to declare martial law or a state of emergency, together with the Council of Ministers, and to enact decrees. "If martial law or a state of emergency is to be declared, if such a decision is to be taken, then the Council of Ministers convenes under the president, makes its decision and immediately submits this decision for the approval of the Turkish Grand National Assembly. If the Assembly does not approve it, then it is lifted. In the past, this decision was taken by the Council of Ministers headed by the prime minister. Now it is taken by the Council of Ministers headed by the president. That is the difference."

A new power is to appoint the State Supervisory Council chairman and members. We established this council recently. Other powers are to appoint the members of the recently established High Education Council which supervises the universities; to appoint the university rectors from among the candidates to be nominated; and to appoint part of the State Council members, the public prosecutor and his deputy, the members of the Military High Court of Appeals, etc, from among candidates.

Now do you think these are too many powers for a president? A lack of trust in the president has been expressed by various circles. "I say whom should we trust? Should we trust only a judge or a court? Then the alternative is to have only judges as presidents."

"I did not decide on the 12 September operation in order to become a president. Neither I nor my colleagues from the National Security Council or the other commanders coveted a post. We understood this operation to end the suffering of the Turkish nation and the bloodshed. We thought we could solve the problem in a short time. We realized, however, that the situation was not that simple and that if we left without concluding our jobs the same situation would recur in the future. That is why this work took us 2 years."

I am over 65, I would have preferred to rest. Had I coveted the post of president, I would have moved to the presidential mansion after 12 September and received the salary of that post.

We believe that this Constitution has a minimum amount of deficiencies, and these can be corrected with good will in the future. If you believe and trust us, vote accordingly.

More on Constitution

TA021239 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Speech by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Izmit on 2 November — recorded]

[Excerpt] There is now a new constitutional requirement that the president is to be elected from within the Assembly or from outside it, provided the candidate has the qualifications to be elected as an Assembly member and is a university graduate. This requirement has been criticized. Certain circles have said: Why should the president be elected from outside the Assembly? Such a thing is unheard of!"

Now I will explain to you the reason for this stipulation. Basically, the president should be elected from within the Assembly. That is a standard requirement. However, since it is very difficult to find an independent deputy in the Assembly, it happens that the parties cannot agree on any candidate from within the Assembly, and that they cannot get a majority to elect that president. As a result, the possibility might arise of having the Assembly disbanded and holding early elections. On the other hand, an agreement can be reached on an independent candidate from outside the Assembly. With this new requirement, we gave the Assembly a flexibility so that it can deal with such situations more easily.

Certain persons have said: "Why should a person who was not elected a deputy become a presidential candidate?"

My answer is: Remember the old regulations where one of the 15 presidentially appointed senators could be nominated presidential candidates. Furthermore, if you remember, at times certain tricks were played whereby one of the presidentially appointed senators used to resign, another one was appointed in his place and that other one was nominated as presidential candidate. Those regulations were not criticized, so why is the present one being criticized? If the parties can agree on a candidate, then they elect one from within the Assembly; if they cannot reach an agreement, then they look for someone from outside. We made life easier for them.

There is another issue which has been criticized. It was said that the president was given too many powers but that he could not be held responsible for his deeds and that this was not right. I explained the president's powers, as you might have heard. We did not agree with the criticism and we said: The president cannot be held responsible for deeds he undertakes with the signature of the prime minister and the concerned minister as stipulated by the Constitution or the laws. He is to be held responsible for the deeds only he undersigns.

If the president signs an order on his own, he is to be held responsible for the results. We added this clause, which was missing in the original version prepared by the Consultative Assembly.

We are not afraid of responsibility. Had we been afraid of responsibility we would not have undertaken this operation.

Furthermore, the draft constitution prepared by the Consultative Assembly said that a law organizes the future life of a retired president. We deleted this article. It is not right for the Constitution to guarantee the future life of a retired president. When the time comes, the Assembly might consider the future of that retired president. If it does not, then that person, that retired president, can go and sit in his house with his pension. I had this article deleted because I thought people might say I had included it in the Constitution for my own personal interest. So I said I do not want such a thing; I would rather live among my people. In fact, that is where we came from, from among the people. There was no need for such an article.

As I said on other occasions, neither I nor my colleagues undertook this operation for a fee. We came to these positions thanks to this nation and this state. If the state had not paid for our tuition, we would not have been able to reach our present positions. We undertook the operation because we saw that the country and the nation were in deep trouble and that they awaited our help, the fulfillment of our duties.

Almost every day we receive letters from people threatening to kill us. We ignore them. We only have one life and we are not greedy for anything. We know where these letters come from. The greatest happiness for us is to see our nation in peace, tranquillity and happiness. That is enough for us.

We know very well that some of the old politicians, not all of them, but especially the leading cadres of the old parties, are giving orders left and right to the old organizational members -- like those who want to divide this country — to say no to this Constitution. Do you see what greed makes people do? It is not because they do not believe in this Constitution or becuase they do not like it. It is only because they cannot be elected once again and because they will not be able to hold the same positions. We know this very well.

However, despite their negative attitudes and behavior, I believe that the great majority or the Turkish nation will approve this Constitution and a new, God willing, bright future will begin for Turkey.

In this way, if a great majority approves this Constitution, that will close the mouths of some of our European friends who have been criticizing us since 12 September 1980. They will say: "Since the Turkish nation approves this Constitution, there is nothing left for us to say." For the time being, they keep on saying that democracy is disappearing or that this or that is happening. Every day they had something to say, as you know. That way, their mouths would also be closed.

My dear brothers, I would like to mention a point I discussed in Antalya as well. Article 69 of the Constitution says that if a party is closed down by the constitutional court — nobody else can close down a party anyway — then the deputies and organization members of that party cannot form a new party again or assume a high-ranking position in a new party to be established. However, this stipulation goes into force only after the Constitution is approved. The point is that the former high-ranking officials of the defunct parties are provoking the former members of thos parties who were provincial or district officials by telling them that they cannot become candidates or join a new party. That is false. They can join parties, they can assume duties in parties. The ban is not against them. It is only against the party leaders and the members of the party administrative council and the members of the party supervisory council, etc.

I felt the need to stress this point once again.

The defendants in today's DEV-SOL trial -- the third since the military coup of September, 1980 -- are accused [of] "attempting to change the existing democratic order through popular war to establish a communist proletarian dictatorship and to commit murder [and] other acts of violence to serve this purpose." The alleged assassins of former Premier Nihat Erim and his bodyguard are among the accused. Today's trial brought the total number of persons accused in connection with DEV-SOL activities to 781, with 238 of them facing the death sentence.

VOTCP WARNS KAYSERI CITIZENS ON EVREN SPEECH

TA290854 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 29 Oct 82

[Text] Citizens of Kayseri, we are appealing to you: Tomorrow the junta head, Evren, and his accomplices will visit your province. What he wants is your votes in the referendum for the constitution. In his speech, Evren will surely claim that he considers himself to be a citizen of Kayseri. If he cares so much for you, why was he silent when you were being thrown out of your jobs, your wages were being reduced and your shops being closed? Why did he not interfere when your salaries were not being paid and the peasants could not receive any payment for the crops they had sold the state? Is this the stand of a person who feels himself to be your citizen? Why did he not act when you were being mistreated and tortured by the gendarmes and policemen?

However, now, because he needs your votes, he will make all kinds of efforts in order to please and deceive you. In Kayseri, he will repeat the lies he told the people in Trabzon, Rize, Erzurum and Diyarbakir. Evren will claim that if you say no to the constitution in the referendum, then peace and tranquillity will be upset, and that if you do not elect him president with your yes vote, terrorism will return. During the speech he delivered in Diyarbakir, talking about the bright future of the people, Evren received the reply he deserved. On behalf of millions of citizens, the inhabitants of Diyarbakir cried out for bread and employment and for new factories. The junta constitution will not be able to provide bread, work and peace to our citizens. What it will impose on our people is hunger, poverty, oppression and slavery.

Citizens of Kayseri, we are asking you: Are you living in peace and tranquillity? Are you not going to bed every night with the fear of what disasters the next day might bring? Is not your wage decreased day by day? Are you able to properly feed your children? Do not allow the junta generals to make fun of you: Do not support the junta generals who are not allowing you to speak your mind, to voice your opinion, to get organized, and who are obliging you to say yes to their black constitution. Put up resistance against oppression!

SETTLEMENT OF TRADE SANCTIONS DISCORD EXPECTED

LD031642 Hamburg DPA in German 1549 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Exceprt] Bonn/Washington; 3 Nov (DPA) -- The Federal Government is awaiting "with certainty" a settlement "in the coming days or weeks" of the transatlantic argument over the American sanctions on trade with the Eastern bloc. This was stated by government spokesman Diether Stolze on Wednesday at a press conference in Bonn. Stolze would give no details about the intensive negotiations between the six industrial nations and the Americans, which were discussed by the Federal Cabinet on Wednesday, except to refer to a "convergence of views." He expressed only the assurance that these negotiations are "progressing well."

From Washington's viewpoint following three talks between the United States and its most important allies, there was no prospective agreement in sight on Wednesday on a new, sharper trade policy toward Moscow. American circles are saying that the French refusal to give up subsidized credits in the future to the USSR has till now prevented further progress.

VOGEL PRESS CONFERENCE ON ELECTIONS, POLICY

LD031454 Hamburg DPA in German 1101 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] Bonn, 3 Nov (DPA) -- SPD chancellor candidate Hans-Jochen Vogel has called on Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl to make it "clear without delay" by what means he intends to fulfill his promise to hold early Bundestag elections on 6 March. Speaking at his first press conference in his new post in Bonn, Vogel said today in a 10-point statement on elections and his policies that the question of fresh elections should no longer be left to speculation; otherwise, the credibility of the government and all parties represented in the Bundestag will suffer. He asked Kohl and all parties for "fair competition" in the election campaign, and said that the priority SPD goals are to combat unemployment and to secure peace and environmental protection.

In Vogel's view, the federal chancellor has the ability to bring about fresh elections on a constitutional basis either by resigning or by a parliamentary vote of confidence. If Kohl does not make use of these possibilities, then his, Vogel's doubts about amending the Basic Law to facilitate the self-dissolution of parliament will be considerably intensified. He said that he will approve such a change in the Constitution only if fresh elections cannot be achieved constitutionally by any other means.

The chancellor candidate said that it is the SPD's "realistic" election goal, following fresh elections, "to again exercise decisive influence on the shaping of the Federal Republic's internal and external relations." Vogel made it clear that he believes this to be possible even with an SPD minority government without an absolute majority. The question of a coalition between his party and the Greens in the Bundestag is, as far as he concerned, not at issue. He does not foresee any such cooperation.

Vogel addded, however, that he can imagine that after an extended process, the Greens might develop the "full ability to make policy and come to an agreement." There will be no concessions or compromise toward the Greens on the issue of nonviolence in politics and recognition of the parliamentary system. Vogel also ruled out the possibility of a large coalition between the SPD and the CDU/CSU. Cooperation between these two camps on individual issues will be possible however, if circumstances require.

FDP LEFTWING MAKES PREPARATIONS TO SPLIT PARTY

LD040026 Hamburg DPA in German 1133 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] Bonn 3 Nov (DPA) -- Preparations in the FDP's extreme leftwing are underway to split the party. The group, which comprises leading representatives of the Young Democrats and "liberal associations," today published a manifesto which is to be submitted as an initiative motion at the national FDP congress which begins on Friday in Berlin, and is regarded as a declaration of war against the majority in the party leadership. If the opponents of party Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher -- as is expected -- do not win in Berlin, this document, it was learned in Bonn, is to form the program's basis for the creation of a new social-liberal party.

The "liberal identity paper," as the Young Democrat's chairman called it in a DPA interview, is politically based on the FDP's Freiburg doctrines of 1971. Specifically, it calls for among other things, a renunciation of plans to site U.S. nuclear weapons in the Federal Republic and an abandonment of nuclear energy. With regard to social policy, the manifesto wants a redistribution "away from the privileged to the underprivileged."

If the FDP leftwingers do not push their ideas through in Berlin, the rival FDP organization is to be founded on 28 November in Bochum. According to the plans which were made known in Bonn the day before that, the Young Democrats will break away from the FDP at an extraordinary national delegates' conference and place their organization in the service of the new party. On Sunday, immediately after the end of the congress, a "national union of the liberal association" is to be founded.

DPA ON PERSHING MISSILE CONVOY ROAD ACCIDENT

LD022314 Hamburg DPA in German 2108 GMT 2 Nov 82

[Text] Waldprechtsweier, Karlsruhe area, 2 Nov (DPA) -- Three people died and two were seriously injured on Tuesday evening near Waldprechtsweier in a serious accident involving a Pershing missile convoy which consisted of three U.S. trucks and a German car. According to police, the Pershing missile, which was filled with over 1000 liters of highly explosive fuel but which did not have a nuclear warhead, did not explode.

The senior state prosecutor said the accident happened when the first U.S. truck, probably due to brake failure, rolled over the German car on a slightly sloping right-hand bend, killing two people in the car and the driver of the U.S. truck. In attempting to avoid the accident, the second military truck careened off the first two vehicles and destroyed three unoccupied parked cars.

German and U.S. police units, which were immediately alerted, sealed off the site of the accident within a radius of 300 meters. At the same time, people were evacuated from the area. The U.S. Army flew in a special detachment from Heilbronn. On Wednesday morning it will attempt to pump out the fuel and the missile to another vehicle.

Missile Removed

LD032336 Hamburg DPA in German 1726 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] Waldprechtsweier, Karlsruhe area: The U.S. Pershing missile involved in the crash between the truck carrying it and a private car in Waldprechtsweier near Karlsruhe was removed on Wednesday evening. The 1,200 inhabitants of the village, who were evacuated as a precautionary measure, were able to return to their homes. Special U.S. Army units transferred the missile to a new carrier in the afternoon. However, the transfer was delayed because of tire damage.

STENBACK SPEAKS IN HAMBURG ON FINLAND'S ROLE

PM040807 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 29 Oct 82 pp 2, 3

[Text "with small deletions" of Finnish Foreign Minister Par Stenback's address to Hamburg Ueberseeklub 19 October: "Finland in the European Security System"]

[Text] From a historical viewpoint, Finland's position in today's European security system could even be described as unusual, especially from the Finn's own viewpoint.

We Finns have learned to consider our country as peripheral and remote from the viewpoint of central Europe; as an economically and demographically small country which is an easy victim for European power politics caught between the superpowers when the continent's fate is determined.

At present, none of these Finnish fears seem to be very real. It is possible to state without exaggeration that Finland's foreign policy is stable. President Kekkonen's remark to the CSCE negotiators in November 1972 -- "Finland has become a positive and enduring element in the political balance in Europe -- has proved to be both a real challenge and a correct prediction.

Finnish democracy is working well, even better and more dynamically than certain other older European democracies comparable with us. We have done well in economic competition, we represent the middle level within the OECD; we even exceed it. The growing pains which were typical when Finland in the late fifties and early sixties in record time became a completely industrialized nation have been overcome in commercial and social life.

In this respect, there is in Finland less conflict and a more far-reaching "social contract" than in most other democracies.

But despite this, Finland does not live on some isolated little island of peace and stability. We share the fate of the rest of Europe, whether this means changes in a post-industrial nation's social and political life and attempts to adapt this to the population's new expectations, reaction and adaption to the new facts dictated to the countries of Europe by developments in the world economy, or participation in the life of the European political system of security and balance.

Finland is in the same boat as the rest of the peoples of Europe. But we now have the feeling and the conviction born of experience that the boat's smallest co-owners can no longer -- as so many times in Europe's past history -- be thrown overboard and drowned one by one. The boat either sails on or it sinks entirely. Things are no better or worse for us than for everyone else.

When I speak of Europe here I hasten to point out that I am speaking of the whole continent; of Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals. Despite major historical political and economic differences, and especially differing basic beliefs covering the whole of social philosophy, Europe's peoples at the present time, -- which is characterized by the threat of total destruction, -- not only have a common fate, they also share a common inheritance and -- I dare say it -- common interests to watch over. Europe's pluralism also gives its richness. We should recognize, permit and make use of this pluralism.

Finland views Europe's security problems from its own geographical-political viewpoint and in the light of its own historical experience. We do not want to be masters of, or some shining example for some other people. Each country has its own unique security policy situation. But we, like others, have the right to put forward our own experiences and views and in this way perhaps make our contribution to the variety of the elements of European security policy.

To begin with, the policy of neutrality was for Finland an unrealized dream, crushed by World War II. After the war it was for Finland a way of keeping out from under the feet of the superpower conflicts. Now we view the policy of neutrality as a method for the entirety of Finland's foreign policy.

As well as its giving us the right and duty not to take sides in international conflicts for one superpower party against the other, Finland is also able to consistently strive to apply its policy of neutrality, through wide-ranging international cooperation, to participate in the quest to finally find generally accepted solutions to international conflicts.

Finland is small and a little remote, and its problems cannot be expected to spark off much interest in Europe. We accept this: We do not want to cause anyone any difficulties, we do not want to cause international dramas, we have no insoluble problems.

Nevertheless, the quintessence of Finnish foreign policy strangely enough still gives rise to misunderstandings elsewhere in Europe. And this especially seems to be the case when international tension increases.

At times it has been especially difficult to explain in an understandable way the fact that Finland's good-neighborly relations with the Soviet Union and Finland's neutralist policy are not in conflict with each other, but rather form an organic whole and are parts of the same political unity.

Finland's neutralist endeavors before World War II were unsuccessful largely because relations between Finalnd and its superpower neighbor were politically inflamed, despite formal correctness, and were colored by mutual mistrust. Against this background the tragic events during the latter half of the thirties led to Finland fithting two wars against the Soviet Union in the period 1939-44.

[Text] Finland emerged from the war as a loser, suffered territorial losses, but retained its independence. We succeeded in building up good relations to the East with a country which because of its size and social philosophy is a fundamentally different from our own. As a basis and central symbol of these relations, the two countries in 1948 entered a friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance treaty, which since that date has formed the basis for Finland's relations to the East -- and the treaty has been extended twice.

This agreement does not create some sort of military alliance between Finland and the Soviet Union, but it does give the Soviet Union guarantees that Finland will never be a base area for attacks directed at the Soviet Union and that, as the pact's first article puts it: "In the event that Finland or the Soviet Union through Finnish territory be subjected to armed attack by Germany or any state allied with it, Finland, faithful to its obligations as an independent state, will fight to aver the attack. In doing so Finland will deploy all the forces at its disposal to defend its territorial integrity on land and sea and in the air and will do so within Finland's borders according to its commitments as specified in this treaty, if necessary with the help of or together with the Soviet Union.

"In the above mentioned case, the Soviet Union will leave to Finland [word or words apparently dropped in original] of the need to summon assistance, on the giving of which the two parties to the treaty agree."

This makes the treaty an insurance agreement, in which the partners have guarded themselves by certain military measures against a situation which does not exist at this very moment and whose occurrence would certainly conflict with the security interests of the parties to the treaty.

We consider the 1948 Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance Treaty between Finland and the Soviet Union today to comprise part of the peace and security system in Europe.

The common ground between the 1948 treaty and Finland's neutralist policy is both historical and substantial. Historical, because only when relations between Finland and the Soviet Union had improved because of this treaty and had been given a durable positive foundation was the Finnish Government able to begin to develop and pursue its neutralist policy. Substantial, because the fundamental point of departure for Finnish foreign policy is and will continue to be the maintenance and preservation of relations based on the treaty.

Finland's own experience of this neighbor-relationship, which has in the opinion of many been forced on Finland by geography and fate, has developed over the decades and become truly positive. We are able to give particular examples of the extent to which trade which bridges socioeconomic obstacles and economic cooperation advantageous to both parties can give results.

We consider that Finnish-Soviet cooperation in the economic field -- even though it does of course spring from the uniquely fertile soil to which the bilateral relations between these two nations amount -- has already been developing for decades into a more general demonstration of what possibilities are offered by inter-European cooperation.

Thus, by going about things openly, Finland has been uniquely able to have natural and unprejudiced dealings with its superpower neighbor in contacts in the cultural field and between people in general.

Now at the beginning of the present decade, the prospects for Finland's own position are stable. But our share of Europe's common fate also gives us reason to look at the problems and difficulties in today's Europe with some concern and assess the general trend of developments.

In simple terms we could put it like this: Finland's security was and can only have a stable foundation if peace in Europe continues and the relations between states develop without sudden dramatic changes or deep-reaching crises.

Finland is a small country which pursues a neutralist policy, and one of its fundamental interests is a stable world order based on international law and durable institutions, the solution of conflicts through peaceful means and the gradual removal of the obstacles to contacts between peoples and individuals for better mutual understanding.

But we do not of course want to close our eyes to things and sink into private daydreams. Unfortunately, today's Europe finds itself surrounded by new worries and difficulties never before experienced. Many different types of economic, social and political factors in our societies -- in both East and West, although of different types -- are putting our ability to accomplish peaceful change to the test.

The people of our continent are consumed by a gnawing concern for a nuclear catastrophe, and the mistrust and uncertainty relating to the durability of the European security model created after World War II has grown. At the same time, it seems as if disarmament endeavors always lag behind developments in arms technology and as if we were attempting to achieve security by constantly raising the arms level.

International cooperation is also shaky. The growing use of force gnaws at the credibility of the United Nations' fundamental mission. The dialogue between various states is forced, and it is particularly hardwork to build up an area of common interests. Differences of opinion come to a head and the overall view of a rival's intentions is colored by gloomy distrust.

The reasons for this trend are hardly to be found in any single factor or event or in the significance such a factor or event may have been ascribed. Rather, we should seek the basic reasons in structural factors and above all in the psychological atmosphere, where the predominant factor has been for a while an almost total absence of mutual trust.

What then is the role offered in such a situation as this for a neutral country, which in accordance with the character of its policies strives to strengthen stability and promote moderate developments?

As far as the structural factors are concerned, Finland of course hopes that its foreign policy -- and in a broader sense the whole of its security policy -- will for its part reduce the need for all manner of speculations directed against us or against areas in our immediate vicinity. In this way, we believe that we can best serve broader European interests.

But alongside this basic Finnish endeavor, we consider it our duty and our right to participate and play an active role in all the joint efforts needed to strengthen security on our continent.

In order to be able to describe the trends to which we also hoped to be able to make a contribution in this decade, I would like to remind you of the common points of departure which the 33 European states and the United States and Canada had when they began the negotiating process which later led to the signing of the Helsinki Final Act in 1975.

The goal was to find a jointly acceptable expression of the political desire shown by all of the 35 states to create in a Europe ravaged by war, a developing process for the improvement of relations between states and peoples and the achievement of functioning cooperation and more open contacts.

Despite the fact that the realization of the Helsinki Final Act has been a slow process and despite the fact that setbacks have caused disappointment, we believe that the process' points of departure are the correct ones and that they are based on our states' actual long-term interests.

Has the process which aims at the above-mentioned goals possessed the necessary relevance to the problems in today's Europe and to their solution?

In my view, yes. But I note that we often forget the fact that contrasts between different social systems are and will continue to be a political reality. We can hardly expect such far-aiming and wide-ranging ambitions for a new type of Europe as those contained in the CSCE to be implemented overnight.

We must accept progress step by step, and at the same time the natural fundamental point of departure should continue to be the adherence to jointly agreed upon commitments.

Further, since security in our own time no longer simply means that a direct threat has been eliminated, we should, since this is an incomparably more far-reaching problem linked to all aspects of the individual's welfare and prosperity, also prepare ourselves to face the fact that the eighties' international politics will mean more pluralist, complex, total and ambitious challenges than in the past.

I believe that new ways of tackling the problems are needed, especially in the field of military security. Despite the fact that the fundamental points of departure for the strategic security model which has stabilized Europe since World War II will undoubtedly persist long into the foreseeable future, we should in my opinion, realize that the problems connected with our continent's military security in this decade more than ever before have an express effect on the whole of the continent; more than ever before they are a common issue for all parties.

Finland hopes on the one hand that the strategic dialogue between the superpowers will continue and on the other that once again we can find ways and means for contacts between all states, both East and West, which carry the responsibility for the security of our continent.

The CSCE follow-up conference which will resume in Madrid 9 November 1982 is in particular, an important forum from the viewpoint of the neutral states which are outside the negotiations: It is a kind of forum where the new ways of tackling the problems I have just described could be promoted.

In addition to the points in the Helsinki document covering human rights and the promotion of freer contacts between people, Finland is especially interested in calling a European disarmament conference. Such a conference would offer a new channel for all states taking part -- both members of alliances as well as the nonaligned -- to discuss legitimate questions of military security. We hope that the Madrid meeting will achieve positive results in this respect.

I believe that a change of fortunes is imminent in the general international situation and that in the long term it will be possible to arrive at a common ground within the overall European framework, even though such a change for the better could take a long time and be more complicated in its character and conditions than the period of detente was in the seventies.

We hope that the future's new detente, together with the dialogue between the two leading superpowers, will build to a greater extent than in the past on the full and actual collaboration of all nations in Europe.

I have drawn a picture of Finland on the map of Europe and have sumbitted various methods of tackling security problems on our continent in this decade.

Finland has its modest, but traditional and, in our opinion, positive place in Europe's security system. From our viewpoint the recognition of the realities in Europe must not mean that we adapt to its weaknesses and difficulties, but should mean long-term endeavors for peaceful step-by-step change.

INVESTIGATION OPENED INTO MISSING IN ARGENTINA

AU031555 Rome ANSA in English 1532 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome November -- The Italian State Prosecutor's Office today announced the opening of an investigation into the case of some three hundred Italians or people of Italian origin who have disappeared in Argentina on the basis of possible charges of kidnapping, murder, massacre, aiding and abetting a crime and failure to notify judiciary authorities of a crime.

The investigators, headed by Assistant State Prosecutor Antonio Marini, will begin their work with the list of missing Italians by birth or origin published earlier this week in CORRIERE DELLA SERA, the Milan daily, and other Italian newspapers following the discovery of mass graves on the outskirts of Buenos Aires. These unmarked graves are thought to contain many of the victims of the "dirty war" on terrorism in Argentina in the mid and late 1970's.

The investigators file will be labeled, "Acts Related to the Disappearance of Italian Citizens," the prosecutor's office said.

The office said that the charge of failure to report a crime may be filed against those who were aware of the facts through contact with the families of the missing persons or with international organizations involved with the developments in Argentina but who did not inform the competent Italian judiciary officials.

Italian law, it was pointed out, provides for an Italian judiciary investigation into crimes committed against Italian citizens abroad and delays in turning information over to the judiciary, in this case, has prevented magistrates from acting with due speed.

Marini, it was learned, has instructed judiciary police to contact the families of the missing persons to attempt to identify them more fully and gather additional facts for the investigation.

The prosecutor will also call a meeting of those officials who knew of the facts of the case but failed to inform the judiciary. They will be asked to explain what steps have been taken up to the present in the matter.

DEPUTY ANDREOTTI RETURNS FROM VISIT TO SYRIA

AU032012 Rome ANSA in English 1920 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 3 -- The most urgent step to restore peace and security for everyone in the Middle East is the return of Lebanon's full sovereignty through withdrawal of all foreign troops from the country, according to Italian lower house foreign affairs commission, Chairman Giulio Andreotti.

Andreotti made the statement on his return today from a visit to Syria where he had talks with President Hafiz al-Asad.

PCI'S CAPPELLONI CLAIMS ANTI-USSR TRENDS IN PARTY

PM040917 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 31 Oct 82 p 11

[PCI Central Committee member and middle classes section chief Guido Cappelloni interview by "F.C." in Rome. Date not specified]

[Excerpt] Rome -- [Question] Do you believe that there are anti-Soviet tendencies or sectors within the PCI?

[Answer] I could not identify them, but I believe that they do exist.

[Question] How do they manifest themselves?

[Answer] For instance, they tend to equate U.S. imperialism and the USSR. I believe, however, that the USSR is still an irreplaceable point of strength and reference in the anti-imperialist struggle.

[Question] In January you failed to vote for Berlinguer's report which basically ratified the "wrench" with the USSR. Are you still convinced that you did the right thing, or have you changed your mind?

[Answer] Since then nothing has emerged to cause me to change my mind. I still make a very negative assessment of events in Poland, but I consider the assertion that the October Revolution's driving force is exhausted, unhistorical and therefore profoundly mistaken. Of course, if the policy document to be used as the basis for our congress debate were to include an explicit critical reappraisal of this assertion, then the way to a solution to some of the disagreements within the PCI would be less difficult.

[Question] Do you mean that it is not enough to drop Berlinguer's formula?

[Answer] It is certainly not enough for me.

[Question] If the document on the "wrench" had been voted on by the entire PCI membership instead of just by the Central Committee, would there have been more extensive disagreement?

[Answer] I believe so.

[Question] Because of the votes of elderly communists and of the working class?

[Answer] Look, the equation of pro-Sovietism with laborism is very artificial. There are many comrades opposed to a "wrench" with the CPSU among the young and also among craftsmen, small businessmen, intellectuals....not only in the working class, and I am pleased this is the case, because I believe it is difficult to build a third way to socialism without the involvement of these social strata. Furthermore, the guarantee that the third way policy does not boil down to social democracy, the correct management of capitalist society, lies partly in maintaining critical but friendly relations with the USSR, with full autonomy of initiatives and decisionmaking.

PCI'S NAPOLITANO ATTENDS MEETING OF UK LEFTISTS

PM031505 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 31 Oct 82 p 3

[Antonio Bronda report: "Napolitano's Talks in London With Labor Party Leaders"]

[Text] London -- "To progress the European left must provide a positive answer to the crisis of capitalist development. It is not enough for it to stress how this crisis has confirmed its analysis of the system's contradictions. It is not enough for it to conduct action of condemnation and propaganda."

This was said by Comrade Giorgio Napolitano of the PCI directorate during a debate on the problems of the European left, organized by two culturally very committed publications: The laborite monthly, NEW SOCIALIST and MARXISM TODAY, which is close to the Communist Party of Great Britain. During his visit to London, Napolitano also attended other events organized by the two magazines.

Within the framework of the PCI's traditional effort to maintain relations with the Labor Party as a whole and with representatives of all its components, Comrade Napolitano had an informal meeting with Peter Shore, the Labor shadow cabinet's secretary of trade; Lord Harold Lever, former chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in previous labor governments; and other members of parliament and political and trade union representatives, including Judith Hart and Stuart Holland.

"Of course, conservative policies are hitting the workers and people's masses hard," Napolitano continued, "but it is necessary not to adopt a purely defensive stance. Real incomes and social gains must be steadfastly defended. Over and above this, however, it is necessary to be able to define and to pursue an alternative economic strategy.

The debate, held at the Friends' House in London, was also attended by Tony Benn of the Labor leadership, who, having expressed his appreciation of the PCI's political commitment and democratic outlook, said that it is impossible to separate the prospects of democratic socialism in Western Europe from the prospects of democracy and socialism throughout Europe. Absolute priority must be given to the detente process, which cannot be based solely on a balance and on guarantees of security from both superpowers. Reasserting his condemnation both of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and of the military swing in Poland, Benn stressed that this does not justify a policy of reprisals and economic sanctions. Next the Labor leader discussed the importance of the peace movement in Europe. Last, Benn discussed the political issues of laborism from the typical stances that have for some time made him a reference point in the party's internal struggle. He was followed by several other speakers, including Labor member of Parliament Stuart Holland, economist Bob Rawthorne, labor and Communist representatives, representatives of the womens liberation movement, and so forth.

Having stressed that the elimination of East-West tension is a precondition for the left's advance in Europe, Napolitano said that monetarist policies have not only had very grave social consequences, but have also failed to ensure a recovery and are actually causing the decline of national economies such as Britain's. This is an essential point of strength for the left.

No lasting economic recovery is possible without thoroughly changing the orientations and machinery of development as it has taken shape in past decades. This change, Napolitano said, must be tackled by the left within a European outlook and with a view to a new international division of labor.

There have certainly been important and significant developments for the left in Europe, the latest being in Spain. They have shown how the rightwing tide, that began some years ago, has been partly reversed and also emphasize the existing possibilities in other countries, where the situation is still difficult for the left. Whether in achieving electoral successes, or above all in achieving substantial results in the direction of surmounting the economic crisis and real social and political change, it is essential to increase efforts to study and define regenerative economic policies in the short, medium, and long terms.

[Text] This morning Gen Victor Lago Roman, chief of the Brunete 1st Armored Division, was murdered in a terrorist attack carried out shortly after 0830 in the area of the Moncloa, specifically in the vicinity of the Arco del Triunfo. General Largo Roman was traveling in his official car accompanied by a lieutenant colonel whose name is not yet known and by soldier driver (Juan Carlos Villalba), 22, whose wounds, according to initial reports, are not serious. According to eyewitnesses, two youths on a motorcycle repeatedly machinegunned the official car.

More on Killing

NC040942 Paris AFP in English 0937 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] Madrid, Nov 4 (AFP) -- General Lago Roman, 63, dressed in his army uniform, was traveling without escort, as he usually did, in his black official car decorated with a two-star military flag, and was easily identifiable. The general, who has eight children, was known as a tough soldier and a loyalist.

He was named commander of the prestigious Brunete Armored Division -- the largest and most modern in the Spanish Army -- on September 30, 1981, when he was also named military governor of Madrid. The Brunete Division is stationed near El Pardo, about 15 kms (nine miles) from Madrid.

He replaced General Carbonell. Another one of his predecessors, General Jose Juste, was placed on the reserve list at his own request following the failed coup on February 23, 1981, when he was accused of lacking firmness with a unit of military police who joined the putschists commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Antonio Tejero.

General Lago Roman joined the Army in July, 1936, and fought for the fascists during the Spanish civil war. He fought in the Azul Division as a lieutenant during the second World War.

MADRID PAPER REVIEWS PSOE'S ELECTION VICTORY

PM031509 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 29 Oct 82 pp 1, 12

[Editorial: "Socialism in Power"]

[Excerpts] The election victory of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] is a historic milestone in Spanish political life.

The presence of Socialist ministers in the republican governments of the first 2 years [1931-1933] and of the stage immediately following the popular front's triumph did not mean the complete shouldering of state responsibilities by the PSOE. Although two prominent Socialist leaders -- Francisco Largo Caballero and Juan Negrin -- held the premiership during the civil war, our country's calamitous history during those 3 years and the abnormal conditions of the exercise of power in the midst of conflict make it possible to assert that Felipe Gonzalez' victory offers the party founded by Pablo Iglesias its first opportunity to direct Spanish policy in a situation of democratic normality.

It is safe to say that last night's Socialist triumph is not due mainly to an ideological vote, based on the theoretical and practical pronouncements of the Second International and of classic Marxism. Rather it seems that a large section of the population has identified the defense of freedoms and the necessary transformation of the Francoist state, whose defects and distortions have survived the process of transition, with the PSOE's program. The Center's division into two different options and the siege of Fraga's right by the most reactionary sectors of Spanish nostaligic conservatism have undoubtedly brought the PSOE many voters. Votes from the Communist Party, the extraparliamentary left, radicalism, ecologism, feminism and liberalism have also contributed to the Socialist victory. Intellectuals, teachers, professionals, manual workers, country dwellers and even an appreciable section of the employers or of the executives' world seem to have helped Felipe Gonzalez' triumph. An interclass and plural nature, not at all dogmatic or comprising a unanimous slab of opinions, is something inherent in the vote which has brought the Socialists to power and which is essentially interested in the defense of democracy, the reform of the administration and curbing the destruction of employment; prompted by the hope that different people with different programs can tackle the problems posed in Spain. Because of all this, the moderation preached by Felipe Gonzalez stems both from a transformation of internal attitudes in his party and from an inevitable influence on the part of the electorate, whose weight (several million votes in comparison with little over 100,000 PSOE members) will be considerable in the future. In this sense it should force Felipe Gonzalez to respect his election program proposals without attempting under internal party pressures to honor from the first day what might well be called the Socialist "maximum program."

The Spanish traditional right's hostility and tension toward the Socialist triumph, which was visible from the first days of the campaign, seems to have no foundation except the displeasure of people who find their position of personal power threatened. In fact, the proposals of the Socialist Party's platform are extraordinarily moderate as regards the economy. The only foreseeable nationalization measure -- that of the power grid -- does not seem an institutional threat to financial and industrial sectors which grew in the hothouse of the state's protectionist and interventionist policy during the dictatorship. The conviction that Francoism's model of economic growth -- characterized by a close connection between the oligarchies' private interests and state interference in economic activity -- has decayed, and the certainty that the responses to the crisis do not allow any government a wide scope for action have helped reassure large sectors of economic power. Nevertheless, the persistence in those sectors of former protagonists of the civil war -- personalities linked to the most reactionary conception of Spain and well connected with the putschist apparatus and the political extreme right -- has caused that rise in tension within the right on which we commented earlier. No less, moreover, than the presence in that ultramontane [supremacist] constellation of representatives of the upper echelons of the state administration, whose power derives from that same model of growth and whose privileges and sinecures within an obsolete administrative structure are threatened by the announced Socialist reform.

A glance at the "difficult laws" of the transition -- the laws on incompatibilities, university autonomy and the reform of the administration -- shows to what extent the bureaucratic apparatus' conservative and selfish influence can organize in the near future an attempt at dogged opposition to the Socialist government's measures, which are aimed, in Felipe Gonzalez' words, at making this country work.

This whole mesh of dissatisfactions among the right, fostered by the euphoria of the excellent results secured by Manuel Fraga, could be channeled both toward a tough opposition in the Cortes -- which will be a purely verbal opposition, since the Socialists have a sufficient and trong majority which will enable them to govern for 4 years -- and toward the support of some of those sectors for putschist conspiracies. A cursory analysis of the "military problem" in Spain tells us that this is a profound and grave issue which requires long-term treatment and with which the Socialists, like the centrists previously, must learn to live. To separate the necessary and urgent suppression of the subversive plots from what in many matters and outlooks is an Army rooted in the past; while at the same time adjusting to the inevitable arms and organizational modernization of the armed forces, will be no easy task. Moreover, it would be absurd to disregard the crucial event which 23 February constituted in this country and the underlying issues posed between civil society and the armed forces. This is perhaps the hottest matter of the next period of our history. But it is also true that there are grounds and signs for optimism; from the figure of the king, essential in the handling of the "military problem" intended by the government, to the existence of a modern and advanced civil society, incapable of accepting again systems of government comparable to gansterism.

Perhaps a key part of all this analysis is the conduct adopted by the Socialist government on the issue of NATO. There are clearly obstacles to the carrying out of its promise of a referendum on our membership of the alliance in the short term, and even in the medium term. The absence of external support for putschist wishes -- let us say it clearly; the certain assumption that a military junta in Spain is something not wanted by the Reagan administration, and far less since the coup in Poland -- could perhaps be reassessed if the referendum comes to be called. Socialist caution about the matter has mounted during the campaign. It seems clear that a revision of the negotiation on the U.S. bases and a curb on the process of military integration into the Atlantic alliance will be the only two points in which Felipe Gonzalez' cabinet will prove more active in this field, leaving the referendum for a better opportunity, which some people even place in the following legislative term.

DENMARK

ELLEMANN-JENSEN ON MIDEAST, EEC-U.S. DISPUTE

PM031555 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 31 Oct 82 pp 12, 13

[Interview with Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen by Niels Norlund: "On Europe's Behalf, date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] Enoch Powell, an arrogant but not ungifted gentleman in English politics, last week wrote a critical article on U.S. Middle East policy. He also set off some fireworks over the EEC's eagerness to get involved. Let me quote: "Now we also have countries like Denmark and Luxembourg, who noisily grace the world with their incomprehensible views on persons and places in an area where they have no more power, and therefore, no more responsibility than a European housefly." That is really rather a bitter mouthful, but is he not a little right? Are we not rumbling with a little too much borrowed strength when you fly to the Middle East as Europe's number one man?

[Answer] If I was going there to put forward purely Danish views, he would have been right. However, that is not the case. I am not going there as Danish foreign minister. I am going there with a number of views on which The Ten have been able to agree and with the influence that comes from the fact that I am the spokesman for The Ten. My colleagues said at the Hesselet meeting that they thought it would be a good idea if the tradition from previous chairmanships was followed and contact maintained with the main countries in the Middle East and that at the moment it was especially important that some sign be given vis-a-vis the new government in Lebanon.

[Question] Do you not feel when you are entrusted with this mission, sometimes, in all humility, that you are a very small man wearing a very, very, very big hat?

[Answer] Yes, indeed.

[Question] So, I would like to ask: What is the purpose of the mission to Lebanon, and perhaps to Jordan in particular?

[Answer] There are several objectives. First, it is a courtesy visit. We would like to show our support and sympathy by paying a visit.

[Question] Are you bearing gifts?

[Answer] That's another thing. I will discuss with them whether The Ten can give economic aid for reconstruction. I am not taking finished projects. I have a number of possibilities to take with me which I can discuss and get a reaction to. Then there is a third factor, and this is where Jordan enters the picture. I will sound out feelings for the various peace plans that have surfaced. I will not force views on anyone, but will seek to find out their assessments.

[Question] Is it not something of an empty gesture, the fact that the EEC immediately has to get into the picture, when Europe is already down there -- in the form of France with troops and influence, and Italy, alongside the United States?

[Answer] Yes, but it's like that in many fields. Some of the larger members act in their individual capacities, and there is still a strength in the fact that we are also able to act as The Ten. Enoch Powell was right that what Denmark or Luxembourg -- and we could mention a lot more -- think about things is a matter of anesthetic indifference to people in the Middle East. However, in the course of the last year, The Ten have begun to speak with one voice as far as world trouble spots are concerned. I see this as a positive development. I don't think that Enoch Powell does.

[Question] What has the EEC achieved with its demonstratively independent political activity in the Middle East since the Venice Declaration on the Palestinians? Has it achieved any more than irritating the United States and Israel?

[Answer] We certainly have not irritated the United States. To the contrary, the U.S. attitude, as expressed in President Reagan's speech 1 September, seems to be moving more and more in the direction of the views put forward by Europe....

[Question] Yes, but not because Europe put them forward, more because of what Israel has done in Lebanon, if I may say so.

[Answer] Perhaps Europe has been more far-sighted on that point than the United States, and now we can be happy that there is growing harmony between the U.S. and the European view of the situation.

[Question] Perhaps because the United States could not adopt a more positive attitude toward the Palestinians until the PLO was destroyed as a military factor.

[Answer] Yes, indeed. That has helped things along. At the same time, a much more fluid situation has been created where we could envisage Europe acting as one of the catalysts to get some things moving in the right direction.

[Question] Is there need for more than one catalyst? Is it not crucially important that the U.S. mediation attempt be allowed to work in peace at the moment?

[Answer] The United States is more than and different from a catalyst -- that goes without saying. I believe that we have a value as a catalyst, but I am not going to the Middle East with great exaggerated ideas about how important and valuable this trip will be.

[Question] When you hold talks with the Arab side on The Ten's behalf and in doing so represent a united European approach, will this be in complete agreement with the Danish stance? Or is there a more noticeable bias in the direction of the Palestinians because you are the European spokesman?

[Answer] No, it is part and parcel of European cooperation that the things about which Europe speaks with one voice will always be an expression of what every nation is able to support. Obviously, this has its limitations, just as a convoy always has to sail at the speed dictated by the slowest ship.

[Question] But in this situation do we not perhaps abandon a little of our slightly more positive attitude toward Israel, our slightly greater understanding of Israel, than other European countries have?

[Answer] No. There is a strange interplay between all the different elements. It is not only Denmark which has a traditionally positive attitude to Israel. There are differences in the attitudes of the Ten. They have very different priorities. I think, however, that we deal with them reasonably well. It is true that at present we are strongly critical of Israel. What Israel has done recently in Lebanon deserved that condemnation. It has to be possible for us -- both as Denmark and as a member of the Ten -- to tell our good friends in the Middle East that they are not making peace endeavors any easier.

[Question] Without Israel's actions in Lebanon, you would probably not be on your way to Amman now....

[Answer] Or Beirut.

[Question] It is also going to be possible to create greater harmony between U.S. and European views on issues affecting relations across the Atlantic?

[Answer] We will have to live with the economic differences between Europe and the United States. Some very natural competition and some very natural differences in interests exist. From time to time we could be forced to make some agreements that are difficult for both sides in order to overcome this. We have just succeeded with steel, and this is in fact a historic step forward -- we have been able to deal with the differences in interests in such a sensitive area without ignoring the fact that it is natural for them to exist. Much worse are the political disagreements which affect the economic ones.

[Question] Have we currently fundamentally different views on how relations with the Soviet Union should be?

[Answer] There are fundamental differences. It is difficult to free oneself from the feeling that, shall we say, the hawks from California have too square [firkantet] a view of East-West relations, and it does not help that they act in accordance with it by going over the heads of their allies in Europe, who after all have greater experience in relations with the Eastern bloc countries. We have differing views on what should be done. We in Europe attach greater importance to dialogue, in part because it is more in our interests. The Americans have opted for sanctions in a number of cases where we have no faith in them; in part from the historical experience that sanctions do not work, in part because it is we who are hardest hit by them. But also perhaps because there is a weakness in the U.S. argument. They say, for example, that we strengthen the Soviet conomy by building pipelines and buying natural gas from the Soviet Union, while Reagan says that he is draining currency from the Soviet economy when he sells 23 million tons of grain to the Soviet Union....

[Question] But surely the argument is that we are supplying it with currency and he is draining it....

[Answer] Yes, and it's just not true. You do not need to read economics at Copenhagen University for many semesters to see that....

[Question] But he hasn't....

[Answer] No, but the same is true elsewhere. He is forgetting one of the classical mechanisms in economics, which was described by old Ricardo [British economist, 1772-1823]: The one called comparative trading differences [komparative handelsforskelle]. When Reagan sells grain to the Soviet Union, he is selling a product which the Americans are better at producing than the Russians. In this way, the Russians save production factors, such as the necessary artificial fertilizers, which cost so much energy. It is not the currency it costs the Russians to buy grain we should be looking at, but the currency they save by having energy liberated in their own system which would otherwise have to be used in grain production. This is what lies at the heart of the concept of comparative trading advantages [komparative handelsfordele], and in reality this means that U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union must amount to an even greater vitamin injection for the Russian economy than further natural gas purchases by Western Europe. This means that we are unable to properly accept the whole heartedness in U.S. arguments.

[Question] Are there endeavors taking place to overcome the political-economic conflicts?

[Answer] The new U.S. secretary of state, George Shultz, took a very positive initiative at our foreign ministers' meeting in Canada. He attempted to move the conflict up to a higher level and get us to discuss what global strategy we as good friends and allies should stake out. On the basis of his ideas, we are now busy preparing a series of discussions within the framework of those who participate in the economic summits -- that is, the seven leading industrialized nations: The United States, Canada, Japan and the four big Europeans, plus the EEC Commission and the EEC chairman -- Denmark, this year. On our side, we have just reached agreement on the interesting format that it will be the EEC chairman and commission who will speak on behalf of the whole community, and therefor also on behalf of the four large EEC nations, so that we will avoid in advance a European split at the talks.

They will be extremely difficult talks, becuase there are such different views. However, I believe -- and this can only be something I believe -- that it will be possible to reach agreement on some overriding principles. On, for example, the sale of advanced technology to the Soviet Union; credit policy and a more differentiated approach to relations with individual countries in the Eastern bloc, a view to which I as a Dane have attached special importance. The difficult things, however, will be when the overriding principles are put into concrete action. This will probably not be until some time next year. It will be difficult.

[Question] There is another difficult problem in the coming years: the missile question?

[Answer] I have noted with great concern [former Danish Prime Minister] Anker Jorgensen's arguments for a sudden reversal of attitude to the December 1979 dual decision -- the one that was made here in Denmark with kid gloves as it were. There can be no doubt that he has a deep emotional involvement in the cause of disarmament, and this is a good thing. However, it embarrasses me that he allows himself to be led by his feelings into actions which could in reality damage disarmament. Only when we have a balanced situation will we be able to begin reductions. Today we have nothing to give the Russians in return for their withdrawal of some of the SS-20 missiles. Why then should they withdraw them? Because they think that we are nice guys? Because they think that there is something in what Anker says about there being something nasty about the missiles? No. Russians do not behave like that. They must have something in return. They have to see that we really mean it. That is why we must continue the infrastructure program now in progress so that the Russians can see that there are no hitches.

It worries me that Social Democrats everywhere, large and important parties as they are, give these totally popularist views free rein the moment they enter the opposition. That is dangerous. It concerns me all the more, because I see one of the most important tasks of every Danish foreign minister as ensuring that the rest of the world sees Danish foreign policy as something with continuity. A government's task must be to pursue a foreign policy which can create maximum possible agreement. This is what former foreign ministers did, whether they were Liberals or Social Democrats, and I would like to continue the line. However, this requires an opposition which is responsible and interested in demonstrating this broad agreement to the rest of the world. I take the view that this is something of central importance to the maintenance of our credibility internationally.

JORGENSEN ON SOCIAL DEMOCRATS' NUCLEAR POLICY

PM031013 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 23 Oct 82 p 2

[Social Democratic Party chairman, former Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen's article: "We Must Have the Courage To Keep Ahead of the East on Disarmament"]

[Text] Nuclear rearmament in both East and West give rise to understandable concern. In itself, it is the most serious threat to mankind. What is especially worrying is that not enough respect or attention is being given to the calls from ordinary people for an end to this rearmament.

Social Democrats in Denmark and in other countries have always worked to promote detente and have always stressed their willingness to make use of every opportunity for disarmament. In this respect, I am surprised at France's new plans in the nuclear arms field.

The Social Democratic Folketing group gave its support to the stance that Denmark should not make any contribution to nuclear armaments. We have said that the section of the NATO infrastructure program covering the 572 new medium-range missiles must be put on ice. There are nonsocialist politicians who say that the Social Democratic Party has changed its position on this.

However, it is the case that within the Social Democratic Party there is a continuing debate on how we can best serve the interests of detente. Rearmament serves no purpose.

There is much to indicate that the concepts of defense and attack are becoming more meaningless as far as nuclear arms are concerned. This creates anxiety and insecurity among the peoples of the world. The violent reactions and protests against nuclear arms plans in a number of countries articulate their clear message. We should be attentive to these demonstrations. I expressed views like these on behalf of the Social Democratic government at the NATO meeting in Bonn and at the UN disarmament conference in June this year.

The Social Democratic Party's recent steps on the section of the NATO infrastructure program dealing with nuclear arms are a natural consequence of the attitude we have always had. We do not want nuclear arms on Danish territory. We want the Nordic area to continue to be a nuclear-free zone, and we want to work for a nuclear-free status for a larger part of Europe -- indeed for the whole of it. This means on both sides of the line which divides Europe. Even at the NATO meeting in December 1979, the Social Democratic government was opposed to any decision for the installtion and deployment of new nuclear arms in Europe.

We attached importance to the consideration that all possible channels of negotiation should be tried before NATO implements the deployment of significant new missile systems. This was accepted, and these negotiations are now taking place in Geneva. In addition, it is important that Denmark should wait for the decision of the individual NATO nations which, under the 1979 plan, will be directly affected by the decision on the deployment of nuclear-armed missile systems.

The Social Democratic Party is not a supporter of unilateral disarmament. However, it is an illusion to believe it possible to promote detente and disarmament by deploying even more nuclear arms. We must have the courage to stay ahead of the East in the pursuit of disarmament. In doing so, we would exert greater moral pressure on the Warsaw Pact in the current negotiations pressure which must show that the Eastern Bloc must also add facts to all its talk of disarmament. There are those who will say that this is naive, but the alternative is frightening. Everyone can see that the continuing massive buildup of nuclear arsenals is more dangerous than anything else. That is why this nuclear rearmament must be stopped.

FINLAND

ELLEMANN-JENSEN ON NORDIC ZONE, EEC TARIFFS, CSCE

PM040945 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 29 Oct 82 p 6

[Interview with Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen by Sigyn Alenius: "Denmark Will Not Block Punitive Tariffs Against Sweden"]

[Text] Copenhagen -- "This is my first official visit," said Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen, 41, who today begins a 2-day official visit to Helsinki. In doing so, he stressed the importance which the nonsocialist Schluter government gives to Finland, not only as an old Nordic friend and a country with a similar culture, but also and not least, because of Finland's position of the political map of the world.

Minister Uffe Ellemann-Jensen arrived late yesterday evening and will return to Denmark on Saturday [30 October]. His talks will principally be with his counterpart, Minister Par Stenback. He is accompanied on his visit by his wife, Alice Vestergaard, a journalist with Danish television -- a job Minister Ellemann-Jensen also had before he became a Folketing member 5 years ago and a member of the government a month ago.

An important question for Finland is the Nordic nuclear-free zone: What does the new Danish Government say?

"The stable security balance in the Nordic area is of fundamental significance. We in Denmark view the fact that the Nordic area is and will remain a nuclear-free zone as a crucial element in this context. No further fixing of this fact in a treaty is necessary.

The discussion on a nuclear-free zone running through the European Continent should not just be a debate between the Soviet Union and the Nordic countries, but should be placed in a broader context. The framework should be broader, the minister said, and in order to realize a nuclear-free zone running through Europe, unambiguous guarantees for its nuclear-free status should be given not only by he West, but on both sides of the dividing line.

And what is the Danish Government's view of the possibility that NATO troops coming to Denmark in a war or crisis situation could be armed wtih nuclear weapons? In Norway, the debate on the nuclear-free zone has flared up against the background of this in the last few days.

"I would like to answer that question with a counterquestion," Minister Ellemann-Jensen said. "What guarantees do we have on our side that in such a situation the Soviet Union's troops will not be carrying nuclear arms?" "We in Denmark attach the greatest importance to the disarmament negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union," the minister said, "and a requirement for these is balance -- like against like. At present, the Soviet Union with its SS-20 missiles is on a higher level of rearmament. That is why NATO should deploy its controversial missiles, for the Soviet Union cannot be expected to stop rearming or to dismantle the SS-20 missiles already deployed unless they gain some advantage for doing so. The price which NATO will have to pay is to dismantle its corresponding missiles. That is why the missiles should first be deployed in the agreed Western European countries so that NATO has something to negotiate with. This is regrettable," Minister Ellemann-Jensen said. "But the Social Democrats are not only saying 'no'; their 'no' is a temporary 'no,' in other words a delay."

Can the Madrid Conference -- despite the existing difference between the United States and the Soviet Union and the United States and the other states of the West -- lead to any results?

"The Madrid Conference, which resumes in November, got off to a difficult start," the minister said. "But as serious as the world situation is, it is doubly important that we make every sacrifice to further progress with detente. The conference's proposal for a final document drawn up by eight neutral states, including Finland, is seen as an excellent point of departure by Denmark, but there should be further work on the details. It should, for example, be possible to further develop the question of human contacts.

"There are also conflicts of interest between the West and the United States. We have to admit this," the minister said. "The United States is going for a more aggressive line toward the Soviet Union. The Western countries in Europe want to preserve dialogue and see their interests in the maintenance of reasonable relations with the Soviet Union, since Western Europe is very interested in trade with the East."

"What is important when the conference gets underway again is to prevent it getting stuck on a discussion of details, for example, Poland. The West European states are firmly in favor of the round of negotiations that has been decided and have in fact already begun with the aim of raising problems of detail -- Poland and others -- to the global level. Japan should also be involved here. We should, as the EEC foreign ministers' meeting 10 days ago said, keep the East-West dialogue going and work for a constructive final document from Madrid. This is a view which Denmark supports in full."

Does Denmark's membership in the EEC get in the way of Nordic cooperation?

"No, quite the reverse," Minister Ellemann-Jensen categorically replied. "The two circles of cooperation reinforce one another. We see this time after time, in the United Nations for example -- most recently it was the Finnish UN ambassador who on behalf of all the Nordic countries succeeded in solving the problem of Israeli membership by using a procedural ploy. This dealt with a question that was so serious that it actually threatened the existence of the whole United Nations, and here the Nordic countries acted jointly."

A Nordic dissonance -- not to call it a quarrel -- has arisen as a result of the Swedish devaluation with the effects this has on the other Nordic states. Could there be a trade war in the Nordic area or between the EEC and Sweden?

"Trade war is a strong expression. We are far too calm and collected for that. However, just as the other Nordic countries are angry with the Swedes, annoyance is great within the EEC. Sweden has helped itself to a share of international employment which affects the rest of us. Sweden has acted from national egoism, and we strongly dislike that." "The EEC is now threatening to introduce tariffs on certain Swedish paper products as a reprisal. If it does so, Denmark will not oppose them. The matter is also being investigated by the EEC Commission. It could be some time before the report is ready, but this does not mean that the mood -- solid disapproval of the Swedes -- will change."

The minister also said that in Helsinki he will raise with Minister Stenback the shoe sole question, seen by Denmark as an example of insufficient Finnish solidarity. Finland has decided that as far as shoe soles are concerned, not to respect the 80 percent figure which is normally recognized as the ceiling for Finnish supplies in the trade with the Soviet Union. This means that foreign goods, chiefly Danish, have been able to comprise 20 percent of shoe sole exports to the Soviet Union. Finland has now decided to change this. Denmark views this as a direct threat, Minister Ellemann-Jensen said.

"We have complained to GATT," the minister said, "and we have already raised the matter at the mixed EEC commission at which matters relating to the free trade countries (and therefore Finland) are dealt with. If Finland does not give a little," Minister Ellemann-Jensen said, "Denmark could easily resort to countermeasures."

BATTALION TO JOIN UN FORCE IN LEBANON IN DEC

LD031558 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] President Mauno Koivisto today decided to place a Finnish battalion of 460 men on United Nations peacekeeping duties in Lebanon. The commander of the Kemi Military District, Lieutenant Colonel (Matti Skyttae), was appointed commander of the peacekeeping unit at an extraordinary cabinet meeting chaired by the president. The commander of the battalion and 11 members of an advance group will fly to the operational area in southern Lebanon early tomorrow morning. The main force will come into service on 15 November at the UN training center in Niinisalo and is expected to be ready to go to Lebanon by about 10 December.

Foreign minister Par Stenback noted at a news conference today that the purpose of sending a Finnish peacekeeping force is to support the prestige of the United nations and to bring peace to southern Lebanon.

Stenback Explains Decision

LD031800 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1040 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Interview of Finnish Foreign Minister Par Stenback with reporter Timo Antilla on 3 November -- Recorded, Place not Specified]

[Excerpt] A Finnish battalion of 460 men will go to Lebanon for UN peacekeeping duties by the middle of December. The Finnish battalion will replace Nepalese troops operating in the area earlier. This is how Foreign Minister Par Stenback explains this morning's decision to send the Finnish troops: [Stenback] The political basis is Finland's credibility with regard to the United Nations. We have supported the United Nations on so many occasions, and especially in Lebanon. The United Nations has now suffered a number of defeats, including political defeats. Thus, refusing this task requested by the secretary general would have meant a loss of credibility for us.

[Question] What do you think is the importance of these troops in Lebanon?

[Answer] Another reason for sending these peace-keeping troops is that we believe and hope the continuing UNIFIL presence in southern Lebanon will calm the situation and help Lebanon to overcome its difficulties, and will, perhaps, lead or contribute to the withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanese territory. We know, however, that unrest and internal differences in Lebanon will continue, and in these conditions UNIFIL is needed.

[Question] How long will these Finnish troops stay in Lebanon?

[Answer] Formally, only until the middle of January. After that, a new decision will be taken. Naturally, it would be politicaly difficult to withdraw from there immediately, but we have a formal, theoretical possibility of withdrawing from there fairly quickly if conditions should prove difficult.

PAPER VIEWS BREZHNEV'S 'MILITANT' 27 OCT SPEECH

PM031645 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 29 Oct 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Brezhnev's Hard Words"]

[Text] The Soviet Union still wants detente, but if we are to be able to meet the threat from the United States, words will not be enough. The Armed Forces' combat-readiness must be increased and the level of military technology improved. The resources for achieving these goals will be placed at the defense forces' disposal.

This is the gist of a speech President Leonid Brezhnev delivered to 500 high-ranking officers and Defense Ministry officials summoned to the Kremlin on Wednesday [27 October]. The speech was strikingly militant in its tone. The need for detente and negotiations between East and West, which has been a standing theme in Brezhnev's addressed in recent years, was mentioned only in passing this time, diplomatic observers in Moscow point out.

The United States has launched a political, ideological and economic offensive against socialism, the Soviet leader said. U.S. policy is characterized by adventurism and unconcealed egoism.

Relations between the Soviet Union and the United States have been growing ever frostier, and the negotiations the two superpowers are holding in Geneva on the control of nuclear armaments in Europe and at the strategic level have not yet made any appreciable progress. Brezhnev did not mention these negotiations, but it is probable that, impatient with the stagnation in Geneva, he wanted to put greater pressure on the U.S. administration with his speech. It is obvious that he had the United States in mind when he raised Soviet-Chinese relations in his address. Recently, Brezhnev has repeatedly advocated a rapprochment between the Soviet Union and China, and recently preparatory talks were begun in Beijing on solutions to the ideological and territorial bones of contention between the two countries.

Despite the fact that the talks got off to what would seem to be a less than promising start, Brezhnev was remarkably optimistic in his Wednesday speech in his references to the possibility of normalizing relations. Because of present U.S. policy, it is important that the Soviet Union maintain its relations with other countries, Brezhnev stressed, and in that context, gave a special mention to China. Even though the Soviet president's speech was full of warnings, both explicit and implicit, to the United States, he was obviously speaking primarily to his audience. As far as is known, there is no previous example of defense forces' representatives being called together to receive a message from the nation's leader. The meeting in the Kremlin should of course be seen in the light of growing international needs, but the Soviet Union's internal problems, which are growing more and more difficult to overcome, are also bound to play an important part in the equation. At a time when the country's economic resources are growing scarcer and the citizens stand in line in front of empty stores, the political leadership has realized the need to make sure of the confidence of the military, which has now been given the desired message: It interests will, as always, be given priority.

The U.S. administration is working out plans to slow down Soviet rearmament through economic sanctions of various types. There is nothing to indicate that such a policy has any prospect of success. In the Soviet Union, the general's words carry a lot of weight.

U.S.' CHAPMAN TO VISIT; POSSIBLE USSR INITIATIVE

NC031258 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] The government spokesman today confirmed that Mr Christian Chapman, who was recently appointed special coordinator in the U.S. Department of State on the Cyprus issue, is to visit Cyprus for orientation contacts. The spokesman said that Mr Chapman's visit will take place during the current month.

At the same time, while answering questions, the government spokesman said the question of a possible initiative by the Soviet Government for the convocation of an international conference on the Cyprus issue, as suggested by the Soviet Government itself, has been thoroughly discussed. The spokesman added that it is not appropriate to say anything more at present.

KIPRIANOU TO BRIEF PARTY LEADERS ON TALKS

NC031310 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] President Kiprianou intends to brief the party leaders on his recent talks in the international arena on the Cyprus issue. This statement has been made by the government spokesman in answer to a question if there had been any developments in the Cyprus issue in the past 10 months that would justify the convening of the National Council.

The spokesman said: The president of the republic intends to brief the party leaders on his recent talks with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou, his talks in New York and in the Soviet Union and on his talks with GDR State Council Chairman Honecker during the latter's recent visit to Cyprus. The briefing will also cover various other contacts recently held by the Cyprus Government.

There is no need for an immediate convocation of the National Council, the spokesman said, adding that if dicatated by circumstances, the president will convene it. The spokesman further stressed that at any rate, it is the president's intention, in the event he is rejected, to deal with the question of the National Council in general and to make it, in addition to its consultative nature, a more effective institution which would serve not only the national cause, but also secure the necessary concord which is ipso facto difficult to achieve during the preelection period.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN REPLIES TO DENKTAS COMMENTS

NC032142 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] Commenting on a statement by Turkish Cyproit leader Denktas that Brezhnev's statements must be interpreted as an invitation to Kiprianou to pursue the correct course on the Cyprus issue and, in Denktas' words, to come to his senses, the government spokesman tonight stressed that Denktas' attempt to point our the correct course to the president of the republic causes laughter to say the least.

The government spokesman added that this is because it is the policy followed by the Turkish Cypriot leader and by Ankara which has made it impossible to find a solution to the Cyprus problem to date.

With respect to the interpretation given by Denktas to the Soviet president's statements, this is obviously an attempt to distort and simply expresses the heavenly desires of Denktas, the spokesman added.

The spokesman then stressed that both in the statement made by the Soviet leader during the Kremlin dinner in honor of Kiprianou and in the joint communque on the visit to the USSR, there is a clear emphasis on the need for total and immediate implementation of the UN resolutions on Cyprus.

The Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side not only accepted but also are pressing for implementation of these resolutions, the spokesman said, while by contrast, the Turkish Cypriot leadership and Ankara insistently refuse to comply with the decision of the international organization.

The spokesman added that the position of the two sides on this issue makes it clear that the Brezhnev statements and the joint communique must be interpreted as an invitation not to Kiprianou, but to Denktas and, by extension, to Ankara, to pursue the correct course and to come to their senses.

Referring to other points in the Denktas statement, the government spokesman said the Cyprus Government never denied the existence of the Turkish Cypriot community and never opposed guaranteeing its legal rights. He added that responsibility for paralyzing the work of the committee on missing persons does not rest with the president of the republic, as alleged by Denktas, but with the Turkish Cypriot leadership and with Ankara.

Denktas, the government spokesman concluded, permanently sits in a glass house, and it is neither prudent nor of any purpose for him to cast stones.

O AGON FEARS RESULTS OF KIPRIANOU USSR VISIT

NC031152 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 3 Nov 82 p 1

["My Opinion" column by the "Observer": "He Gave Much; He Received Nothing -- the Soviet-Cypriot Communique Much Worse Than Expected" -- capitalized words as published in original]

[Excerpts] The joint Soviet-Cypriot communique, which was released yesterday after President Kiprianou concluded his visit to the Soviet Union, is much worse than we expected it to be.

It is much worse because its content most clearly proves that virtually:

-- Without receiving anything more than some platonic declarations from the big Soviet Union, small Cyprus CEDES A LOT by offering full support for the Soviet policy on many internatioanl issues.

-- MR KIPRIANOU HAS GIVEN MUCH AND RECEIVED NOTHING. He has received wishes and he himself has offered ABSOLUTE ALIGNMENT WITH THE INTERNAITONAL POLICY OF THE SOVIET UNION. This stand cannot but cause reaction in the West and, moreover, exposes Cyprus' nonaligned policy, which appears to be sliding toward the East.

However, what do we consider as unacceptable in the joint communique?

-- We consider it UNACCEPTABLE that the Turkish invasion and occupation are not condemned.

-- We consider it UNACCEPTABLE that the withdrawal of all foreign troops is demanded without making particular mention of the Turkish occupation troops.

The communique is very correct in strongly condemning the Israeli occupation in Lebanon.

However, while the two sides say all this about Lebanon, while they condemn the criminal aggression of Israel and while they demand its IMMEDIATE AND UNCONDITIONAL WITHDRAWAL FROM LEBANON, with regard to the Cyprus issue:

1. They do not condemn Turkey's criminal aggression against Cyprus and the policy of genocide which that country has implemented against the Hellenism of Cyprus.

2. They do not demand the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops.

The joint communique reiterates the stereotype Soviet position in support of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus, respect for its nonaligned policy and so forth.

However, what is surprising and what we consider as strange is that the communique includes a paragraph asking that "the legitimate interests of both communities" be taken into account in finding a Cyprus solution.

This can be interpreted by the Turkish side as it sees fit and it can exploit it in any way it likes as long as the communique does not explicitly define these "legitimate interests" of the two communities.

For us the Greek Cypriots, who make up 80 percent of the Cypriot population, what is legitimate is the participation of both the communities in ruling the country in accordance with their population ratio.

For Denktas, however, the "legitimate right" of his community, which make up 18 percent of the population, is to equally participate with the 80 percent in the ruling of the country.

For the Soviet Union, however, what are the "legitimate interests" of the two communities? The joint communique does not tell us.

Moreover, Mr Kiprianou did not hesitate in agreeing to include in the joint communique a paragraph accusing the Western powers of dangerously aggravating the international situation, promoting confrontation, maintaining the existing sources of tension and conflicts, and creating new ones.

These are the reasons why we consider the joint communique as being much worse than we expected.

These are the reasons why we insist that Mr Kiprianou has not secured anything new for Cyprus, whereas he has ceded a lot to the Soviet Union and offered absolute alignment with the Soviet policy on international issues.

These are the reasons why we fear that the joint communique will cause reaction in Western capitals and further impede Papandreou's policy on the Cyprus issue.

These are the reasons why we repeat that Cyprus' nonaligned policy is dangerously sliding toward the East with unpredicted consequences for our country.

ANKARA COVERAGE OF TERRORIST ATTACK IN COLOGNE

Attackers Called 'Leftists'

TA031512 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] A group of armed extreme leftists occupied the Turkish Consulate General in Cologne, FRG, around noon today. The aggressors have taken the consulate general officials hostage.

According to reports that have reached our news center from various sources, the incident occurred as follows: A group of extreme leftist militants, whose number has not yet been indentified, occupied the Turkish Consulate General in Cologne at 1250 Turkish time. Shots were heard, but it is not yet certain whether there are any wounded. The extreme leftist armed militants then released 30 to 40 of the people who were at the consulate on business. The consulate personnel are being held hostage, however.

The German police have taken strict measures around the consulate. The street on which the consulate is situated has been closed to traffic, and the building has been cordoned off.

Representations are being made with the FRG Government in Ankara and Bonn for the rescue of the hostages being held by the terrorists, and for the effective protection of other Turkish representations.

Occupation Ends

TA040519 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] The armed terrorists who are members of an extreme leftist organization and who occupied the Turkish Consulate General in Cologne have released all the hostages and ended their action. The nine armed terrorists who raided the consulate building yesterday surrendered to the FRG police at about 0400. It has been reported that the health of the 13 officials who work at the consulate general is good.

A Foreign Ministry statement on the subject says: Armed terrorists belonging to the [Dev-Sol Revolutionary Left] organization, which aims at destroying the independence of our country and at dividing it in a bid to establish a Marxist-Leninist order, occupied the Turkish Consulate General in Cologne, taking hostage by force of arms certain Turkish citizens as well as the officials of our consulate general. The armed aggressors made several requests. As in prior incidents, our government adopted an uncompromising and determined stand. The terrorists, who saw that their requests would not be fulfilled, were obliged to release their hostages and end their action.

As it will be recalled, murderers, who realized that they could not continue their incidents of terror and realize their treacherous aims in our country following the 12 September operation, have acted abroad under various names for the sake of series of imaginary requests that could never be realized, based on all kinds of lies and slanders. They are exploiting the rights and liberties existing in Western countries in order to conduct their despicable activities against Turkey. This despicable action, undertaken on the eve of the public referendum on the new Turkish Constitution, which is the sign of a new stage in efforts being exerted in order to base democracy on strong foundations, has openly demonstrated the true face of these traitors and their fear and hatred of a strong and democratic system.

The statement continues: It is obvious that those who could not realize their aims in Turkey despite armed incidents, the ruthless killing of hundreds of persons and the injuring of thousands of others in the period prior to 12 September, will not be able to do so through attacks against our representations abroad. Such actions only serve as a means to better understand the real identity and aims of such people by the Turkish people and the democratic countries with common sense.

We express our gratitude for the efforts exerted and the cooperation extended by the FRG officials and police force. The cool-headed, brave and cautious stand of the officials of our consulate general in Cologne is also to be praised.

Evren Comments

TA041143 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Speech by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Istanbul on 4 November -- recorded]

[Excerpts] My dear citizens, I would like to talk to you about the regrettable incident that occurred in Cologne, West Germany yesterday. As you know, some of those abominable persons who realized that they could not achieve their aims here in Turkey fled the country. Some of them are among us. Do not worry. More than 7,000 of them are abroad. A group consisting of nine of those persons, called the Revolutionary Left [Dev-Sol] raided our consulate in Cologne, as you know. They gave themselves up at 0430 this morning. They caused five or six of our citizens to be injured.

These Dev-Sol members number 2,583. Of those 2,583, 1,811 are being prosecuted. Of these 1,811, 651 face death sentences for having committed murders.

My dear citizens and brothers of Istanbul, these people demanded certain compromises after taking our citizens hostage there. We have never made any compromises and we will never make any compromises. They must know this. If all nations pursued the same policy, international terrorism would decrease, if not stop completely. Slowly and ultimately it would disappear. Let me point out that if such terrorists hold 50 hostages and ask us to release one person in return for those 50, we will not make that compromise -- not even for that one person. This is because a state, an independent state, especially a republic, must not make compromises to 5 or 10 people, to 300 or 500 or even 1,000 people. If it does, then it is not a state. We are the Turkish Republican State. We cannot bargain with such people.

It is impossible not to discuss the issue of freedom of the press in Istanbul, the center of the Turkish press. I would like to mention that here because I did not discuss it in my previous speeches in other provinces.

The press is free and cannot be censured. A publication ban cannot be imposed on the press. Only a judge can impose a ban, and only when it is essential. Those essential situations are determined by law. The circulation of press material can be prevented by a judge, or in cases where a delay is undesirable, by a body clearly authorized by the law. This authorized body must inform the authorized judge of its decision to prevent circulation within 24 hours, and the judge must approve this decision within 48 hours. Otherwise, the decision to prevent circulation will be considered invalid.

What are the crimes that call for such action? Any kind of report or article that threatens the state's internal and exernal security or its unity with its country and nation; any report or article that encourages criminal action or revolts or that involve secret information concerning the state. Those who write or publish such reports or articles or who give them to others will be considered responsible by the relevant law.

Publications can be collected before circulation in situations where a delay is undesirable or dangerous. As I said before, in such cases, the concerned judge will be informed of the situation within 24 hours. Although such crimes and the conditions under which certain reports and articles will be considered criminal will be clearly designated by the law, I would like to give you a few examples of past incidents which forced us to place such a stipulation in the constitution. Suppose a separatist organization, or a sectarian provocator, or a person who is guided by an ideological or anarchistic aims, publishes a declaration to its sympathizers encouraging a group of citizens to attack another group of citizens.

Or suppose it calls on a group of citizens to revolt against the state. Suppose this declaration was published independently or it appeared in a newspaper. I ask you, did such things not happen in the past? Were not such declarations distributed in the streets every day? The state or the government cannot act like a third citizen who watches two citizens attack each other. The state must prevent such an attack from the beginning. It is the duty of the state to do that.

We used to have universities which were turned into arsenals, where students were trained in firearms. I do not want to give their names. That was because the state security forces could not enter them. Therefore, firearm training could be conducted easily. The security forces could not enter those universities because they were not Turkish lands, they were another's land. Are we going to raise knowledgeable youths who will be able to develop our country, or anarchists? Taking this into consideration, with our new Constitution, we granted only scientific autonomy to our universities and not administrative autonomy.

EGYPT'S FOREIGN MINISTER BEGINS OFFICIAL VISIT

Met by Turkmen

TA031229 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan 'Ali has arrived in Ankara on an official visit. He was received at Esenboga Airport by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen who said that this visit stressed the two countries' desire to further develop their relations. Turkmen pointed out that historical, cultural and moral ties brought the two countries close to each other, adding that, based on these foundations, they would seek ways to further develop their relations. Turkmen stressed that important results had already been obtained on this issue.

Turkmen stated that Turkey and Egypt are following the developments in the Middle East with concern and that the talks in Ankara would be important from this viewpoint as well.

'Ali said that during his visit he would look for ways to develop bilateral relations with Turkey. He pointed out that the two countries have tried throughout their history to protect peace and stability in the region, adding that this historical role is just as important today. 'Ali said that the talks he would hold during his visit would contribute to the strengthening of Turkish-Egyptian relations.

Responding to questions from reporters, 'Ali said that the recent developments in Lebanon deeply affected the Egyptian people, adding that Egyptian-Israeli relations and the agreement between the two states were also deeply affected by these developments. 'Ali said that following U.S. President Reagan's latest plan on the Middle East, the agreement was still in effect,but that Egypt wanted the Palestinians' right to self-determination to be included in this plan. The Egyptian deputy prime minister and foreign minister stressed that the future of the PLO depended on its own decisions.

Further 'Ali Arrival Remarks

TA031611 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1540 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] Ankara, Nov 3 (AA) -- Egypt's Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan 'Ali arrived in Ankara Wednesday on an official visit. He was greeted at Esenboga Airport by Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen

Visiting Foreign Minister Hassan 'Ali, who is also deputy prime minister, said at Esenboga Airport there was no reason for not carrying on negotiations with Israel, but his government had "certain reservations" about the Reagan plan, particularly "with regard to the Palestinian people's right to self-determination."

He called the Iran-Iraq war "unfortunate" and hoped for an immediate end to it.

In an airport statement, Hassan 'Ali said developments in the Middle East would be covered in his talks with Turkmen, as well as bilateral relations.

After the Camp David agreement had been signed between governments toward a settlement of the Middle East question, Hassan 'Ali noted, Israel had created a negative reaction in Egyptian public opinion by bombing the nuclear power station in Iraq, declaring Al-Quds (Jerusalem) its capital, annexing the Golan Heights, and lastly, by the massacre in West Beirut.

The reaction of the people in Egypt had of necessity affected the attempt to normalize relations between Israel and Egypt, including the agreements signed on trade, tourism and culture.

Now that the Reagan plan had been formulated, he hoped the PLO would take new steps so that it can participate in the fourth round of negotiations.

Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said his colleagues' visit would be an opportunity to explore possibilities for improving bilateral ties.

Mideast Problems Reviewed

TA041014 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has said that a stable and realistic policy acceptable to all sides should be pursued for the solution of the Middle East problems. If this is not done, Turkmen said, tensions in the area could easily be transformed into a conflict that could involve all the countries. Turkmen made this statement during a dinner in honor of Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan 'Ali, who is in Ankara for an official visit. Commenting on the relations between Turkey and Egypt, Turkmen expressed the hope that this visit would be a turning point that would allow the intensification of cooperation between the two countries following a long period of stagnation that has reigned in this relationship. Recalling the historic ties existing between the two countries, Turkmen said that this visit was an expression of the determination of the governments of the two countries to intensify solidarity and cooperation between them. Turkmen expressed his belief that Turkey and Egypt have a great potential for developing their economic relations and added Turkey was ready to analyze the opportunities of joint ventures.

The Turkish foreign minister said that Turkey observed with horror the developments in Lebanon following the Israeli invasion, adding: The policies pursued by Israel in order to realize its political ambitions in the Middle East have demonstrated that it cares nothing for ethical principles. As long as Israel is not effectively deterred from its intransigent stand, from its tendency to use force and violence, from its indifference to the interests of other regional countries, from its amazing disdain for human values and from challenging the UN Charter as well as the UN General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, nobody should doubt that it is out of the question for peace and tranquility to reign in the Middle East.

Turkmen reiterated that for the establishment of a just and lasting regional peace, Israel would have to withdraw from all the Arab territories it occupied; all the legal rights of the Palestinian people, including that of self-determination, would have to be granted; and a secure coexistence among all the regional countries within their own boundaries would have to be ensured. Turkmen concluded by expressing his belief that through the conciliation of the Reagan plan and the Fes resolutions on the Palestinian problem at the Arab summit, an initial step for peaceful negotiations could be undertaken.

Referring to the Iran-Iraq war, another source of anxiety in the region, Turkmen said that Turkey would continue to exert efforts for a political solution to the war.

On Afghanistan, Turkmen said that the solution to this problem could be achieved through the withdrawal of occupying forces from the country and the return of all Afghan refugees.

Turkmen continued: Regional centers of tension and instability demonstrate the necessity of finding a solution based on principles and a sensible stand. As long as a balanced and realistic policy aimed at finding solutions acceptable to all sides is not exercised, tensions existing in the Middle East and its vicinity might easily be transformed into conflicts that could easily involve all of us. Turkmen concluded by pointing out the great contribution that could be made by the stable Egyptian state for finding a just and lasting solution in the area.

In his turn, Kamal Hassan 'Ali said that recent developments in the area had emphasized the significance of increasing the exchange of views among the regional countries. The minister said that in light of this reality, his visit to Turkey was of great importance. Pointing out that his country welcomes all kinds of solutions for regional peace that respect the interests of all sides, the Egyptian minister said that the realization of this goal depended upon the solution of the Palestinian problem. "Ali added that the success of peace negotiations in the Middle East would depend upon the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon. He said that the Reagan proposals for the solution of the Palestinian problem constituted a constructive framework for negotiations. Commenting on the Iran-Iraq war, the visiting minister said that this was a factor increasing tension in the region. He said that his country would not hesitate to support Turkey's efforts to end the war. "Ali concluded by saying that the further development of close and historic ties between Turkey and his country would not only serve the interests of both countries but would also greatly contribute to the achievement of peace in the area. He expressed his satisfaction over the developing trade relations between the two countries, recalling that during the last 2 years these relations increased significantly.

SOCIALIST SPOKESMAN DENIES RIFT WITH U.S.

AU031130 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 3 Nov 82 p 3

[Text] Vienna (SK) -- The Austrian People's Party (OEVP) should at long last discontinue the campaign through which it seeks to portray Austria's relations with the United States in an unfavorable light. This was demanded by Fritz Marsch, chairman of the Nationalrat Foreign Policy Committee. Through a series of statements by its foreign policy spokesmen and by articles in newspapers close to the OEVP, the larger opposition party is seeking to construe problems in Austrian-U.S. relations which in reality do not exist at all, Marsch declared.

DEMOCRATS '66 LEADER TERLOUW LEAVES POLITICS

PM030949 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 29 Oct 82 p 3

[Unnamed "own political correspondent" report: "Democrats '66 leader Terlouw To Leave Active Politics"]

[Excerpt] The Hague, 29 Oct -- Democrats '66 [D'66] leader and Economic Affairs Minister Dr. J.C. Terlouw is leaving active politics. Terlouw decided yesterday not to return to the Second Chamber and lead the D'66 parliamentary group. He said that he was leaving politics because he felt that he was primarily responsible for the major election defeat suffered by D'66 in the 8 September Second Chamber election, when D'66 lost 11 of its 17 seats in the Chamber.

Yesterday the D'66 parliamentary group elected Dr. M.B. Engwirda as its new group leader. Engwirda will succeed the present group leader, Mr. L.J. Brinkhorst, who is now the EEO's permanent representative in Tokyo. Terlouw said that he did not have his eye on any post. "I have no irons in the fire," he said.

Terloum said that by leaving he wanted to make room for a new start for D'66. He did not think that his return to the Second Chamber was desirable, because it would hamper the new group leader and also because a Second Chamber group of six members offered no scope for "sheltered" work, which is what [outgoing Prime Minister] Van Agt said was his aim when he announced his resignation as [Christian Democratic Appeal] -- party leader.

U.S. ENVOY INFORMED OF DISPLEASURE ON FALKLANDS

LD031426 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1341 GMT 3 Nov 82

[By David Healy PA political staff]

[Text] Foreign Secretary, Mr. Francis Pym, today told the American ambassador in London of Britain's displeasure with the Argentine-sponsored United Nation's resolution on the Falklands Islands, which the US is to support.

The ambassador, Mr. John J. Louis, called at the Foreign Office to see Mr. Pym "by mutual arrangement."

A Foreign Office spokesman said the two men discussed the Falklands, but would not say exactly what Mr. Pym had told the ambassador.

It is clear, however, that Mr. Pym told him Britain felt the resolution calling for negotiations between Argentina and Britain on the sovereignty of the Falklands was "objectional and hypocritical." And it can be assumed that Mr. Pym also made clear Britain's anger and disappointment that the US delegation to the UN, on the orders of President Reagan, is supporting the resolution.

LUBBERS-LED COALITION GOVERNMENT SWORN IN 4 NOV

NC041630 Paris AFP in English 1622 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] The Hague, Nov 4 (AFP) -- The new Dutch center-right government, led by Christian-Democrat Ruud Lubbers, a former economy minister, was sworn in today.

At 43, Mr. Lubbers becomes the youngest prime minister in Dutch history. He heads a Christian Democrat and Liberal coalition with 81 seats in the 150-seat Chamber of Deputies following elections in September.

Mr. Lubbers was named prime minister after the surprise announcement last month by Andreas van Agt, who had been Christian Democratic prime minister since 1977, not to continue in office. Mr. Lubbers' government contains eight Christian Democratic ministers and six Liberals.

The government will present its program to parliament on November 22.

The new government plans to enforce controversial economic self-tightening policies, expected to trigger a three to four per cent drop in buying power for lower-income groups and a 1.5 per cent drop for top wage earners.

But both the Christian Democrat party and the opposition Socialist Party -- the biggest in the Netherlands with 47 parliamentary seats -- believe the new austerity policies should not favour those in the higher income bracket.

The coalition's economic policies mark a sharp break with the job-creation and industrial promotion programme set out in November last year by the centre-left coalition which split when the Socialists walked out in May. The center-right parties won the elections last September.

The new government aims to save 21,000 million guilders (over 70 million dollars) in the national budget for 1984 to 1986 by cutting back inflation compensation by two per cent and slicing public spending, wages for civil servants, social benefits and public health costs.

A price and wage freeze will be installed on January 1 and 7,000 jobs in the public sector are to be scrapped between 1984 and 1986.

In the defence field, the new coalition is ready to allow North Atlantic Treaty Organization nuclear missiles to deploy in the Netherlands if the current U.S.-Soviet Geneva talks on Euromissiles fail.

The new government:

Prime minister:	Rudolphus Lubbers-(Christian Democrat)
Vice premier-economy minister	Gijs van Aardenne-(Liberal)
Finance:	Herman Ruding-CD
Social affairs	Jan de Koning-Lib
Foreign affairs	Hans van Den Broek-CD
Defence:	Jacob de Ruiter-CD
Justice:	Frederik Korthals Altes-Lib
Cooperation and Developments:	Eegje Schoo-Lib
Housing and Environment:	Pieter Winsemius-Lib
Education and Sciences:	Wim Deetman-CD
Agriculture and Fisheries:	Gerrit Braks-CD
Welfare and public health:	Eelko Brinkman-CD
Interior:	Jacobus Rietkerk-Lib
Transport:	Neelie Smit-Kroes-Lib

The Public Health and Environment Ministry set up in 1970 has been abolished. Public health will be incorporated in the Welfare Ministry and environmental affairs with the Housing Ministry.

COSTA RICA MISSION TO COVER CENTRAL AMERICA

PM031617 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 30 Oct 82 p 3

[Unnamed "own correspondent" report]

[Excerpt] The Hague -- The Netherlands Embassy in Costa Rica will be upgraded to a regional post covering Central America. Dr J.W. Bertens, who is presently spokesman for the foreign minister in The Hague, shortly will be appointed ambassador.

The upgrading of the embassy is a result of a Christian Democratic Appeal motion in the Second Chamber which calls for reinforcement of the Netherlands diplomatic presence in Central America. The motion was one of the results of the debate in the Chamber on the murders of four IKON [Netherlands television company] journalists in El Salvador. Bertens investigated the murders in El Salvador on behalf of the minister.

Costa Rica was selected because the Netherlands already has an embassy there and because it is a peaceful country from which the other Central American states are readily accessible. The Labor Party would have preferred to have an embassy in Nicaragua, but that would have been too expensive and would also come up against political problems in the region. In Costa Rica, Bertens will have a larger travel budget and an expanded staff. Up to now, Central America has been covered by the Netherlands embassies in Mexico and Costa Rica.

TURKISH MILITANTS OCCUPY INFORMATION OFFICE

NC051253 Paris AFP in English 1245 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Amsterdam, Nov 5 (AFP) -- A group of about 10 militants belonging to the Turkish Dev-Sol (revolutionary left) underground movement today occupied the Turkish Information Office here.

Police said the militants were holding the director of the information center and a female employee.

The Dev-Sol members said their action aimed to protest against "the constitution of the American-influenced fascist junta" in Turkey.

The Information Office, which is attached to the Turkish Embassy in The Hague, has been cordoned off by Dutch police.

In another protest against the constitution -- which will be submitted to a referendum on Sunday -- Dev-Sol militants occupied the Turkish Consulate in Cologne, West Germany, Wednesday.

They gradually released some 70 hostages before surrendering to the police yesterday.

KOHL COMMENTS ON ELECTIONS, UPCOMING U.S. VISIT

LD041918 Hamburg DPA in German 1653 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] Bonn, 4 Nov (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl (CDU) has expressly confirmed his intention to hold elections on 6 March next year. He promised this in his government statement and therefore does not see the need to repeat it every day, he said in a "WELT" interview (Friday edition) which was prereleased by the Federal Press Office.

Regarding the SPD opposition, he said he has the impression that those with the slogan "We want to vote now" would actually be quite glad if someone freed them from the trauma of an election on 6 March. "But I am not going to be the one; however, I will do everything to make my promise a reality." But he said he does not want to comment on ways in which this might be achieved before he had talked with the federal president and the party chairman. "But you can take it for granted: There will be elections," Kohl said.

He is optimistic that the FDP will recover favor with the voters, because there is a firm place for it in the FRG. It could, of course, happen that the FDP might get less than 5 percent in one election. "But I am convinced that it will return, because I am convinced of its place in the party political landscape." Today it is necessary for the FDP to formulate policies which demonstrate its ability to act and which thus attract the voters.

On his coming meeting with U.S. President Ronald Reagan, Kohl said he is traveling to the United States to demonstrate German-American partnership and friendship. It is especially important for Germans, for without the protection and support of the United States, the FRG would not exist in its present form. He is obviously prepared in the near future, after 6 March next year, to travel to Moscow if conditions are right.

PRESS DISCUSSES U.S. MID-TERM ELECTION RESULTS

DW041403 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 4 Nov 82

[From The Press Review]

[Excerpts] The main subject of today's commentaries is the results of the so-called mid-term elections in the United States.

The FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE writes: Governing will not be any easier for President Ronald Reagan in the future -- the outcome of the U.S. mid-term elections means nothing more than that. Any American president who is carried into office on a populist wave will inevitably eventually sense the decline of this wave. Reagan wagered a large bet in matters pertaining to the economic prosperity of the nation. In the eyes of many of his compatriots, he hasn't won that bet.

The NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG comments as follows: Ronald Reagan is not the clear loser, but his opponents from the Democratic Party also are not the shining winners of the U.S. mid-term elections. The results were a slightly improved position for the Democrats in the House of Representatives, but a stable situation remains for the Republicans in the Senate. These results were to be expected and are in accordance with American tradition. Since 1840, no president's party has won mid-term elections. Seen that way, the results are normal. Too much power has been compensated for and the man in the White House has been reined in. The paper goes on to say: The Reagan trend of November 1980 has been checked and the pendulum has swung back to the center, which remains rather conservative.

The daily, DIE WELT asks: Is the outcome of the American elections a signal in foreign policy announcing new values for international calculations?

Those who don't find it easy to come up with an answer will clearly differentiate between the outcome of the elections and the fact that the elections are over now. [sentence as heard] In the fight for the Senate, the House of Representatives and governorships, foreign policy didn't play a very significant role. Reagan's foreign policy was neither confirmed nor weakened. Now that the elections are over, the President, who prevailed in the Senate in an amazing way, remains free to act. This pertains to international policy, East-West relations and, in particular, to relations with the European allies. The president stands on solid ground. These quotations were from DIE WELT.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU assesses the result of the election as follows: The American mid-term elections produced significant changes of power in Congress, but no landslide for the Democrats. The election campaign was waged aggressively by both sides and was aimed at defaming the opponents: This not only resulted from poor political style, it was the logical consequence of the noticeable lack of political ideas. The only convincing exception was the vote on a nuclear weapons freeze, which was voted on in nine states, in Washington D.C. and in a number of other cities. The overwhelming victory of the supporters of the freeze together with the growth of these movements and the recent memorandum by Catholic bishops must be considered a signal for Reagan.

The WESTDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG of Duessldorf has the following opinion: Foreign and security policies only played a limited local role insofar as the voters in some states could also vote on the demand to freeze nuclear weapons in the United States and the USSR. The fact that the majority voted against more nuclear weapons should make Reagan ponder, even if the vote was only a unbinding recommendation. It demonstrates, as do the entire election results, that the almost blind trust in Reagan's ability to lead, to which he owed his 1980 landslide victory, has disappeared. Yet the President's authority is great enough to permit stable governing, particularly with regard to foreign policy. However, he will probably be forced to make cuts in the domestic and economic policy fields.

A final quotation on this issue comes from the HANDELSBLATT: The results of the U.S. mid-term elections can be interpreted neither as a great national trend against Reagan and Reagonomics, nor as a breakthrough for the Democrats. Even experts are unable to deduce conclusions trends from the strange mix of election results. The fact that the Republicans came off relatively well despite the high unemployment figure of 10.1 percent and the continuing recession indicates that the personality of candidates, the fight against crime and local issues such as that of Maine, where the nuclear powerplant will be closed in 5 years, played a role which shouldn't be underrated.

WOERNER SUPPORTS NATO'S ROGERS' STRATEGY

LD041248 Hamburg DPA in German 1111 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 4 Nov (DPA) -- In the words of Defense Minister Manfred Woerner (CDU), the present NATO strategy of flexible response to a possible attack remains valid and necessary. In a DPA interview on Thursday after an almost 1-hour long meeting in the Defense Ministry with NATO Commander in Chief Bernard Rogers, Woerner said that the talk had confirmed that there was full agreement with the NATO commander in chief on fundamental strategic and political questions. Rogers has the confidence of the Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

Woerner told DPA that Rogers had said that he had never had the intention of changing present NATO strategy and replacing it with another one. His intention had been to make the strategy of flexible response truly flexible. That meant making this strategy more credible in the medium and long-term by increasing coventional arms while simultaneously raising the nuclear threshold. "These are aims for which I can declare my full support," Woerner stressed.

At the same time, the defense minister made it quite clear that Rogers' view of a 4 percent real increase in the German defense budget could not be realized.

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON FAILURE OF COALITION

LD051202 Hamburg DPA in German 1041 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Berlin, 5 Nov (DPA) -- At the beginning of the liberals' national party conference in Berlin on Friday, FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher strongly defended the change in the Bonn coalition which he caused, but for the first time in public he also admitted mistakes of his own. Genscher once again attributed responsibility for the breakup of the social-liberal coalition to the SPD. He made an urgent plea for unity to the 400 delegates and demanded that all liberals be made to feel at home in the party after the elections to the leadership bodies, as well.

Genscher conceded that the party is "in a grave crisis." The change of coalition has upset the citizens and shaken the party. The Free Democrats throughout the country look like a party at odds with itself. "In Hesse and Bavaria the voters made us pay the penalty." However, he affirmed his commitment to the decisions which resulted in the founding of the coalition with the CDU/CSU on 1 October.

The development of the SPD since October 1980 led directly to this day. The Social Democrats abandoned essential bases of cooperation in government; "we did not abandon our partner." With their economic and social resolutions at their Munich party conference, they "prepared the divorce documents for the coalition." As proof of his thesis, Genscher quoted in detail from the statement of former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in which he gave the reasons for his decision not to run for the chancellorship again.

Genscher did, however, attribute some responsibility to his own party in the developments: "We would be smug if we took the view that we made no mistakes, and that applies not only to our relationship with our coalition partner, but also among ourselves. I admit that quite personally for my part, as one who acted and was affected by the acts of others." In going over one's own mistakes, one could not avoid the question of "whether I should not have arrived at conclusions earlier from the coalition's weakness in acting and the strain placed on it by the SPD."

AUTHORITIES WELCOME END TO CONSULATE SIEGE

LD041410 Hamburg DPA in German 1308 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 4 Nov (DPA) -- The Federal Government has welcomed the nonviolent conclusion of the occupation of the Turkish Consulate General in Cologne. A foreign Ministry spokesman said on Thursday that the government and German public opinion sharply condemn this attack on the consular offices of a friendly and allied country.

The identity of the nine men who halted their occupation of the Turkish Consulate General in Cologne early on Thursday morning after 15 hours is still a complete mystery, according to the Cologne police. Speaking to journalists on Thursday, Police Chief Juergen Hosse said that they were clearly a political and not a "national" organization.

According to the State Prosecutor's Office, a detention warrant against the nine men will be requested on Friday on the grounds of hostage-taking.

At the news conference, it was confirmed that the authorities had assured the men that "requests for asylum would be granted," but Hosse said that these pledges had "no legal basis."

MITTERRAND INTERVIEWED ON FRENCH ROLE IN LEBANON

AB041330 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 0950 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Interview granted by French President Francois Mitterrand to the Lebanese newspaper L'ORIENT LE JOUR on 31 October; place of interview not given]

[Text] [Question] Mr President, after your discussions with the Lebanese head of state, to what extent do you think you can satisfy the requests he made to you?

[Answer] President Amin al-Jummayyil did not come to Paris to make requests to me, but to have discussions with me concerning the situation in Lebanon and his country's future. President al-Jumayyil expressed his appreciation to me for the action undertaken by its friend France in Lebanon during the last few months, and especially within the multinational force. He gave me his opinion on the role of this force and that of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon [UNIFIL] to ensure the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon as soon as possible.

I confirmed to President al-Jumayyil France's availability concerning the reconstruction of Lebanon. A French parliamentarian, Alain Hautecouer, has just been made available to Mr Cheysson with the mission of coordinating the various aspects of our aid to Lebanon both in the bilateral as well as in the European and international fields.

[Question] For several months now, there have been concomitant indications which seem to prove the existence of a joint French-American-Saudi initiative to restore Lebanon's fortunes. What are the facts?

[Answer] By "restoration of Lebanon's fortunes" you no doubt mean the reconstruction of that country. This is a vast program which requires long-term efforts from the Lebanese themselves, the international institutions and countries interested in Lebanon's reconstruction such as the United States, France and its European partners, Saudi Arabia and other Arab countries. It is for the Lebanese Government to express its need and to coordinate the aid that will be given. As for France, I repeat that it is ready to help to the extent that it can.

[Question] What does France think about the close cooperation being established between Washington and Beirut, especially in the diplomatic and military fields?

[Answer] With regard to Lebanon, our relations with the United States are not characterized by rivalry, but rather, by concerted action and complementarity. We thus joined our diplomatic efforts to put an end to the fighting in Beirut and we are taking part in the multinational force side by side with the United States and Italy. In the fields you have mentioned as well as in many others, Lebanon's problems are such that it is normal that the country should expect the assistance of all its friends, particularly France and the United States. Recently in New York, Amin al-Jumayyil publicly expressed satisfaction with the military cooperation between France and Lebanon.

[Question] France is taking part in the restoration of stability in Beirut side by side with the Lebanese Army and within the multinational force. Couldn't this cooperation be extended to the other regions of the country?

[Answer] The restoration of state authority and stability in the other regions poses other problems. People obviously think about the eventual action of the multinational force, but one should also think about UNIFIL, which the Security Council has just decided to maintain and whose mandate and zone of activity will soon be redefined.

All this is tied to the gradual withdrawal of the foreign forces. France is ready to examine all these questions with the Lebanese Government as well as with the governments of the countries concerned, the United Nations and all those who wish to contribute to the task of national reconstruction being undertaken by the Lebanese Government.

Troops Patrol East Beirut

LD041312 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] The French paratroopers in Lebanon have changed areas; they are now patrolling the eastern quarter of Beirut with their Italian and Lebanese colleagues. This is the Christian part of the town, where the official Lebanese Army moved in yesterday. The French minister of defense stated this morning that this complies with the original task outlined for the multinational force and that the guidelines for the French soldier remain unchanged.

CHEYSSON SCHEDULES VISIT TO KUWAIT 13 NOV

LD031608 Kuwait KUNA in Arabic 1542 GMT 3 Nov 82

[Text] Kuwait, 3 Nov (KUNA) -- Today it was officially announced that the French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson will pay an official visit to Kuwait on 13 November. A spokesman for the Foreign Ministry said the French minister will discuss bilateral cooperation and political issues of common concern, first and foremost the Middle East problem and the situation in Lebanon.

KAMPUCHEA'S SON SANN CRITICIZES UN ABSTENTION

NC051126 Paris AFP in English 0957 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, Nov 5 (AFP) -- Khmer People's National Liberation Front leader Son Sann has sharply criticized France's abstention at the United Nations vote on recognition of the Cambodian national unity government of which he is premier.

In an interview published today by the opposition newspaper LE QUOTIDIEN DE PARIS, the Cambodian leader said the French decision "supports aggression and encourages the Vietnamese occupation and colonisation of Cambodia."

"As the friends of France, with which we have close and ancient ties, we are deeply disappointed," Mr Son Sann said.

The daily added that Mr Son Sann still maintained hope of convincing France's socialist government to recognize the national unity government.

The French ambassador at the UN met the tripartite coalition's president, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, he said, and French President Francois Mitterrand could meet the prince next month.

At a meeting with French Socialist Party First Secretary Lionel Jospin, Mr Son Sann received the impression that Mr Jospin was "a bit embarrassed" by the French decision.

"Reasons of state and the reasons of the heart are not always compatible," Mr Son Sann quoted Mr Jospin as saying.

The Cambodian leader said the vote, in which 90 countries recognized the rebel regime as compared to 79 last year, showed that the coalition was internationally accepted as the legitimate representative of the Cambodian people.

Mr Son Sann told the QUOTIDIEN DE PARIS that he counted on reinforcing his government's military position to make life as difficult as possible for the Vietnamese occupation troops.

He also hoped that economic pressures from the West would push the Hanoi government to negotiations.

Mr. Son Sann said the eventual normalization of diplomatic relations between the Soviet Union and China could lessen Moscow's support for Vietnam.

NICARAGUA'S NUNEZ STRESSES NONALIGNMENT POLICY

PA050114 Paris AFP in Spanish 0210 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, 3 Nov (AFP) -- Carlos Nunez, president of the Nicaraguan State Council, who is on a 3-day visit here, said today that "no matter what happens, Nicaragua will not become radical and will maintain the path of an autonomous revolution."

Nunez made this statement to Antoine Blanca, the French premier's adviser on Latin America, with whom he met today a few hours after Blanca was appointed roving ambassador to Latin America.

After a 1-hour talk, Blanca said that Nunez had confirmed the Nicaraguan Government's "policy of nonalignment" and its hope that France would uphold the Mexican-Venezuelan peace initiative on El Salvador.

Blanca said, "we discussed Central American problems and tension along the Nicaraguan border with Honduras."

He said that Nunez had brought up the problem created by the incursion of "bands armed by the United States."

Nunez also met today with Louis Mermaz, president of the National Assembly. Mermaz, together with the presidents of the Socialist and Communist groups of the Assembly, Pierre Joxe and Andre Lajoine, respectively, conveyed to Nunez the French Assembly's friendship toward Nicaragua.

Nunez, who is accompanied by Plutarco Anduray Palma, vice-president of the State Council, and other members of that body, explained to Pierre Joxe the difficulties the Nicaraguan revolution is facing.

Andre Lajoine reaffirmed the French Communist Party's solidarity with the Sandinists and denounced foreign "attacks against Nicaragua from Honduras and the United States."

Nunez, who attended the opening of the plenary session of the National Assembly, later met with the France-Nicaragua friendship group, of which he is a guest. Nunez will meet tomorrow with Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson and with the secretary of the Communist Party.

Denounces U.S. Policy

PA041532 Managua Radio Sandino Network in Spanish 1200 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] Paris -- Commander of the Revolution Carlos Nunez, president of the State Council, has denounced the threat that the joint U.S.-Honduran military maneuvers pose for Central America.

The Sandinist leader, who has been visiting Paris since yesterday at the French National Assembly's invitation, made the charge during his talk with Lionel Jospin, first secretary of the Socialist Party. Nunez also denounced the U.S. policy on Central America, especially U.S. policy against Nicaragua.

COT DISCUSS VISIT TO CHAD, POSSIBLE AID

AB041024 Paris AFP in French 0728 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, 4 Nov (AFP) -- France is prepared to consider any Chadian request for increased cooperation, including military cooperation, according to French Minister of Cooperation and Development Jean-Pierre Cot.

The minister returned to Paris Tuesday evening following a 1-day visit to Ndjamena. He and the Chadian authorities signed a protocol to an agreement for emergency relief amounting to 1 billion CFA [African Financial Community] francs (F 20 million) for a working capital fund (600 million) and for the relaunching of the public services (400 million).

Speaking to journalists, Mr Cot said he was "satisfied" with his visit, which had enabled the French Government to take stock of the problems facing Chad and to clarify relations between the two countries as well as to specify the nature of French aid.

This aid, the minister recalled, is divided into relief aid and reconstruction aid, which will be spelled out after the donors conference on Chad being organized by the United Nations at the end of November in Geneva. There is also a more long-term aid which will enable Chad to "recover the elements vital to its economic development," he stressed.

Mr Cot indicated that President Hissein Habre had expressed the desire for stronger military cooperation -- involving only equipment and excluding all personnel -- which had been discontinued since June 1982 with the overthrow of Goukouni Oueddei, president of the Transitional National Union Government (GUNT). The Chadian Government is supposed to submit a request which will be examined, the minister, added.

In 1982, France granted Chad non-military aid amounting to Fr 185 million, and military aid to GUNT amounting to Fr 45 million in addition to Fr 55 million for the pan-African peacekeeping force sent to Chad at the end of 1981 following the departure of the Libyan troops. Since June 1982, when Hissein Habre returned to Ndjamena, France has given Chad Fr 73 million, to which should be added the sum of Fr 20 million for emergency relief.

France's policy, Mr Cot stressed, actually is to support the government which controls the major part of the Chadian territory and help it to ensure national unity and integrity.

Concerning the recent formation of a "national salvation" government by Goukouni Oueddei in Bardai (in the extreme north of Chad), Mr Cot felt that "Libyan support for Mr Goukouni does not concern France." On the other hand, he said, "the Libyan military presence poses a problem in Chad."

According to the minister, Libyan forces are still in control of towns south of the Aouzou Strip (militarily occupied by Tripoli since May 1973), including Zouar, Bardai and Gouro.

Mr Cot is expected in Tunis this afternoon for a 1-day official visit to Tunisia.

STATEMENT BY PCF'S MARCHAIS AT END OF DPRK VISIT

PM041413 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Oct 82 P 8

(Jean-Emile Vidal dispatch: "With the North and South Koreans")

[Text] Pyongyang, 28 Oct -- The summit talks between the PCF and KWP (Korean Workers Party) delegations concluded today at the French guests' residence, which [Korean President and KWP General Secretary] Kim Il-song visited this morning. The president and his wife, Seung Ai, invited Georges Marchais and his wife to lunch. In the afternoon, the PCF secretary general made the following statement to the press:

Our visit to the DPRK ends tomorrow. I would like to once again thank Comrade Kim Il-song, the KWP leadership and the Korean people for the warm welcome they have given our delegation.

We have had three sessions of talks, yesterday and today, with the KWP delegation headed by its general secretary, the president of the DPRK.

The talks enabled us to become better acquainted with our respective assessments of the situation in our two countries and regarding international issues. We noted that both our parties have the aim of building, in France and Korea, original socialist societies conceived on the basis of their countries' very different situations -- socialist societies which, therefore, will themselves be very different.

We share the same belief that the struggle to preserve peace and to progress toward disarmament, within the states' security, is now the most pressing duty for all mankind. In this connection, we have shared views on the fact that against the growing aggressiveness of imperialism -- and primarily of U.S. imperialism -- it is necessary to rally to action as broadly as possible all the forces worldwide that can act in behalf of these major objectives.

Finally, we reached complete agreement on our view of relations between our parties -- relations based on complete independence, equal rights, mutual respect, noninterference and the fact that differences and divergences can form no obstacle to joint action with respect to our shared objectives.

As for us, we derive from what we heard and saw a further confirmation of the correctness of the policy defined by our 24th congress. In explanation, I will make the following two observations: First, we stressed at our congress "the contribution of peoples building socialism and, at the same time, the diversity and present limitations of this enterprise."

This country was literally devasted by U.S. imperialism. The information given to us concerning its achievements in the social, economic and cultural fields less that 30 years later and concerning its future plans testifies to the validity of this assessment. Following what we observed in China and what we know about other countries which are building socialism, this visit to this country of 18 million inhabitants confirms our belief that, far from experiencing the "failure" described by some people, socialism is achieving undeniable results.

Second, we clearly explained at our congress that "the world that we want and for which we are struggling is the world of human rights." We French Communists defend human freedoms and rights wherever they are threatened.

However, some hundreds of kilometers from here, 35 million South Koreans are now suffering a fierce dictatorship supported at arms' length by U.S. occupation troops totaling 42,000 men. For the South Koreans, rights are out of the question. Our KWP comrades stressed the tragic situation they are suffering. They informed us, for instance, that a reinforced concrete wall separates the South Koreans from their fellow countrymen of the North; that there are estimated to be over 3 million troops, on the active and reserve lists, in the South, that is 30 soldiers per square kilometer; that demonstrations -- especially by students -- are the subject of bloodthirsty repression there; that mention of the word "reunification" implies the threat of immediate arrest and imprisonment; and last, that while the DPRK submits precise and bold proposals -- which include, for instance, the coexistence of both social systems within the framework of a federal system -- for progress toward Korea's independent and peaceful reunification, the United States opposes them by force and aims to deprive South Korea forever of any other status than that of a U.S. colony.

As far as we are concerned, we will step up our efforts in favor of human rights in South Korea, too. We will do our utmost to help the inhabitants gain freedom and the right to choose their own future.

France cannot ignore this situation. It cannot continue, like other European countries, to refuse to establish diplomatic relations with the DPRK. This country's recognition by France would constitute an act of realism and justice, an act of humanity toward fettered South Korea, an act of friendship toward the entire Korean people, who would recognize it as a valuable encouragement to their hope for the reunification of their homeland. In this spirit, it is necessary to demand the withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Korea.

As far as we are concerned, we assure all Koreans, both in the North and in the South, of the French Communists' and workers' active solidarity, which has never failed in the past.

Georges Marchais visited several places in the capital yesterday: First the victory arch erected on the spot where Kim Il-song delievered a speech on his entry into Pyongyang in 1945, when the Japanese colonialists were driven from the country; next, the People's Palace of Culture, a huge building equipped with modern facilities where students, blue-and white-collar workers can study during the day and in the evening; and last, the 1.7-meter-high [as published] granite monument erected to the glory of the "chuche" ideas, the Korean concepts on which KWP policy is based and which can be translated approximately as "being one's own master and acting independently."

A PCF-KWP cooperation plan was drawn up this afternoon.

SPADOLINI ENDS OFFICIAL PART OF U.S. VISIT

AU050819 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Washington, November 5 -- Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini begins the private part of his visit to the United States today with meeting in New York with local leaders and members of the Italian-American community.

The Italian Government leader concluded his official stay in Washington Thursday with a speech at the State Department that marked the opening of and international conference free elections [as received] sponsored by the American Enterprise Institute.

Spadolini stressed the ancient and deep-felt Italian vocation for free democratic institutions, born out of the medieval city-states and re-born after the "Nazi-fascist tragedy."

Referring to the recent discovery of mass graves of "desaparecidos" in Argentina, Spadolini condemned military regimes.

Earlier, at the National Press Club, the prime minister said he believes an agreement between Europe and the United States on trade and credit with the Eastern bloc is in the offing. He said the only remaining hurdle is the problem of extending credit to the Soviet Union, which the U.S. wants regulated by strict and clear conditions, while the Europeans, particularly the French appear unwilling to accept such restrictions.

AU040903 Rome ANSA in English 0828 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 4 -- A list of thirty Italian political prisoners who have apparently disappeared in Uruguay appears in today's edition of the Turin daily, LA GAZZETTA DEL POPOLO.

According to the newspaper, as for the "desaparecidos" who are missing in Argentina, the disappearance of many Italians has been denounced in Uruguay too.

Saying the information comes from Uruguayan sources, the newspaper gave a list of names which it described as "ascertained" cases.

ANDREATTA PONDERS WAGE-PRICE FREEZE HYPOTHESIS

PM031111 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 24-25 Oct 82 p 3

[Italian Treasury Minister Beniamino Andreatta interview by Massimo Riva in Milan, date not specified]

[Excerpt] Milan -- [Question] Minister, people are already saying: Andreatta has committed his umpteenth provocation. How did your idea of a wage and price freeze emerge?

[Answer] What provocation? If anything, it was I who was provoked in Parliament. I was told: All you are capable of is a monetary squeeze; look how clever the French are -- they are working on the real economy. So I tried programming my computer with a simulated incomes policy to see what results came out, and I reported on it to Parliament. That is all there is to the "political scandal."

[Question] Except that your computer suggested an increase of almost 4 percent in national income by 1984, with an inflation rate below 10 percent. You do not mean to tell me that by saying this you did not expect to sow confusion in the political debate?

[Answer] I see, we are back to the "provocation." I was asked to formulate a hypothesis, which is what I did. I could hardly have hidden the results.

[Question] Some people are saying: If the trade unions and the employers' federation fail to reach an understanding, Andreatta has an alternative maneuver ready. Is this the case?

[Answer] I did not think of it in those terms. But indeed, if the social bargaining proves inconclusive, this income policy modulated by the government could become an alternative line.

[Question] An alternative perhaps not only to social bargaining, but also to the finance bill if the necessary cuts are not passed by Parliament: Is this not so?

[Answer] Why not? A maneuver to freeze prices and wages would have the effect of facilitating the passage of the finance bill in Parliament. As things stand, I cannot agree to subsidize pensioners to the tune of 22 trillion lire and to provide similar subsidies for passengers, lovers exchanging letters and squanderers of electricity. If there is a freeze, however, our rigorousness on the question of cuts or tariffs could be different.

[Question] Pardon me, but what would happen to the public deficit in such an eventuality?

[Answer] It would be much smaller than people believe. The majority of public spending consists of salaries. If I hold fast on this point and on the prices front, I will certainly have lower tax revenues, but we have calculated that the final net result will be positive -- that is, it will create a major reduction in the deficit, with further beneficial repercussions on the state's indebtedness and costs.

[Question] In your opinion, do the political conditions for such a remedy exist?

[Answer] Perhaps: It is difficult to say. Of course, the trade unions, for instance, could be attracted by a maneuver that involves not only wages but also prices, with a view to a rapid lowering of inflation.

[Question] Would it be possible to carry out a balanced maneuver, or would the freeze affect wages more than prices?

[Answer] There are always some such risks. But I am told that in France an extraordinarily calming role is played by shop employees who prevent shopowners from altering list prices. Social envy could be an excellent method for supporting a freeze maneuver.

[Question] You doubtless recall that some 10 years ago a similar move to freeze prices was attempted: It all ended in a disaster and then inflation resumed even more strongly than before. Do the same risks not exist now?

[Answer] I remember it very well. But in 1973 the reason for the failure was that there was a failure to reduce the high level of demand. Now the situation is quite different: There is no need to contain a demand that is already limited, and this is a considerable advantage.

[Question] What always happens, however, is that at the end of freeze periods, wages and prices lagging behind begin to rise again, pushing inflation upward. Wouldn't this happen again this time?

[Answer] It is by no means certain. If the truce makes it possible to adjust the public deficit and our foreign debt, we can emerge from the freeze without negative effects.

[Question] Does that mean that you seriously envisage implementing this academic simulation?

[Answer] What I have said remains a pure hypothesis. Of course, other countries have tried it -- starting with the most socialist, France.

GONZALEZ CONDEMNS ASSASSINATION OF GENERAL

NC041323 Paris AFP in English 1315 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] Madrid, Nov 4 (AFP) -- Socialist Prime Minister-designate Felipe Gonzalez today vowed "to combat terrorism by all means available to the democratic state" in the aftermath of this morning's assassination here of General Victor Lago Roman, commander in chief of Spain's largest armored brigade.

"I call on all citizens to cooperate in the building of the democratic system and to condemn the assassins of hope," said Mr Gonzalez, whose Socialist party won an absolute majority in last week's general elections.

Mr Gonzalez appealed to the country's security forces "to intensify their efforts to preserve constitutional legality and to destroy the phenomenon of terrorism."

General Lago Roman, who headed the elite "Brunete" Division, was gunned down today while riding in his car by a passenger on a motorcycle who subsequently escaped.

Vows Fight on Terrorism

LD041732 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Interview with Spanish Prime Minister-elect Felipe Gonzalez by unidentified radio reporter -- live in studio]

[Excerpts] The government is in a transition period. On 10 December Felipe Gonzalez will be the Spanish prime minister. Good afternoon.

[Gonzalez] Good afternoon.

[Question] Don Felipe Gonzalez, in November 1982, what justification can those responsible have for such criminal acts of terrorism as the murder of General Lago Roman?

[Answer] Absolutely none. Besides expressing condolences to the family of General Lago Roman and to the great military family -- which I have done personally to Lt Gen Ascanio y Togores, [army chief of staff] -- I believe that this does not have any justification or any explanation. It is an attempt to murder even the hopes of a nation which has repeatedly demonstrated that it wants to live in peace and freedom, a nation which is ready to cooperate so that we may live in peace and freedom like all the institutions of the democratic state. Therefore, I sincerely believe that this does not have any justification. It is a provocation, and if those who carried out the attack think that they are somehow throwing down a challenge to the new majority which the Spanish people has chosen, I want to reply to them immediately. We who have always been open to dialogue are going to use all the means at the disposal of the democratic state to do away with the scourge of terrorism.

[Question] Don Felipe Gonzalez, with regard to what your are saying, is it not now the time to talk about weaknesses -- in the election campaign you always spoke about applying political and police measures to eradicate terrorism. The Spanish people have given you important support for all the pronouncements which you made. One of them was specifically on this matter. Just what are these political and police measures aimed at doing away with this national cancer?

[Answer] The political measures are very clear if, as we think, the origin of the attack lies in the voilence of ETA-Militar [Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group - Military].

The political measures are clearly laid down in the Constitution and developed in the statutes of autonomy themselves. I have the impression that, when one feels that the blow of terrorism as we have done today, political measures matter little to the terrorists. Political measures matter more to the public, the collective formed by all citizens, and in this respect the public can rest assured that we are going to continue establishing the system of peaceful, free coexistence which the Constitution and statutes permit us to establish, and we are going to take it to its ultimate consequences.

With regard to police measures, I should like to tell the public that a considerable effort is being made by the security forces in the struggle against terrorism. However, terrorism always has the advantage insofar as he who shoots someone in the neck and then hides in the sewers has the advantage of changing tactics or strategy depending on the response from the police. So there has to be a permanent adaptation of police tactics and strategy in response to terrorism. Besides this, there has to be much more security for those people who could be directly affected by terrorist violence. There has to be a daily technical improvement in the means available to the police. I know that this effort has been made and that it can be stepped up. Moreover, I have the utmost certainty that the democratic state always beats the terrorist phenomenon.

[Question] Is the future Socialist government ready to stand up to these acts of terrorism?

[Answer] I believe so. As the representative of the majority of the population and the aspirations of practically the whole nation, I believe that we have to retain a calm spirit and great firmness in the struggle against terrorism. One feels the grief which everyone is now feeling; but the government, which is definitively responsible for the politics of state, has to give an example of great calmness, as have all the institutions of state, because one of the effects which these acts of terrorism are trying to provoke is anxiety and the decomposition of the state institutions. If we maintain our calmness and a clear spirit of cooperation, and if this government has all the support -- as we said on 27 October before the election results -- if it has all the support to continue its task of government, I believe that now and in the future government we shall be able to wage a serious battle against the terrorist phenomenon. I have the sincere hope that we shall win that battle in a relatively short time.

[Question] Don Felipe Gonzalez, you speak of calmness and maintaining our nerve. But perhaps the man in the street could better understand the term "firm hand" -- calmness, but of course, a firm hand.

[Answer] Without a doubt. I have said on several occasions and I repeat it now: We are ready to obey the law and have it obeyed. The rule of law is, I believe, fundamental to guaranteeing democratic coexistence. Through political conviction and political decision, we are going to see that the Spanish citizens are secure within a system of freedoms. Consequently, we are going to see that the rule of law is truly observed and to this end we are going to devote our utmost efforts, because terrorism creates not only a situation of anxiety, but also something of an abandonment of the important national problems such as the economic crisis and unemployment. For this reason, I speak of calmness because we have to continue working, and continue working in order to wage an effective struggle against this scourge of terrorism which has been afflicting us for many years. And we have to do so, in spite of the grief we now feel, with the confidence that we can and will defeat terrorism.

[Question] Don Felipe Gonzalez, many thanks for appearing live on our news program. Senior Gonzalez, future prime minister, we wish you success in this and other missions.

[Answer] Thank you.

ETA Admits Killing

LD050830 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0800 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Early this morning, ETA-Militar [Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group-Military] confirmed what was already suspected: It claimed responsibility for the attack 24 hours ago in which Maj Gen Victor Lago Roman, chief of the armored division, was killed. This attack amid unanimous condemnation gave rise to the meeting at the Zarzuela Palace called by the king which was attended by acting Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo, the next prime minister, Felipe Gonzalez, and the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Lt Gen Lacalle Leloup. Their firmness in the struggle against the scourge of terrorism was evident in the note issued with the seal of the Zarzuela Palace.

PAPERS CALL FOR POLITICAL 'MODERATION'

YA 30 Oct Editorial

PM031655 Madrid YA in Spanish 30 Oct 82 p 5

[Editorial: "New Government, New Opposition"]

[Text] The election, which took place on a calm, almost springlike day, was nevertheless a genuine political earthquake which has brought to power the party which hitherto acted as the opposition, virtually eliminated the party which has been in power for 5 years, and placed at the head of the new opposition a party on which very few people would have staked anything only 3 years ago and in which nobody except its indomitable leader believed at that time.

All commentators emphasize that this is the first time that the Socialist Party will have governed. It took part with three ministers in the first 2 years of the republic, and Socialists were the heads of government during most of the civil war -- but heading governments of concentration conditioned, of course, by the abnormal nature of the circumstances. The Socialist Party's triumph is therefore as great as its responsibility. In the commentary which we published yesterday, we indicated what, in our opinion, is the path laid down for the new government both by the difficult internal and external economic circumstances and by the voters' mandate of moderation and the very tone of the party's campaign, which its secretary general and next head of government confirmed in his first words after the triumph. That is clearly the tone. But let the Socialists recall that throughout their 100 years of history they have lived torn internally between the sensible wing, with a national sense and sense of reality, and the radical, partisan and sectarian wing; and that the latter always finally prevailed and rid itself of the Besteiros, Prietos and even a Largo Caballero when he felt the responsibility of power and acted accordingly. The Socialist Party, like any other leftwing or rightwing Spanish party, has its greatest enemy within itself, and it is a good thing for it to take precautions.

We tell the new opposition party the same. Its triumph has come as no surprise, since the opinion polls were unanimously indicating it. As far as we are concerned, we had long been drawing the rulers' attention to a phenomenon which, if they did not correct their course, would finally occur: the masses on whom they had relied would abandon them.

Not only did they take no notice of us, but we were answered with irritability and even abuse.

A whole series of mistakes, too well known for it to be necessary to recall them, have contributed to the disaster more decisively than the wear and tear of power. But it is fair to add that those circumstances favorable to the Popular Alliance would not have been sufficient without the uncommon political qualities unanimously recognized in Mr Fraga; alongside temperamental shortcomings which have been magnified, exaggerated and exploited against him by an implacable propaganda, even though it has been unable to prevent his triumph. We speak to him as friends, just as we did with the Union of the Democratic Center. If Mr Fraga succeeds in restraining himself and conducts the firm and loyal opposition which he has promised -- without yielding to the temptations of radicalization from his own ranks which he will not lack -- it is foreseeable that the field will continue to open up before him until the next election is reached.

From what has been set out, it follows that bipolarization has again become established in Spanish political life. It does not alarm us. We once pointed out that during lengthy periods of our history there were two parties, and those were periods of peace; and there were other periods in which centrist attempts ended, torn by the pull of the extremes. What matters is not so much the presence of -- let us say -- officially moderate parties, as all parties' desire for moderation. And we believe that in this respect the outcome of the election is positive and impressive; the collapse of the Communist Party and the literal disappearance of the extreme rightwing parties. If the new ruling party and the new opposition take that lesson to its final consequences and are faithful to it, we will be able to contemplate the future as we announced at the end of our first editorial on the election with hopeful serenity.

ABC 30 Oct Editorial

PM041105 Madrid ABC in Spanish 30 Oct 82 pp 10-11

[Editorial: "Concerning the Socialist Victory"]

[Text] First, this newspaper congratulates the victorious party, which has won a broad, historic and democratic victory in the elections.

Second, we affirm that the election result in no way changes our outlook: We believed, and still believe, that the Socialist blueprint is a bad one for resolving the undeferable and serious problems facing the nation. At a time when sincere enthusiasm is mixed with miraculous conversions and sudden support, ABC proclaims that during this new stage in Spain's life it will maintain its stance of honest criticism and open disagreement with respect to a political program which, despite its victory, still seems to us archaic, utopian and unequal to the nation's interests.

Third, we welcome the fact that the Socialist Party's victory took place on a day characterized by democratic normality, which we consider admirable in many respects. Democracy is above all a way of accepting defeat and of understanding victory. Every democratic defeat is reversible; no electoral victory is forever. Above all, we must welcome the decline in abstentions, the strengthening of constitutional normality and the exemplary tranquillity that characterized the day. But we must also welcome the extraordinary elucidation that this historic day has brought to Spanish public life. Leaving aside the dominant parties in Catalonia and the Basque country, the following political event of prime importance must be stressed; nonsocialist Spaniards, voters not of the left, now have a broader, stronger, more coherent and growing party which has increased its number of seats tenfold in the short space of a legislative period. Despite the disproportionate nature of the figures, it must be acknowledged that the Spanish parliamentary map is clearer, more viable, more rational, more European than the previous one.

There is a very broad Socialist majority, and a major party of the liberal and conservative center right. And there are two parties that embody the two decisive peripheral phenomena of our contemporary history. The rest are details.

One of these details -- historic, but subsidiary -- is the PCE's terrible decline, which reveals the Communist voters' feelings when it came to mobilizing the useful vote. Another such detail -- and one which, out of analytical compassion, we will not examine now -- is the decline, or rather the dispersal, of the very special political experience called the Union of the Democratic Center. Another detail is the smallness of the extreme right, the decline of the political coalition of the Basque Homeland and Freedom voters and the electoral nonexistence of Adolfo Suarez, who thus completes his performance of a semitragic role, starting from a position of power and glory. Leaving aside all temporary matters of detail, ABC urges from its readers an effort of synthesis to evaluate the essentials.

The most important thing in the coming 4 years will be to maintain the constitutional framework and its basic lynchpin, namely the throne's arbitrative role. The Socialist victory is no plebiscite, but a decisive step toward free alternation in government. This possibility is the prime characteristic of democratic pluralism. And this is the fundamental contribution, the major and real change, made by the throne -- the change whereby all of us exist politically today. Being all too obvious, this is, we believe, the only superfluity included in this analysis.

Following this result, ABC accepts the new situation and publicly declares its intention not to place gratuitous obstacles in the way of the Socialist Party. We want Felipe Gonzalez, three fundamental declarations to be transferred from the realm of words to the realm of deeds. During the past 3 weeks, Mr Gonzalez has talked about the priority of the common good over his own party's options. He has reiterated that the Socialist victory will be the triumph of a pact between his party and society; that it will be society -- not his party -- that will be reflected in the government; and last, he has committed himself to struggling for a climate of solidarity between employers and workers, which will make it possible to extricate the country from its present crisis. It will be on these three essential fronts that ABC will judge and either support or criticize the new government.

One final observation: There is no real democracy without a real opposition. The democratic opposition can now count on a party to which circumstances provide a growing base: the Popular Alliance, which achieved almost 5 million votes, is not only a democratic party, but a substantial part of democracy itself, and it is to be hoped that biased speculations or mercenary distortions on this point will cease right away. Progress and freedom now exist in this country with the stimulus of two parties -- one, with a clear majority, which will form the government; and another, in the minority, in opposition. A polarization? Of course; this is not a matter of opinion but a fact unambiguously chosen by the people's vote. It now remains to be explained, analyzed and demonstrated that polarization need not mean radicalization.

At an extremely difficult time for the nation, we have at the head of the government a young man who has succeeded in establishing discipline and order in his party. The change that has come about is historic, but it is at the same time normal. It is this normality, as opposed to an irresponsible apocalyptic interpretation, that must now be acknowledged and that we acknowledge with our readers.

A process of selection has placed a man of exceptional qualities at the head of the opposition. Manuel Fraga's undeniable triumph in yesterday's elections is a triumph for tenacity, political intelligence and consistent determination. He is now the leader of the opposition and the symbol of the possible alternative.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS-RADICAL LIBERALS ON DEFENSE

[Unattributed Report: "Social Democrats Do Not Want To Spend Money on NATO Missiles This Year"]

[Text] The Social Democrats are adhering to their stance that no money should be allocated this year for the installation of the 572 new NATO nuclear missiles in Europe. However, they are in some confusion as to whether the party -- like its sister party in Norway -- will also be totally opposed to the missiles in the future. This would mean that the Social Democrats would be forced to break with the defense agreement they themselves made with the Conservatives, Liberals, Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party.

"We will reject the request which Defense Minister Hans Engell will be presenting shortly to the Folketing Finance Committee for the use of 15.5 million kroner for the so-called NATO infrastructure program," Knud Damgaard (Social Democrats) told BERLINGSKE SONDAG. "Money must not be spent on launch ramps for the missiles until results have been achieved in the disarmament negotiations." Knud Damgaard pointed out there is still uncertainty in some of the countries that will have the new Pershing II and cruise missiles deployed as a counter to the Russian SS-20 missiles.

Radical Liberal defense spokesman Jens Bilgrav-Nielsen told BERLINGSKE SONDAG that the Radical Liberals would like to help the Social Democrats out of their difficulties, "but we think that it would be hypocritical if the Social Democrats were suddenly to start talking about cuts in defense now." "For the last 4 years the Social Democrats have always always dug in their heels when we have talked about savings, and have just given their support to the defense agreement in which defense spending is increased by 350 million kroner over 3 years, including provisions for automatic index-linked adjustments totaling approximately 1.5 billion kroner."

Therefore, the Radical Liberals intend to table an amendment to the finance bill next week calling for savings of 200 million kroner in the 1983 and 400 million kroner in the 1984 defense budgets, "and we will of course invite the Social Democrats to table the amendment jointly with us," said Jens Bilgrav-Nielsen, who does not want to bring defense savings into the current negotiations between the Radical Liberals and the government on savings in local and regional government spending.

NORWAY

U.S. WOULD NEED PERMISSION TO USE NUCLEAR ARMS

PM041445 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 28 Oct 82 p 8

[Kjell Dragnes Report: "Norwegian Decision Before Nuclear Arms Are Used, Stray Says"]

[Text] The United States will not abandon its right to allow the Marine forces which will come to Norway's aid in a given situation to have nuclear arms with them. However, it is the Norwegian authorities who will ask for U.S. aid and make the decision about whether such arms should be used.

This is former Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund's comment on the report from the United States on what he was told about the Marines' equipment when he met then Secretary of State Alexander Haig in New York in July last year.

Foreign Minister Svenn Stray said that it is completely wrong to say that the Norwegian authorities have received warnings that the Marines would bring nuclear arms with them. He stressed what the contingency stockpiling agreement says: Norway itself will decide if it needs help and will have full control over what weapons will be used. "We have no reason to believe that the Americans will not adhere to the agreement," Stray said.

A NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report, citing well-informed sources in the United States, notes that Frydenlund was informed of the U.S. view at the 14 July meeting with Haig last year. The statement is said to have been made in connection with a discussion of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area which, in the U.S. view, conflicts with NATO's nuclear strategy. Frydenlund was unwilling to comment in greater detail on what Haig said at the meeting, at which Frydenlund wanted to give Haig a more detailed explanation of the Labor Party and the then government's involvement in the question of the establishment of a nuclear-free zone.

The U.S. sources told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA that Frydenlund was also told that U.S. Marines abroad have always had nuclear arms with them ever since the 1958 Lebanon crisis. Frydenlund commented as follows: "This sounds improbable. It would have to mean that U.S. Forces in Vietnam and those now in Beirut have such arms, and that would be a sensation."

According to the contingency stockpiling agreement, a U.S. Marine brigade will be deployed in Norway in a war or crisis situation. According to information received by AFTENPOSTEN, such a brigade in not equipped with nuclear arms but could request such arms from a support unit if the situation called for it.

The 155mm howitzers which are to be stockpiled in Trondelag have a so-called dual capacity. This means that with the addition of special parts, which do not form part of the equipment to be stockpiled in Norway however, the howitzers can be converted to fire nuclear instead of conventional shells.

The reactions on Wednesday [27 October] to the NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report, state on the whole that it contains nothing new. NATO's nuclear strategy is well known, and Norway has not disassociated itself from the strategy as such. The strategy aims at deterrence by ensuring that an aggressor does not know what response he would meet.

Norwegian bases and nuclear policy is not affected because this only applies to peacetime. It is pointless discussing in detail what would happen if a war were to break out, Foreign Minister Stray said.

Socialist Left Party parliamentary leader Stein Ornhoi, however, is strongly critical and considers it particularly serious that Frydenlund was told that the U.S. Marines are always equipped with nuclear arms but did not inform the Storting.

Storting Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Jare Kristiansen said that it is important that the question of a nuclear-free zone be dealt with in a broader context during disarmament negotiations.

Labor Party Chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland's statement falls in with those of Frydenlund and Stray. The contingency stockpiling agreement does not conflict with Norwegian nuclear and base policy. Norwegian authorities have full jurisdiction in this area. Norway does not have nuclear arms and Norwegian forces are not equipped to receive such arms. We are, however, under the NATO nuclear umbrella and have not expressed any reservations about NATO's strategy, she said.

It was obviously the debate on the nuclear-free zone that triggered Haig's statement. The United States has made it clear that it views such a zone with great skepticism, not least because it has no confidence in a Soviet guarantee.

If Norway and Denmark declared in advance that they were also unwilling to have nuclear arms on their territory in a war situation. It would mean that they had reservations about NATO's nuclear strategy. Then it would be doubtful whether the United States would risk its own forces in a conflict in which the enemy would be equipped with arms the Americans themselves would be barred from using.

PAPER PONDERS U.S.-NORWEGIAN NUCLEAR POLICY

PM041057 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 29 Oct 82 p 2

[Olof Santesson Editorial: "Norway and Nuclear Arms"]

[Text] Norway itself decides whether nuclear arms will be brought into its territory. So states Foreign Minister Svenn Stray. Thus, in peacetime there is a ban on nuclear arms on Norwegian soil. In war, no opponent must know in advance how Norway as a NATO nation will act vis-a-vis nuclear arms deployment -- this is thought to be an essential part of deterrence.

Both Stray and former Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund deny news bureau reports that last year Alexander Haig said reinforcement troops for Norway would inevitably take their nuclear arms with them, even before the outbreak of war. The then U.S. secretary of state does, however, seem to have given a reminder of the role of nuclear arms in NATO's defense planning in connection with his previous warning against Norwegian notions of a nuclear-freeze zone.

The former Norwegian Government said in the past that the point of departure cannot be that "our principal ally seek to circumvent Norwegian nuclear policy." Some people in Norway suspect the United States of precisely this or, alternatively, believe that their own government is not telling the truth about all eventualities. They are aware that in a European war, the United States could see further combat missions in Norway beyond simply defending the country against attack. It does seem perhaps a little optimistic to stipulate that Norway's government would have an effective exclusive right of decision vis-a-vis the United States in various gloomy situations.

The question is delicate, especially bearing in mind the growing resistance within the Labor Party to contributing to the joint NATO preparations for the possible deployment of nuclear arms in other Western countries. The discussion of the meaning of contingency stockpiling in Norway and bases for NATO aircraft in crisis situations is expected to flare up again.

Nevertheless, the rest of the world should realize that Norway uses binding phrases to stress its adherence to its long-established attitude concerning peacetime nuclear arms deployment. It is this Norwegian principle which is to be considered as politically central, not the more or less unthought-out and careless U.S. notions which can only complicate Norway's aim of preserving calm in the northernmost part of Europe.

GOVERNMENT SCORES CRITICISM OF MOSCOW VISIT

NC041823 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] The government spokesman today replied to criticism from part of the press on President Kiprianou's recent visit to the Soviet Union and stated that when opposition is conducted only for the sake of opposition and is based on the distortion of developments, without taking into consideration results which are damaging to the national cause, then it becomes a national crime. There are so many other sectors, the spokesman added, in which the opposition could devote itself to its beloved demagoguery and distortion without any particularly harmful results. The opposition, the spokesman added, ought to at least leave our national issue alone, because delicate and particuarly careful handling is required on the part of the government on the one hand, while the opposition is required to undertake objective, responsible and constructive criticism on the other.

The government spokesman added that with their arbitrary interpretations and evaluations on the results of Kiprianou's visit, opposition circles completely align themselves with Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas. We wonder, he concluded, what purposes certain newspapers and those hiding behind them serve by providing interpretations and making evaluations similar to those of the opponent.

KLIRIDHIS WANTS INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS TERMINATED

NC040923 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 4 Nov 82 p 10

[Text] Speaking last night at the Limassol Rotary Club, Democratic Rally Chairman Glavkos Kliridhis asked for the immediate termination of the intercommunal talks.

Mr Kliridhis was speaking at the rotary club following the club's decision to invite all presidential candidates to brief the club members on our national issue. He stressed that nothing is expected from the continuation of the talks and, therefore, they must be terminated.

When the Turks speak about federation, Mr Kliridhis said, they are implying confederation with a weak government with insufficient powers. In connection with the territorial aspect, he added, they do not appear to be inclined to keep less than 28 percent [of the territory they are now holding] and not accept the principle of freedom of movement and settlement. Therefore, he stressed, there is no possibility for a Cyprus solution through the talks.

Continuing his interesting address, the Democratic Rally leader stressed that by September 1983, the dialogue will have been at a deadlock and this, as he said, is clearly deduced from conclusions by the Turks as well as by Hellenic Republic President Karamanlis, Prime Minister Papandreou, New Democracy Leader Averof and by Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus.

Mr Kliridhis added: The assessment in Greece is that the Turks want to continue the dialogue so as to bring Greece's approach on the Aegean closer to their own position. Turkey, he said, promised its allies that in 1984 at the latest, it will hand over power to the politicians. The Turks have repeatedly warned that they will declare an independent state by September 1983, and there are reports that 13 to 14 Muslim states will recognize the Turkish Cypriot state as soon as it is established. Therefore, Mr Kliridhis added, military action by Turkey in Cyprus as blackmail for a solution in the Aegean should not be ruled out.

Further, the Democratic Rally chairman said that General Evren, after the announcement of the AKEL-Democratic Party minimum program, which supported the procedure of talks, informed Greece through [Federal] Germany that he was withdrawing his proposal to Greece; namely, that Turkey was ready for gradual military withdrawal from Cyprus.

Mr Kliridhis added that now there is a change in Western [plans] in the area of the Mediterranean because of events in Iran, Afghanistan and Lebanon. NATO and the United States, he added, have decided that following the loss of Iran, the defense line should now run beyond the Suez Canal in order to protect the oil fields. Besides, this was the aim of the Camp David agreement, which provides that the oil coming through the Suez be transported through the waters between Crete and Egypt. Therefore, Mr Kliridhis stressed, both Greece and Cyprus must properly utilize these changes.

LOSONCZI THANKS KIPRIANOU FOR WELCOME ON 3 NOV

DENKTAS CRITICIZES KIPRIANOU PROPOSAL TO UN

TA041510 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] President Denktas has said that the United Nations has no authority to place the Turkish Cypriot community under the Greek Cypriot yoke. The president was answering questions from correspondents on the formal presentation to the UN General Assembly of Mr Kiprianou's proposal for the inclusion in the General Assembly agenda of the implementation of the UN resolutions.

President Denktas repeated that Cyprus was made up of two separate national communities and that the proposal was not made by the Turkish Cypriots, but by the Greek Cypriots, who want to complete via UN resolutions their bloody coup against the Turkish Cypriot community initiated in 1963.

President Denktas said that it was the Greek Cypriot side who was making a mockery of the respectability of the United Nations by extracting one-sided resolutions. He added that it was again the Greek Cypriots who, under the guise of a legal government, were attacking these resolutions and making efforts to deceive the world. President Denktas stressed that unilateral resolutions would still be invalid. He said that the Greek Cypriot side had displayed its bad intentions by taking the Cyprus problem to the United Nations at the present stage. He stated that the Turkish Cypriot community would do nothing further than place the issue on record. He reiterated the fact that this action did not mean that the Turkish Cypriots would give up their rights, their status, a secure future based on bizonality and an independence guaranteed by Turkey.

He stressed that Greek Cypriot rights in Cyprus did not mean colonizing the Turkish Cypriot community and being the sole rulers of Cyprus. He repeated that there were two equal communities in Cyprus and the Cyprus problem could be solved through a dialogue between these two communities based on equality. He repeated that proposals by third parties and unilateral resolutions could not help the Cyprus settlement.

President Denktas reiterated that the attack initiated in 1963 against the Turkish Cypriots with the aim of destroying this partnership would not meet the acceptance by the Turkish Cypriot community of the Greek Cypriot yoke with the help of the United Nations. These Greek Cypriot efforts were giving food for thought, he added. These efforts, which were based on the assumption that the United Nations did not know the facts, were worth pondering over. It was not the duty of the United Nations to place the Turkish Cypriot community under the Greek Cypriot yoke through its own resolutions. President Denktas stressed that the policy being followed by the Greek Cypriots would make the separation in Cyprus even more concrete. He added that the Turkish Cypriot community did not intend to deviate from the course which would unite the two communities under a federation.

Arrives in Athens

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou returned from Bucharest at 1500 after completing a 3-day official visit to Romania as guest of Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu. The issue which dominated the talks between the two leaders was the creation of a nuclear-free zone in the Balkans and the preparation for a summit conference of Balkan leaders toward fulfillment of the above goal.

Comments on Visit

NC041829 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] The excellent Greek-Romanian relations are now entering a stage of qualitative change with impressive leaps forward in all sectors. This was stressed in his statement to the press by Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, who described the results of his 3-day official visit to Bucharest as absolutely positive and concrete.

Perhaps the most impressive result of our visit to Romania, said the prime minister, who returned to Athens this afternoon, is that there was both a reaffirmation of the joint position of the two sides on removal of all nuclear weapons from the Balkans and the creation of a nuclear-free Balkan zone and a total acceptance of our proposal for the commencement of a practical process for the attainment of this goal.

AVEROF UNDER MEDICAL OBSERVATION IN LONDON

The leader of New Democracy has requested that Konstandinos Papakonstandinou, the party's parliamentary representative, act for him during his absence whenever immediate contact with him would be difficult.

Averof has also requested Papakonstandinou to ask the party's parliamentary group to continue its efforts to guard the democratic institutions and to protect the rights of the Greek people with the same zeal during his absence.

KKE REPLIES TO PAPANDREOU INTERVIEW PART ONE

NC031941 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 2 Nov 82

[Text] In answer to a question by a RIZOSPASTIS correspondent to the KKE leadership on the context of the Papandreou interview in yesterday's TA NEA, the following position statement was released:

"A leading party personality will soon furnish a responsible and analytical reply to questions raised in the prime minister's interview. Naturally, we will wait for the second part of the interview so that we might be able to better study it. It is, noteworthy, however, that instead of studying the municipal election results in depth and drawing the necessary conclusions on the government's policy, the prime minister resorts to such comments about the KKE.

"We do not only mean the inaccuracies about the municipal election results and the KKE's influence, which starkly contrast with the well-known truth, or the fact that the prime minister seems to forget that the artificial option, PASOK or the rightwing, was also supported by the antidemocratic reinforced proportional representation system of election which he personally accepted for the recent parliamentary election, and by the election system now under preparation by the government, which favors the two leading parties.

"The basic fact is that if there is someone who must redefine one's policy, it is not the KKE but the government, which has abandoned all the goals for change on all the basic issues which it now relegates from one 4-year period to the next.

"At the same time, if there is a leadership which should furnish explanations to the members and the base of its party about the policy it is following, it is not the leadership of the KKE, which formulates party policy through an internal party and democratic discussion (meetings of base party organizations with leading personalities, Central Committee plena, conferences and congresses) and remains true to this policy. In any eventuality, the government is deceiving itself if it thinks that, with a bipolar policy and its efforts to prevent popular unity, it will be able to disorientate the people and lead them away from their severe economic and social problems; or away from the serious issues created by the policy in support of preserving the U.S. bases, of enclavement within NATO and of guaranteeing the highhandedness of the monopolies."

KKE INTERIOR LEADER EXPLAINS PARTY POLICY

NC050939 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0500 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Speaking at a press conference yesterday at the union of foreign press correspondents, KKE Interior Secretary General Yiannis Banias stated that the KKE Interior favors a policy on the equal reduction of power of both military blocs. He added that particularly with regard to NATO, the KKE Interior favors a national policy leading to withdrawal from its military wing.

In connection with the U.S. bases, Mr Banias stated that the timetable must provide not for how long they will remain in our country, but when they should be removed. As for the EEC, he said that government policy is moving in the right direction.

The KKE Interior secretary general expressed his party's opposition to the Polish military regime as well as to the present regime in Turkey, whose claims over the Aegean are unacceptable, he stressed. On the Cyprus problem, he urged insistence on its nationalization.

Refferring to the government's economic policy, Mr Banias stressed that revival could be achieved through structural changes, and added that there has been some reduction in inflation but unemployement is growing and it is therefore necessary to mobilize the whole productive potential of the country. Mr Banias also expressed satisfaction with the democratization measures taken by the government but observed that PASOK is suffering from the single-party concept that it is the sole bearer of change. He also stressed that adoption of the simple proportional system will promote the necessary pluralism and multiplicity of voices in the country's political life.

As for the municipal elections, Mr Banias observed that the people again condemned the rightwing, but at the same time expressed concern over delays and mistakes in the government's policy.

Finally, Mr Banias said that the KKE Interior must struggle so that correlation of forces within the leftwing may change and so that it may play a determinative role in the shaping of political development in the future.

EGYPT'S 'ALI ON EFFORTS TO IMPROVE TRADE

[Text] Egyptian deputy prime minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali who is on an official visit in Turkey, visited the union of chambers of commerce, industry and stock exchanges. The chairman of the union, Mehmet Yazar, said during the meeting that trade between the two countries was growing and it was possible to increase the mutual volume of trade to $1 billion. Kamal Hasan 'Ali stated that his country was pursuing a policy of opening up to the outside, and added that the importance of the public sector in the economy was shifting to the private sector. The visiting minister stressed that Egypt had to make very big investments by the year 2000 in the fields of housing, infrastructure, agricultural improvements, transportation and communications. He called on Turkish businessmen to invest in Egypt.

CUMHURIYET ON U.S. BASES, RDF IN COUNTRY

NC050759 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 2 Nov 82 p 3

["Issues in Politics" Column by Ergun Balci: "The Gulf and the News Put Out by AP"]

[Excerpts] The article which American journalist Jack Anderson published in the WASHINGTON POST claiming that "the United States wants to construct three new bases in Turkey" caused justified anxiety in our country and our press expressed this anxiety. Amid this atmosphere, National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken felt the need to stress that "the United States has not exercised any pressure on Turkey to undertake active military service in regions outside NATO. Honorable Bayulken commented in a rather unfortunate manner that the purpose of certain news and comments circulated recently was to "cloud the minds of Turkish public opinion."

We believe, however, that reports and comments appearing in our press on this subject intend to "enlighten" and not "cloud" minds. We believe that the Turkish press is trying to express the sincere concerns of the Turkish public which originate from a desire to be enlightened on this extremenly sensitive issue.

Thought-provoking reports have recently appeared both in foreign press and news agency reports concerning the Persian Gulf issue. As discussions concerning the Rapid Deployment Force (RDF) were growing in intensity, the American ASSOCIATED PRESS carried a report which directly concerns Turkey. According to this AP report dated 29 October quoting the leading Saudi Arabian newspaper AR-RIYAD, the United States, feeling more worried now than ever that the Iran-Iraq conflict might spread to the oil fields in the gulf area, has decided to double its RFD and establish its headquarters in Turkey. According the AR-RIYAD, the United States communicated its concerns about the situation in the Persian Gulf to its West European allies as well. AR-RIYAD did not specify the origin of this report. However, the appearance of the AR-RIYAD report that the United States "was contemplating setting up the RDF headquarters in Turkey" shortly after Jack Anderson's statement that the United States wishes to construct 3 new bases in Turkey is an interesting coincidence.

Our foreign ministry characterized Jack Anderson's comment concerning Turkey as "a product of his imagination." Honorable Bayulken, on the other hand, disclosed that the United States did not bring any pressure to bear on Turkey to undertake active military service in areas outside NATO.

However, even if the United States has not yet officially submitted a demand to Turkey, it is understood from the foreign press and news agencies that it has such projects and intentions. It is therefore advisable that we exercise extreme care and sensitivity in this matter.

SOVIET EMBASSY IN ANKARA COMMENTS ON CYPRUS

TA051017 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] It has been announced that there are no changes in Soviet policy regarding the Cyprus problem. The under secretary at the Soviet Embassy in Ankara, Mikhail (?Pogudin), held a news conference today and said that since 1974, the Soviet Union has supported the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot view that the problem should be solved through the intercommunal talks. However, he added that the Soviet Union also believes that an international conference would facilitate the efforts being made by the intercommunal negotiators to reach a peaceful, lasting and just solution. Replying to a question, (?Pogudin) said that the recent visit to Moscow by Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou was not an official, but a working visit.

IRANIAN ENVOY ON ISRAEL, EGYPT, IRAQI WAR

TA041556 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1455 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] Ankara, Nov 4 (AA) -- Iran's ambassador to Ankara, Mohammad Ganji rejected allegations about a rapprochement between Iran and Israel as concoctions of the U.S. and Zionism in order to mislead public opinion.

At a press conference marking the anniversary of Ayatollah Khomeyni's 1964 exile from Iran and of the occupation of the American Embassy in Tehran, the Iranian ambassador noted Iran had proposed the dismissal of Israel from the U.N. and specialized agencies, but that its proposal had not received much support.

He believed nothing had changed in Egypt with Anwar As-Sadat's death. Arab countries were becoming "soft on Israel" in order to please the U.S., whereas "Israel is a cancerous boil for the Arab world, which should be removed if genuine peace is to be established in the Middle East."

Ganji also gave particulars of the war with Iraq, claiming 300 sq. km. of Iranian territory had been liberated from Iraqi occupation, but there was 600 more sq. km. still under occupation.

VOTCP HITS U.S. EXPANDING AIRPORTS IN TURKEY

TA261139 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 26 Oct 82

[Station Commentary]

[Text] At last an announcement was made yesterday, dear listeners. Officials from NATO headquarters officially announced that 10 airports in eastern Turkey are being expanded for the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force [RDF] and that additional military installations and hangars are being built. Efforts exerted by the junta to conceal the concessions made to the United States behind the screen of NATO obligations have been in vain. NATO officials said that the air bases are being expanded within the framework of the special bilateral agreements signed between Turkey and the United States, and that they are directed for use outside the NATO sphere of influence.

Evren, speaking in Erzurum today, defended the junta constitution. In our call to the citizens of Erzurum yesterday, we had asked Evren if a new base will be granted to the U.S. forces in Erzurum. For the last year, U.S. magazines have been carrying reports that bases have been prepared in Erzurum and Van for the RDF for use against the Soviet Union and the Islamic countries.

What is the RDF? They are damned units which are treated like lepers by the regional countries and kept out of their territories. Even certain reactionary Arab states have not let these forces within their borders. Letting them in our borders will be tantamount to creating a confrontation between Turkey and all the Islamic countries as has been the case with Egypt. It is tantamount to isolating Turkey in the region and the world, together with the United States and Israeli Zionism, as has been the case with Egypt. The RDF threatens the Islamic countries as well as the Soviet Union.

Giving bases on our soil to these forces is tantamount to introducing a new threat into our country. The United States wishes to deploy new nuclear missiles in Europe. The U.S. plans also aim at deploying these missiles in Turkey. The runways of the base in Erzurum, which has been expanded for the RDF, have been renewed for this purpose. The B-52 strategic bombers that carry medium-range missiles have begun using these runways.

Dear Listeners. How can the junta generals impose such slavery and such a pro-U.S. policy, which only befits a colony, on our country and people? They first attacked the democratic forces, jailed the progressive peace fighters, banned the unions and the democratic people's organizations and cleared the way for those in favor of a U.S. mandate and for the traitors. Now they are getting ready to take another step to silence those who are defending the interests of the country. They want to impose their reactionary constitution. Saying yes to the constitution is tantamount to saying yes to the U.S. RDF.

MBFR 320TH SESSION AT ODDS ON TROOP STRENGTH

AU051030 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 5 Nov 82 p 3

[Text] The question of the actual troop strength of the East in central Europe was again predominant at the 320th plenary session of the Vienna negotiations on a reduction of forces in central Europe. While the only speaker at the meeting, Belgian chief delegate, Bob J.L. Le Bacq, again pointed out that a balanced reduction of military personnel could only be achieved if the question of Eastern superiority of ground forces -- about 160,000 men -- were clarified. An Eastern press spokesman declared in this context that as before, the NATO countries insisted on an asymmetrical reduction to the detriment of the East.

To achieve an agreed troop strength ceiling of 900,000 soldiers on both sides, the Western side demands an Eastern reduction of about 260,000 men, while the NATO states want to reduce their troops by only about 90,000 men, the Warsaw Pact countries' spokesman declared. According to the Western position, the East had presented date showing that at present there are 57 divisions, or 960,000 men, in the central European reduction area, while the West has 25 divisions or 80,000 men (the strength of a division is different in West and East).

The Warsaw Pact countries' spokesman also stressed that the NATO states had a superiority of 16,200 men who are Air Force personnel in the central European reduction area, and that the superiority of Western ground troops was 300,000 men.

The next plenary session of the 19 state delegations will be held next Thursday.

MOST POLISH DEBT TO WESTERN BANKS RESCHEDULED

AU031336 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 3 Nov 82 p 7

[Text] An agreement for 1982 on rescheduling Poland's debts to Western banks is to be signed in Vienna today. According to the banks involved, the negotiated stipulations of the agreement provide for the rescheduling of 95 percent of the repayments falling due in 1982, in the amount of $2.3 million (about 41.4 billion schillings) over a period of 7 years -- with repayments beginning only after 4 years. The remaining 5 percent must be paid in 1983. Of the $1.1 billion in (about 19.8 billion schillings) interest payments due in 1982, two thirds must be paid before the end of this year, the remainder in 1983. The Western banks have delcared their readiness, however, to grant Poland short-term loans for import financing in the amount of half of the interest falling due in 1982 (about $550 million), which will revolve for a maximum period of 3 years.

HAUGHEY LOSES VOTE; NEW ELECTIONS TO BE 24 NOV

LD050834 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0806 GMT 5 Nov 82

[By Chris Parkin, PA Staff Reporter]

[Text] The Irish Republic today began the run-up to its third general election in 18 months and all the indications are that it will be a bitter campaign. The new poll, caused by Prime Minister Mr Charles Haughey's failure to win a confidence motion in the Dublin Parliament, will be on November 24, with nominations closing on November 15.

Mr Haughey, who yesterday lost the confidence vote by a margin of two, was last night confident of success, and dismissed suggestions that he would soon lose the leadership of his Fianna Fail Party. But Fine Gael opposition Party leader Dr Garret Fitzgerald was also confident of regaining office as the republic's premier. He said a new election was 'vital for the country" and that Mr Haughey's government had lost the confidence of its own party, The Dail (the Irish Parliament), and the country.

SVENSKA DAGBLADET CITES MBFR AMBASSADOR STAAR

PM080941 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 26 Oct 82 p 4

[Lars Christiansson report: "East and West Agreed: Both Want Troop Reductions"]

[Text] The negotiations between NATO and the Warsaw Pact in Vienna on troop reductions in Europe have long been deadlocked. U.S. delegation leader Ambassador Richard F. Staar is, however, now cautiously optimistic. He hopes that the most recent negotiating proposal put foward by the West will break the ice.

On one point the East and West are agreed. According to Ambassador Starr, both sides are prepared to cut troops down to a total of 700,000 for land forces, with a maximum of 900,000 including all types of personnel.

In the past, the NATO position was that the United States and the Soviet Union should first reach a mutual agreement. Then the other pact and alliance members would follow this example. The East then demanded guarantees that the other countries would really follow up the superpowers' decision.

"The new proposal which we put foward in July this year must be seen as progress. We propose that only one decision embracing all troops on both sides be taken. This should make a negotiated settlement easier," Richard Staar said in an interview with SVENSKA DAGBLADET. Staar is paying a short visit to Stockholm and will meet with representatives of the Swedish Foreign Ministry.

Ambassador Staar told me that the previous negotiation agenda was causing problems. It provided the framework for an agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union, but there were no guarantees that the final objective would be reached. The military forces of other pact members could be used to keep troop numbers at a total above the level intended by the negotiations' results.

Even though both parties are agreed on the troop numbers which would be permissible, the agreement is still not on the table awaiting signatures. The West maintains that there are 170,000 more men that the East reports.

"We have asked them to sit down at the negotiating table and discuss our figures. We are prepared to explain to them how they have been reached. It is possible that we are simply counting in different ways. Perhaps they are not including all the units we have in our analyses and which we think should be included."

However, as yet the East has been unwilling to agree to such a discussion. Nor have the Warsaw Pact negotiators shown any interest in agreeing on a concrete working method to reach the objective, Staar said. "The whole time they have said that they considered such talks meaningless."

The bone of contention in these negotiations is the same as in all other discussion on disarmament. It is necessary that agreement be reached on verification mechanisms which can guarantee that the agreement is being observed. Here the East takes the view that satellite surveillance is sufficient. The West considers it insufficient. It does not reveal what is being concealed in hangars and barracks. Poor weather also hampers the gathering of complete information.

The demands which the Western powers have put foward simply state that each side must have the right to station permanent observers on "the other side."

FRANCE, UK ADMIT DISAGREEMENT ON EEC BUDGET

LD051434 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] The existence of a disagreement between France and Great Britain has been admitted. The 7th French-British summit has just ended with a joint press conference held by Margaret Thatcher and Francois Mitterrand. They both acknowledged an ongoing disagreement regarding the British contribution to the EEC budget. This year Great Britain will receive compensation because it considers it has paid too much, but Francois Mitterrand believes there is no question of making this compensation permanent. Margaret Thatcher, on the other hand, thinks that her country's present position within the European Community is totally unfair. From now on, delegations from both countries will meet monthly, either in London or in Paris, to enable both sides to better coordinate their efforts, Mrs Thatcher said, and to consolidate their relations, Mr Mitterrand added.

TINDEMANS CALLS FOR EC 'SECURITY POLICY'

LD052314 Hamburg DPA in German 2143 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Brussels/Saarbruecken, 5 Nov (DPA) -- In Saarbruecken on Saturday, the Belgian foreign minister, Leo Tindemans, called for the inclusion of a security policy in the cooperation of EC countries. Addressing the European Academy in Saarbruecken, he made it clear that not all EC member countries would accept security cooperation within the EC. That was why "provisional models for a solution" should be worked out by those EC partners who "share our view."

The Belgian foreign minister supported the implementation of the plans of the German and Italian foreign ministers, Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Emilio Colombo, who also advocate the inclusion of a security policy in EC affairs and who call for the Community to take an additional step toward a European union.

In Saarbruecken, Tindemans outlined a 10-point program for closer EC cooperation as a contribution to the Community's economic revival. In the current economic situation the EC must, above all, avoid a 1930's type crisis through joint action.

His proposals include joint action by The Ten in the energy supply field. Close cooperation was needed with countries commanding potential energy wealth. As an example, Tindemans cited the Norwegian gas deposits. After the difficulties which the gas deal with the USSR had caused in West European-U.S. relations, he said, this was of special importance.

His plan also provides for simplifying customs procedures within the Community as well as joint action on export credit policy with the European Investment Bank playing a part.

DEFENSE MINISTER DEPARTS FOR TALKS IN WASHINGTON

LD071334 Hamburg DPA in German 1258 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Bonn, 7 Nov (DPA) -- Defense Minister Manfred Woerner (CDU), as the first representative of the new Federal Government to visit Washington, left for a 2-day visit there on Sunday morning. In a DPA interview in Bonn shortly before his departure, he expressed the conviction that despite tensions between East and West, a new 'cold war' will not come about. He continued to hope for concrete results at the disarmament negotiations, especially in the medium-range missile sector. The Warsaw Pact cannot close its mind to Western disarmament proposals in the long run. However, preconditions for successful disarmament talks in Geneva and elsewhere "is the seamless cohesion of the NATO alliance." One purpose of his visit to the United States is to affirm and, where necessary, to strengthen this seamless cohesion.

Woerner is going to the U.S. capital a week before the planned visit by Chancellor Helmut Kohl to U.S. President Ronald Reagan. The defense minister is to have meetings with his counterpart, Caspar Weinberger, Vice President George Bush, Secretary of State George Shultz, and security adviser William Clark. Woerner said that the main subjects of his talks in Washington will be East-West relations, the question of the NATO dual decision on medium-range missiles and its realization as well as problems of arms control policy. The Federal Government's position on medium-range missiles is clear. "There is no change concerning the undelayed realization of both parts of the dual decision."

Referring to possible U.S. requests for increased German arms expenditures, Woerner said that the new Federal Government has made plain through the rearranged 1983 budget the great importance which it attaches to security. At a time when there have been great cuts in the budget, the defense budget still shows a nominal increase of 4.8 percent. "We were unable to do more."

In the DPA interview, Woerner said that the Americans have not demanded an extension of the NATO sphere, "and they are not going to demand it." Deployment of the Federal Army outside the sphere of the Western alliance is -- as the Americans are aware -- out of the question. "This is the attitude of the new Federal Government as it was the attitude of the old." However, it will have to be discussed within the framework of NATO to what extent the Federal Republic can relieve the Americans or other alliance powers "when they, after prior consultations and in the interest of the whole of the alliance, become active outside the NATO area." This will be primarily not financial but political relief.

According to Woerner, there are American concepts on transferring U.S. units closer to the GDR frontier. This will have to be discussed at the bilateral level as well as within NATO. A commitment is out of the question at the moment, above all "for financial reasons."

Alluding to the latest terrorist attacks on U.S. Army installations and on cars belonging to U.S. soldiers in the Federal Republic, Woerner underlined that the Federal Government will do everything "to improve the protection of our American friends and allies." The terrorists will not achieve their objective of "upsetting" our U.S. allies and, "if possible, getting them to withdraw."

U.S. Missile Sites, Security Policy

LD080852 Hamburg DPA in German 0035 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Washington, 8 Nov (DPA) -- Defense Minister Manfred Woerner (CDU) does not want to make public the locations for the possible placement of new U.S. medium-range missiles in the Federal Republic. In a DPA interview on Sunday evening during the flight to Washington for his 2-day visit, Woerner said that the new Federal Government will also stick to the agreed procedure of not making the sites public.

In contrast, the new chairman of the Bundestag Foreign Affairs Committee, Werner Max (CDU), proposed that the site locations be announced to the public since the construction of the missile bases can in no way remain secret. A start is to be made on setting up the nuclear missiles at the end of 1983 if no results have been achieved at the disarmament talks in Geneva by then.

Woerner said he is in favor of providing the public with maximum information, particularly about Soviet medium-range missiles. U.S. satellite photos of SS-20 missiles should also be shown to the public in the Federal Republic. He will give this advice to the Americans.

Woerner told journalists during the flight that he will promise his U.S. opposite number, Caspar Weinberger, in Washington that beginning in 1984 the Federal Government will pay DM350 million in 4 annual installments for NATO's infrastructure program. The money goes into a common NATO fund to establish or improve communications installations and control systems and to expand airports as well as combat stock piles and the installation of depots in the event of defense requirements.

The new Bundeswehr chief will explain the Federal Government's security policy to the U.S. administration and stress the closely shared common interests between Bonn and Washington. "Differences and mistrust during the past years caused by the previous government must be removed," stressed Woerner.

SPD GROUP VIEWS U.S. MIDTERM ELECTION RESULTS

LD051918 Hamburg DPA in German 1526 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Bonn 5 Nov (DPA) -- The SPD Bundestag parliamentary group has welcomed the results of the U.S. midterm elections and takes the view that the consequences of the election outcome are also in the interests of the FRG. The foreign policy expert of the group, Peter Maenning, said on Friday in Bonn that the strengthening of the Democratic Party and the convincing referendum results on the freezing of nuclear arms challenge Republican President Ronald Reagan to change course on domestic policy and on his attitude toward the American peace movement and arms control policy.

The votes of the electors ought to ensure that cuts in the "gigantic defense budget" of the United States, a budget which was making state finances shaky and was leading to the aggravation of social tensions, will become necessary in internal policy terms. Moreover, there may now be a greater U.S. willingness to reach satisfactory conclusions in the Geneva missile negotiations, Maenning said.

MOELLEMANN WANTS PLO INCLUDED IN MIDEAST TALKS

LD071830 Kuwait KUNA in English 1733 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Bonn, Nov (KUNA) -- A West German official called Sunday for including the Palestine Liberation Organization in any future peace talks over the Middle East crisis. In an interview with KUNA, state minister at the Foreign Ministry and member of the Free Democratic Party Juergen Moellemann said that he will call for a German dialogue with the PLO.

Moellemann said that his government should adopt a frank attitude towards the crisis and towards supporting peace talks in the region and stressed the necessity of realizing the Palestinian people's rights to self-determination. He said that he had conferred with PLO representatives, namely chairman Yasir 'Arafat, chief diplomat Faruq Waddumi and the organization's representative in Bonn 'Abdallah al-Infranji.

KUNA asked the West German official, who also heads the Arab-German Friendship Society, whether his new ministerial portfolio would affect his chairmanship of the society. He replied that he finds no contradiction. The minister vehemently advocated his stance in supporting the strengthening of Arab-German relations and cooperation, and added that he does not think of giving up his post as chairman of the society. The minister disclosed that he will visit Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, UAE and the Arab League headquarters in Tunis. Moellemann said that he will respond to an invitation to visit Cairo but added that its date will be finalized later.

Asked whether the other state minister at the Foreign Ministry, who is elected from the Christian Democratic Party, shares his own speculations on the Middle East while he is known to be a supporter of Israel, Moellemann said that he will try to convince the other minister with "my views."

DEVELOPMENT AID REASSESSED, LINKED TO FRG FIRMS

LD071046 Hamburg DPA in German 0011 GMT 7 Nov 82

[By DPA Correspondent Klaus Bering]

[Excerpts] Bonn, 7 Nov (DPA) -- The Federal Republic of Germany, stricken by serious economic problems, is to reorganize its development aid in the future.

New CSU Development Minister Juergen Warnke (aged 50) will brief ambassadors from African, Asian and Latin American developing countries in the next few days about the new situation. The tone will be: Bonn's development aid will be slower in coming forward, current development projects will be examined as to their efficiency, and democratic states pursuing a market economy will have priority over others from now on.

Calculations by the Development Ministry show that Bonn's promises for aid from past years now total over DM26 billion (DM 13.8 billion in bilateral credits, DM3.9 billion nonrefundable technical aid and DM8.3 billion promised to UN, EC and other multinational funds). Bonn's 1983 development aid budget -- at DM6.26 billion, 3.9 percent higher than in 1982 -- is already insufficient to cover all the allocations. The shortfall amounts to nearly DM600 billion. [as received]

Because of the recession, Development Minister Warnke expects a growth of 3.9 -- 4.5 percent in his budget for the next few years. Warnke does not intend to reduce German development aid, but intends to use it more purposefully and effectively. New bilateral credit promises will not exceed DM2.4 billion a year by 1985. New emphasis will be placed on the planned increased mobilization of nonstate forces (organizations, private industry).

Warnke believes that true partnership in development aid requires German interests to be taken as much into account as those of the recipient countries. Bonn is determined to avoid at all cost any conflicts that its development policy might cause with Western alliance partners, such as with the United States in Central America.

Until now, Bonn has not tied its development aid to orders placed with German firms. Nevertheless, there are strong currents in the governing German Christian Democrats which would like to see such ties established. Development Minister Warnke would prefer to adhere to current practices, but nevertheless intends to give preferential support to projects in the Third World if they are linked with orders for FRG firms.

FDP CONGRESS APPROVES JOINING CDU/CSU COALITION

LD051940 Hamburg DPA in German 1918 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Berlin, 5 Nov (DPA) -- The FDP National Congress in Berlin, with a bare majority, approved the party's change in joining the CDU/CSU in a new coalition. The congress passed a motion submitted by the Saarland FDP, which says: "The national congress approves the decision of the party's national executive and parliamentary party to form a new federal government with the Union parties." The motion was carried by 210 against 181 votes. There were 7 abstentions.

Coalition, Other Motions

LD052122 Hamburg DPA in German 1955 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Excerpts] Berlin, 5 Nov (DPA) -- The FDP congress by a bare majority tonight approved the coalition change brought about by the party leadership, but disapproved of the manner in which the change had taken place.

The congress expressly condemned the CDU/CSU refusal to accept the previous minister of the interior, Gerhart Baum, as a partner in the coalition negotiations, and condemned the attitude taken on this matter by the FDP negotiating commission. In another resolution, the congress called on all FDP members not to support divisive tendencies.

The delegates voted by a clear majority against a premature ending of the coalition with the CDU/CSU before the proposed election date of 6 March 1983. They rejected by 184 votes to 133 a motion calling on the FDP parliamentary party to end the coalition with the CDU/CSU in January in time for the federal president to dissolve the Bundestag. They passed a motion saying that the elections should take place without amending the constitution.

A large majority disapproved of the manner which the coalition agreements with the CDU/CSU were arrived at because of the inadequate briefing and participation of rank-and-file members. The voters on this motion were not counted by the platform. The motion, submitted by the Lower Saxony Branch, also said: "The agreements" with the CDU/CSU "are inadequate". They need to be supplemented in conformity with the 1980 election program. This phrase was also passed by a large majority.

Genscher Reelected Chairman

LD052042 Hamburg DPA in German 2031 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Berlin 5 Nov (DPA) -- As expected, FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher was reelected by the FDP Congress in Berlin tonight. He received 222 out of 400 votes cast, and thus the required absolute majority, on the first ballot. His challenger was Uwe Ronneburger.

One hundred and sixty-nine delegates voted for Uwe Ronneburger, who is deputy chairman of the FDP and FDP chairman in Schleswig-Holstein, and six delegates abstained. One delegate voted "non" and two ballots were invalid.

Genscher's reelection was greeted by sustained applause as well as expressions of disapproval by delegates and the public. Young opponents of Genscher unfured streamers bearing the inscription "Enough".

Genscher accepted his election as party chairman. His first reaction was to appeal to delegates for tolerance so that "we may convince those who today feel unable to support a majority decision." He would try, he said, by his conduct in office to gain the trust of those who had not voted for him. His challenger, Ronneburger, congratulated Genscher on his reelection.

Speaking after Genscher, Ronneburger took the floor for a brief speech. He wished the reelected chairman and the party as a whole success for the future. He called on delegates to draw together on men and measures and to adopt his demand that the FDP again control the Ministry of the Interior after new elections.

In his election as party chairman two years ago, Genscher received 333 out of 369 votes, or 90.2 percent. In tonight's election against his challenger Ronneburger, he received 55.8 percent of the votes. This is the worst result ever achieved by an FDP chairman in the party's history.

Mischnick Reelected

LD052236 Hamburg DPA in German 2119 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Berlin, 5 Nov (DPA) -- Wolfgang Mischnick, chairman of the FDP pariamentary group, has been reelected deputy chairman of the FDP with a clear majority of 258 votes to 95, adstentions and 13 invalid ballots.

Other Results

LD060030 Hamburg DPA in German 2241 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Excerpts] Berlin, 5 Nov (DPA) -- Irmgard Adam-Schwaetzer was elected FDP general secretary by 200 out of 382 votes. She succeeds Guenter Verheugen, who resigned after the coalition change. Lambsdorff was elected to a seat in the FDP presidium by 239 votes. Also elected to the Presidium were Horst-Juergen Lahmann, the Bremen FDP chairman, who received 208 votes; and the Saarland FDP chairman, Werner Klumpp, who received 182 votes in a second ballot against Genscher's opponent, Hildegard Hamm-Bruecher, who received 178 votes. Neither received the required absolute majority in the first ballot. Martin Bangemann, as a member of the European Parliament, is automatically a member of the FDP Presidium.

Deputy Chairmen, Treasurer Elected

LD052306 Hamburg DPA in German 2148 GMT 5 Nov 82

Leftwing Defeat on Policy

LD062124 Hamburg DPA in German 2044 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Excerpt] Berlin 6 Nov (DPA) -- In tonight's voting on the guidelines of future FDP policy, the party executive managed to gain the upper hand over the leftwing liberal minority. In a 4-hour debate on the manifestos submitted by the two party wings -- which contain fundamental statements on defense, economic and social policy -- the delegates approved the Genscher/Lambsdorff line. Voting on the remaining points has been postponed until tomorrow morning for reasons of time. A party congress commission had drawn upon the "Berlin Manifesto" of the party executive and the "Liberal Manifesto" of the leftwing liberal faction to compile a consultative paper summarizing the main points of difference.

Among other things, the party congress approved the party executive's stance on the subject of disarmament and the NATO dual decision, the issue of a nuclear-free zone and the problem of arms exports. Thus the party congress supported the policies of FDP chief and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. The party congress insists on the renunciation of nuclear medium-range missiles in the East and West after a corresponding agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union. The concrete needs of counterarming is to be examined at an FDP federal congress on the basis of the stage reached in negotiations.

Leadership Wins Support

LD071230 Hamburg DPA in German 1147 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Berlin, 7 Nov (DPA) -- The Berlin FDP Party Congress today adopted a program for the liberals' future policy. Thus the party leadership, which supports Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Otto Graf Lambsdorff, gained the upper hand while former General Secretary Guenter Verheugen's alternative proposals found no majority. The delegates supported the NATO dual decision but also asked for serious dialogue with the peace movement. They endorsed a free and social market economy. With reference to free collective bargaining, they rejected legal arrangements concerning cuts in working hours. These resolutions will be put to the program commission, which is to formulate the FDP program for the planned Bundestag elections in March, on which a party congress is to decide in early January.

Lambsdorff Election Decision

LD051705 Hamburg DPA in German 1514 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Berlin, 5 Nov (DPA) -- Federal Minister of Economic Affairs Otto Graf Lambsdorff will not run for the office of deputy chairman of the Free Democratic Party at the Berlin national party conference. He gave the need for party members to patch up their differences as the reason for his surprise decision on Friday afternoon while speaking in front of 400 delegates. By not running, Lambsdorff wants to make a contribution to a unified and cohesive party.

Instead, Lambsdorff, one of the proponents of the FDP's switch to the Union parties, will run for a seat on the Presidium. He confirmed that he had previously suggested to his rival for the deputy chairman post, Gerhart Baum, that they should both renounce their candidacies as adversaries and leave the way clear for the Bremen Land chairman, Horst-Juergen Lahmann, but his request was rejected.

ADDITION TO GENSCHER ON COALITION'S FAILURE

Hamburg DPA in German at 1154 GMT on 5 November carried the following additions to the item entitled "Genscher Comments on Failure of Coalition" published on page J 3 in the Federal Republic of Germany section of the 5 November Western Europe DAILY REPORT, and should be inserted after the last paragraph.

Genscher gave an assurance that also in the coalition with the CDU/CSU until 6 March, the FDP will rescind no decision in legal and domestic policy which it had carried through prior to the change of coalition. He will also refuse at the planned election party conference in Freiburg at the end of January "to allow even one of the legal and domestic policy demands to be dropped" for the next legislative period. Hence, the coalition negotiations following the 6 March elections will be most difficult in this sphere. Also in environmental policy, the FDP has to be the driving force of the new coalition. For liberals, environmental protection is of constitutional importance.

The chairman emphatically stressed the party's independence. "We are not social-liberal when we are in coalition with the SPD and not Christian-liberal when we govern with the CDU." The FDP is always and foremost the liberal party and only secondarily a partner in the coalition. The founding of a new coalition cannot be allowed to have any influence on the content and implementation of the election program. "Programs should not conform to the coalition, but within coalitions, programs have to be implemented."

On the accusation discussed in the FDP to the effect that in the coalition negotiations he did not shield former Minister of the Interior Gerhart Baum, Genscher said that he would have welcomed it if Baum had accepted the offer to become justice minister in the government. Baum's reason for his rejection of the offer has, to be respected, however. "All of us must thank Gerhart Baum for his work as minister of the interior."

In the sphere of foreign and security policy, Genscher emphatically rejected the demands -- also made in his own party -- that the counterarming part of the NATO dual decision be abandoned. Whoever calls this into question "endangers the negotiations, and whoever wants a nuclear-free zone now without all the conditions for it being created -- conventional and nuclear -- is endangering security and stability in Europe." Both points criticized by Genscher are also contained in the "Liberal Manifesto" of Genscher's opponents.

In this context, the chairman and foreign minister clearly espoused detente and cooperation with the East and stressed in this connection that a trade war with the East is out of the question for the FDP. Referring to the venue of the party conference, Genscher said that no place is more suited than Berlin for raising the question of German responsibility for peace. Not only must a war never emanate again from German soil, but "from German soil must emanate peace initiatives for disarmement and cooperation."

AFTENPOSTEN REPORTS TALKS WITH NORWAY'S WILLOCH

PM051711 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 3 Nov 82 p 8

[Elisabeth Holte dispatch: "Willoch: Paris Unshakable in Support of NATO Dual Decision"]

[Excerpts] Paris, 2 Nov -- "France's Socialist government takes the view that NATO should be unshakable in its adherence to the so-called dual decision and that the Soviet Union must be given the choice of either reducing its nuclear forces or of having to live with the deployment of new nuclear arms in the West. We were agreed that, in order to show the Soviet Union we are serious, certain preparations must be made in the West in the event that the deployment of the new weapons proves necessary," Norwegian Prime Minister Kaare Willoch said in Paris Tuesday [2 November] after talks with his French counterpart Pierre Mauroy and President Mitterrand.

As well as the NATO dual decision, the talks between Willoch and Mauroy, who was later joined by government colleagues, External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson, Energy Minister Delegate Edmond Herve, Scientific Research and Technology Minister of State Jean-Pierre Chevenement and Post and Telecommunications Minister Louis Mexandeau, also touched on a number of international political and economic topics: Not only the East-West situation and nuclear policy in Europe and the strategic situation in Northern Europe, but also the persistent international economic crisis and the tendency toward French protectionism, raised by Norway.

As far as the question of supplies of Norwegian gas to France beginning in the 1990's was concerned, it was impossible to make any further progress in the present round of talks, other than Norway pointing out the gas would be available and France expressing interest in supplies when the time comes.

During the talks, detailed consideration was given to the NATO dual decision. Both Norway and France stressed that it would be better if it were possible to get the Soviet Union to accept an agreement for mutual nuclear reductions so the deployment of the new medium-range missiles in the West would be unnecessary. However, NATO should not give away the important card which the dual decision represents and give the Soviet Union the impression there will be no deployment in the West regardless of whether the Soviet Union makes concessions or not, it was stressed. For Norway it comes as no surprise that the Socialist Paris government takes this view, since it was stressed by External Relations Minister Cheysson during his visit to Norway this summer. However, it was thought worth stating again.

Af far as Norway's relationship to the EEC's foreign policy cooperation in the European political system was concerned, the two sides said they were satisfied with the close regular consultations that have begun. In his luncheon speech over venison steaks, Mauroy expressed the hope that full use will be made of the elastic information arrangement established between Norway and the Ten.

Many of the same questions were raised later in the day during Willoch's almost hour-long conversation with President Francois Mitterrand after the Norwegian prime minister had paid a short courtesy visit to Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac, the leader of France's conservative opposition.

During the Willoch-Mitterrand talks, the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area was raised. Mitterrand said that he takes a generally positive view of the principles of nuclear-free zones but thinks that it is completely unrealistic in today's Europe and would only help to increase the Eastern bloc's relative strength.

In the economic field, the two sides said there was now an urgent need for better cooperation between the countries to facilitate a move out of the enduring economic crisis, and they also touched on the subject of trade between the two countries.

Norway expressed its concern at the trends it sees toward French protectionism, with, for example, the plans for the declaration country of origin on goods from outside the EEC. France stressed that such arrangements had been designed to dealwith countries like Japan, and not with small exporting nations like Norway. Prime Minister Willoch pointed out how unfortunate it would be if regulations designed for major exporters like Japan were also to hit Norway. Mauroy ther made a general, but noncommittal, declaration promising to look into the problems this would create for Norwegian exporters.

POLICE ARREST 'IMPORTANT' ETA LEADERS 6 NOV

NC061811 Paris AFP in English 1806 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] Bayonne, France, Nov 6 (AFP) -- Two important leaders of the ETA-M, the military wing of the Basque ETA separatist movement, were arrested today along with two other people in Saint-Jean-de-Luz in southwest France, an authoritative source said.

Police shot at the car of Peio Antxola Larranaga, alias "Peio el Viejo", when he tried to escape by running down a uniformed policeman, the source said, adding that Mr Larranaga, who is allegedly in charge of the ETA-M propaganda arm, was captured unharmed.

ETA-M leader Carlos Ibargurren, allegedly in charge of the finances of the movement and collecting a "revolutionary tax" from certain Spanish Basque companies, was also taken into custody by police.

The identity of the other two people arrested has not been revealed.

Several "very compromising" documents seized by the police might lead to further arrests, the source said.

MINISTER JOBERT ON TRADE RELATIONS WITH JAPAN

NC071930 Paris AFP in English 1910 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, Nov 7 (AFP) -- Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert told Japan today that France is prepared to buy Japanese video recorders if Japan buys Airbus aircraft and French helicopters.

Mr Jobert said that to "re-establish as quickly as possible the equilibrium indispensable to our exchanges, we must show our resolution not to acept any unequal treaty, any fraudulent manoeuvre nor any freedom of exchange which is in fact only a laissez-faire for the strongest."

Mr Jobert, who was addressing a meeting of his movement for democrats party, insisted that "we must show our firm resolution to buy video recorders on condition that our Airbuses and our helicopters are bought."

The minister was responsible for introducing a new customs clearing house in remote Poitiers, central France, for imported video recorders, which prompted the wrath of Japanese manufacturers and charges of protectionism from the European Common Market. The center is expected to add four per cent to the retail cost of the vcrs and add a week to delivery dates.

At the same time a 67 dollar annual licence fee is to be paid on vcrs from January 1.

Mr Jobert also defended France's stance on demanding that documents on imported products be written in French, which has also been raised at the European Common Market headquarters, in Brussels.

"There is in Brussels a commission which would like to forget that there is in France a culture, a language -- this is why we would like to see "Europe" revised -- especially when it is unreasonable," he said.

OUTRAGE GROWS OVER ARGENTINA 'MISSING', P-2 LINK

AU061515 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Excerpts] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 6 -- The case of the three hundred Italian nationals and people of Italian origin who disappeared in Argentina in the mid and late 1970's is fast becoming a cause celebre in Italy with broadening developments in Parliament, in Foreign Ministry quarters and in the judiciary.

Foreign Affairs Undersecretaries Raffaele Costa and Roberto Palleschi met Friday with members of the families of these missing persons while a Christian Democrat M.P. urged the sending of a parliamentary delegation to Buenos Aires and Assistant State Prosecutor Antonio Marini, in charge of the judiciary probe into the matter, told reporters that, "the investigation is just being started up".

Premier Giovanni Spadolini, on official visit to the United States, yesterday asked the United Nations secretary general, Javier Perez de Cuellar, in New York to recommend the intervention of the competent UN agencies, beginning with the UN Human Rights Commission headquartered in Geneva.

The members of some of these missing Italians' families, in their meeting with the two undersecretaries yesterday, asked the Rome government to seek recourse through the application of two fundamental tenets in Argentine law: habeas corpus, a writ guaranteeing a court appearance for a person in custody, and recurso de amparo, a broader writ safeguarding constitutional rights.

These family members also urged the government to name the Italian Embassy in Buenos Aires as the Italian community's legal representative for proceedings underway in the country to determine the fate of the missing persons.

In another development yesterday, Christian Democrat M.P. Alberto Garocchio told a press conference organized here by the Argentine anti-fascist committee against repression that a parliamentary delegation should be dispatched to the South American country and called for the full application in Italy of the constitutional right to asylum for Argentine exiles.

The M.P. also declared that the case of the missing Italians should be taken up by the parliamentary commission investigating the outlawed Propaganda Two [P-2] Masonic Lodge, the alleged occult power center led by Venerable Master Licio Gelli who is now in jail in Geneva awaiting the outcome of hearings on an Italian extradition request.

The secret lodge headed by the influential businessman ignited the scandal in the spring of 1981 which led to the fall of the Rome government of Christian Democrat Premier Arnaldo Forlani.

Among the names of nearly one thousand prominent figures in Italian public and private circles was that of General Suarez Mason, a ranking member of the Buenos Aires junta. Gelli, when he fled the country in early 1981, was an economic councillor at the Argentine Embassy in Rome and maintained extensive business interests in the country until the time of his capture in Switzerland in mid-September.

SPADOLINI ENDS U.S. TRIP, FACES DOMESTIC ISSUES

AU080917 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 8 -- Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini may be expected to have a sobering homecoming here today after his first official visit to the United States. Although the trip was an apparent ego-booster, Spadolini will need a lot more than the compliments he got for his leadership in the United States to get him through the political troubles he faces at home.

As early as this afternoon, he will be chairing a meeting of his warring economic ministers and the floor leaders of the five parties in his coalition for what many believe will be a desperate effort to keep the floundering government arrangement on its feet.

Spadolini, who wound up his visit to the United States in Los Angeles on Sunday, nonetheless voiced pride in the "particularly good reputation Italy is enjoying right now in the United States" in a televised interview from the U.S. According to the government leader, the reputation stemmed from the "brilliant" police operation in Padua last January which freed U.S. General James Lee Dozier from Red Brigades kidnappers.

Italy's rating with the United States was also enhanced, he indicated, by its peace-keeping efforts in Lebanon and the Sinai, where Italian troops are taking part in international patrol forces. Even the Rome government's anti-crisis polices, which may well become its demise were given a satisfactory rating in the United States, Spadolini insisted.

Spadolini said the U.S. banking establishment, a delegation of which he met in New York, had considerable confidence in Italian industries.

On the U.S. European controversy over the trans-Siberian gasline, the Italian Government leader voiced the hope that both sides come to terms soon on a comprehensive agreement about how to deal, trade-wise, with the Soviet Union.

The Italian leader wound up his stay in the U.S. with a visit to the McDonnel Douglas Corporation, which has just received a billion dollar order for thirty DC 9/10's from his government.

He toured the Long Beach plants of the American aeronautics giant, viewing production processes for three-engine DC 10's and the two-engine DC 9's Italy just bought.

Meeting with company executives, Spadolini discussed the achievements of Italian industry in building parts for planes similar to the DC 9, especially the manufacture of fusilages and stabilizers. Before setting out for his home-bound voyage via London, Spadolini met with Los Angeles' most influential industrialists and financiers.

At home today, Spadolini will need all of his mediation talent to patch up the public quarrel that erupted during his absence between his two chief economic policy makers, Treasury Minister Nino Andreatta (Christian Democrat) and Finance Minister Rino Formica (Socialist).

The quarrel over economic and financial policy not without political overtones, has irritated the public and many political leaders as well. Social Democrat Party (PSDI) Party Secretary Pietro Longo, for example, yesterday voiced "alarm" about "the useless polemics that continually discredit the government and make no valid contribution to solving the real problems the country is facing".

Sick and tired of the debate, many sources, including prominent members of Spadolini's own Republican Party have indicated that the government was no longer capable of governing the country, much less offering a solution to growing unemployment and rising inflation.

The other headache Spadolini faces at home is the crashing showdown over labor costs and contract renewals between organized labor and management.

Rank-and-file workers in Italy are currently voting on a union proposal to scale down the wage-indexation system by ten percent. The outcome of the ballot is hardly sure, and workers in many of the major factories in the north already turned down the notion of sanctioning a voluntary reduction in their wage packets. Spadolini will be meeting Wednesday with the leaders of the nation's three major labor organizations as well as with representatives of farm-workers unions, craft guilds, sales (commerce) personnel and workers in small businesses.

Formica-Andreatta Feud

AU061715 Rome ANSA in English 1545 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 6 -- Italian press comment focused today on the heightened tension within Italy's five-party governing coalition following the verbal mud-slinging exchanges between Finance Minister Rino Formica (Socialist) and Treasury Minister Nino Andreatta (Christian Democrat). In an interview which appeared in a Rome daily Friday, Formica did not spare his criticism of Andreatta's proposed wage and price freeze, saying it is "drastic" and would only increase tension in the country. The finance minister called for "soft long-term solutions" to overcome the economic crisis.

Andreatta replied today with an article in the Christian Democrat Party mouthpiece "IL POPOLO" saying Formica's call for a "great concordat" to determine how the burden should be shared by Italian citizens to narrow the state's enormous deficit, is "fantapolitics" rpt "fantapolitics."

Rome's "LA REPUBBLICA" carried a headline today saying "The Majority Is Adrift" and said that after the exchange of insults between Andreatta and Formica there is need for a great deal of patience to pull together a majority which "seems to have lost every reason to be cohesive".

Milan's conservative daily "IL GIORNALE" said that in Parliament few believe the government will make it to the end of the year and there is already speculation on what line-up will follow the five-way coalition headed by Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini.

Rome's "PAESE SERA" said that the government "is on the threshold of a crisis" and when Spadolini returns to Italy from his visit to the United States he will find his majority has vanished and his ministers have already begun the election campaign for their respective parties.

Commenting on the Andreatta-Formica diatribe, "IL MANIFESTO" said that such an intense level, even linguistically, had never been reached before. They are two too many, the paper added, "the best thing for the country would be for both of them to step down".

Turin's "LA STAMPA" was very harsh: "When we all know how serious is the situation which Formica and Andreatta supervise and we are forced to witness a below-the-belt debate...the reaction of public opinion is the worst possible -- despairing disappointment".

Talks With UN Head

LD052030 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Prime Minister Spadolini and Foreign Minister Colombo met the United Nations secretary general. Polemics on the Siberian gas pipeline, however, continue. Here is a dispatch by our correspondent in New York, Empedo Clemazia.

The meeting focused on the Lebanese question and noted the fact that the desired presence of the United Nations force in Lebanon is encountering political difficulties, which for the time being cannot be overcome. Perez de Cuellar, Spadolini and Colombo discussed the ways and means of strengthening the present Italian-French-U.S. contingent in Beirut. Our prime minister also informed the UN secretary general of Italy's condemnation of the dramatic confirmation by Argentina of the deaths of hundreds of citizens made to disappear by the totalitarian governments that have held power in Buenos Aires.

While the talks were being held at the United Nations, the trade problem between Europe and the United States returned with its political overtones. News arrived from Paris of the statements made by President Mitterrand, who affirmed France's rejection of a link between the revoking of U.S. sanctions and the joint economic policy of the Atlantic allies toward the Soviet Union.

This appeared to be a rejection of the position expressed in Washington by Spadolini two days ago, according to which an agreement was near between Europe and the United States which would result in the unilateral revoking of the sanctions imposed by the Reagan administration. But both Spadolini and Colombo immediately denied that there were new obstacles on the path to the solution of the problem. In particular, our foreign minister made three points clear.

First, Italy moves in step with the European countries, because we do not have a dispute between Italy and the United States, but a dispute between Europe and the United States.

Second, Italy wants to replace the logic of unilateral sanctions with the logic of a united commercial policy of the allies toward the Soviet Union, and for that reason meetings are being held among the allies.

Third, when the agreement is reached, Italy is sure that the sanctions will be revoked unilaterally by the United States.

FOREIGN MINISTER COLOMBO COMMENTS ON U.S. TALKS

AU061530 Rome ANSA in English 1505 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, November 6 -- Newspaper accounts of Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini's talks with United States President Ronald Reagan focused too much on the issue of economic sanctions, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo said here on his return from the United States.

Colombo told newsmen that the talks covered a wide range of international issues; East-West relations, Euro-American relations, nuclear and conventional disarmament talks, the Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and the situation in the Middle East and Central America.

"As for economic sanctions... the talks concerned an effort to draft a strategy towards the Eastern bloc countries not through unilateral actions by the United States but with the consensus of all the allies," the foreign minister said.

Asked to comment on the problem "desaparecidos" in Argentina and the upcoming parliamentary debate on the issue, Colombo said "everything was done by the government and Foreign Ministry, with a sense of responsibility and in difficult conditions." He added that he is grateful for the questions tabled in Parliament and hopes the debate will take place as soon as possible.

COMMUNIST PARTY SECRETARY CARRILLO RESIGNS

PA061314 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1304 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] Madrid, 6 Nov (EFE) -- Santiago Carrillo, secretary general of the Spanish Communist Party, today presented his "irrevocable" resignation, which was accepted by the party's Executive Committee. EFE has learned from reliable sources that the committee has accepted the nomination of Gerardo Iglesias, leader of the Communist Party in Asturias, in northern Spain, as the new secretary general.

Carrillo Comments

PA061932 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1842 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] Madrid, 6 Nov (EFE) -- Santiago Carrillo, who today resigned as leader of the Spanish communist Party (PCE), justified his decision with his desire to facilitate the solution of the party's internal crisis. Carrillo denounced foreign pressures "that have infiltrated some sectors of the party."

"I feel more at ease than ever," Carrillo said before announcing that "I am going to work to help the party overcome this crisis." He explained that "this time, and in view of the seriousness of the situation within the party, I have considered it best to take another more modest position within the executive sector."

According to Carrillo, his resignation was based on the need for a debate that may serve to strengthen the PCE and "Eurocommunism" -- which in his opinion will not be abandoned -- and not a debate between "Santiago Carrillo, no; Santiago Carrillo, yes." "Had the elections results not been so negative," he said, "and had there not been a need to reorganize the party, had personal interests not become an obstacle, I would still be secretary general."

Carrillo considered it "obvious that there was a campaign against me on the part of the right; against me, a man of the civil war" as well as another against former centrist President Adolfo Suarez "for being the man they considered a traitor."

Carrillo, who will not resign his seat in the Chamber of Deputies, recommended that there be no more resignations. He refused to participate in the PCE directive organizations because his presence "would be an obstacle to the new secretary general."

"I have proposed the name of Gerardo Iglesias for the secretary general post because he is the party leader who best applied the accords of the tenth congress and who came out best in the elections," Carrillo noted.

Iglesias Elected Leader

LD072126 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Excerpt] A short time ago the Central Committee of the Spanish Communist Party [PCE] elected Gerardo Iglesias secretary general of the PCE to replace Santiago Carrillo, who submitted his resignation yesterday. After the vote, Gerardo Iglesias held a press conference, which was attended by our colleague (Maria Jose Sanchez Lerchundi):

It is now definite and official. The PCE Central Committee has approved the candidacy of Gerardo Iglesias for the post of secretary general of the party. Gerardo Iglesias thereby becomes the successor to Santiago Carrillo. The meeting of the Central Committee ended shortly after 2000. It culminated with the vote by the 85 members present. The result of the vote was as follows: 64 yes votes, 3 no votes, 15 abstentions and 3 blank votes.

In reality there were two votes: One to approve the appointment of the secretary general and another to approve the document submitted by the Executive Committee and the amendments that have been made to it. On this second vote the result was as follows: 70 in favor, against and 11 abstentions.

The new secretary general's press conference has just ended. Among other things, he said that he has no personal plans and that above all he wants to put the decisions of the PCE's Tenth Congress into practice. He also said: I have no interest in knowing who cast the votes against. I respect all votes. In addition, those who left may return. The secretary general was referring here to all those who have left the PCE in recent times. They may return, he said, as of course they could return before. It is not just because I am here, but natural as far as I am concerned that the doors are wide open to all.

At another point he said: I shall use all my efforts to defend a Eurocommunist concept of the party, and that involves critically -- very critically -- judging other countries' concept of communism -- that of the USSR, for instance.

GRAPO ANNOUNCES TEMPORARY TRUCE WITH GOVERNMENT

PA062353 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2318 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] Madrid, 6 Nov (EFE) -- The Antifascist Resistance Groups of October 1 (GRAPO) terrorist organization has announced a "temporary truce" in its criminal activities and has promised its definitive dissolution if the future Spanish Socialist government agrees to certain demands.

A curcular that the so-called GRAPO sent to several media announced the temporary suspension of the terrorist activities of that organization which, though broken up several times by the police, has always reorganized.

The GRAPO, connected with the outlawed "Reconstituted Communist Party" that began terrorist actions in 1975 shortly before Gen Francisco Franco died, notes that its "truce" will end if there is an escalation against the armed bands or "if the people's demands are not heeded."

GRAPO, which is responsible for assassinations, kidnappings and other crimes, claimed credit during the recent election campaign for more than 20 explosions in various parts of the nation. Some of its principal ideologists and leaders are currently in prison.

POPE CONTINUES VISIT, SEES FRANCO FAMILY

AU050832 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Madrid November 5 -- Police in Seville and Granada have stepped up security measures for today's visit by Pope John Paul II after Thursday's fatal terrorist attack against General Victor Lago Roman in Madrid. The pope learned of the attack in Toledo on the fifth day of his ten-day visit to Spain and said "violence is always anti-Christian".

Police authorities in the two Andalusian cities fear that the attack against the general will trigger violent reactions in the country and alter the schedule of the papal visit. The pope left Madrid early Thursday for Guadalupe, a small town in the Estremadura 170 kilometers west of the capital, and site of one the most famous sanctuaries in Spain.

Later the pope flew by helicopter to Toledo, south of Madrid, where he celebrated mass and denounced terrorism and prayed for its latest victim. The pope personally offered communion to the widow of Spanish dictator Francisco Franco and her daughter. Afterwards, he flew north to Segovia to pray on the tomb of St. John of the Cross.

Message to Basques

AU062030 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Excerpts] (ANSA) -- Loyola, November 6 -- Pope John Paul II pleaded with young Basques today not to fall into the trap of violence, speaking "with the voice of [one] who has personally suffered from violence".

The church leader started the seventh day of his visit to Spain this morning travelling from Madrid to the Basque province of Narrara in the midst of exceptional security measures following the assassination in Madrid Thursday of General Victor Lago Roman by Basque separatists.

He took a two-hour flight to Loyola, the birthplace of Saint Ignatius, the Spanish soldier and priest who, with Francisco Xavier, founded the Society of Jesus in 1540.

The Polish-born pope visited the home where St. Ignatius was born and then celebrated an open-air mass in the field behind the basilica named after the founder of the Jesuit order.

He recited part of the mass in Basque and extolled the "Christian, human and cultural" values of the people living in the three Basque provinces in northern Spain on the Bay of Biscay.

When the mass was over, the pope moved on to Javier, in Avarra, 106 kilometers away where Francisco Xavier was born.

Solidarity Message

[Excerpts] (ANSA) -- Madrid, November 9 -- Pope John Paul II goes east today to Valencia after defying deadly rainstorms and fog to bring his message of "solidarity" to the labor-strife ridden industrial region of Catalonia on Sunday.

The Polish-born pope, whose historic visit to Spain draws to an end tomorrow, spent a wet day at Montserrat, a mountain town situated about one thousand meters above aea-level.

The 62 year-old pope went from Montserrat to Barcelona by car and, after reciting the angelus prayer and taking a rest, he went to the 1929 world fair grounds for an appearance before workers and businessmen.

The leader of the world's 780 million Catholics advocated "solidarity" as the key to settling labor tension in his remarks to the workers of Spain's most industrialized city.

The pope also insisted on the priority of "man" over material considerations and the importance of giving labor a "subjective dimension" that honored workers' dignity.

THATCHER DISAPPOINTED BY U.S. FALKLANDS VOTE

LD051840 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1809 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Excerpt] Britain will not be talking with Argentina yet over the Falklands, despite the United Nations resolution.

The government's attitude was made clear in reactions today from the prime minister and Foreign Secretary Mr Francis Pym.

Meanwhile, in Argentina, President Bignone's regime rubbed its hands in satisfaction.

In Paris, where she had just finished her summit meeting with President Mitterrand, Mrs Thatcher declared: "The vote will make no difference to our attitude."

She also called the U.S. action in voting for the resolution -- sponsored by Argentina and calling for negotiations over Falklands sovereignty -- "incomprehensible and disappointing."

Mr Pym, also in Paris, branded the resolution as a "sham and a charade" and joined Mrs Thatcher in telling the world: "It is not possible for us to go back to the negotiating table."

Major-General Sir Jeremy Moore, British land forces commander in the Falklands war, gave his reaction after handing out awards to newsmen who covered the conflict. He described the UN move as "offensive."

The government's stand was backed by Labour's shadow Foreign Secretary Mr Denis Healty, who considered the UN vote a "very distinct rebuff" to the UK.

He agreed it was "not realistic" for Britain to start talks with Argentina now, although he did not regard the American decision as a betrayal. But SDP spokesman and former Foreign Secretary Dr David Owen accused Mrs Thatcher of over-reacting to the UN events.

At her press conference with President Mitterrand, Mrs Thatcher said memories of the Falklands war were still "too fresh" to think about negotiations with Argentina. "I don't see the vote as a defeat for Britain in any way," she added. "The vote will make no difference to our attitude." She reassured the Falklands inhabitants: "We have no doubt about the question of sovereignty. The Falklands islanders are British and wish to stay British."

The prime minister emphasised how the French decision to abstain in the UN vote had "set a particularly good atmosphere" for the two days of talks. And she remarked pointedly of the U.S. action: "I thought it was incomprehensible and disappointing. We have always tried to be staunch and true friends of the U.S."

Mr Pym denounced the UN 90-12 vote, with 52 abstentions, on BBC Radio 4. "I mounted an exercise with all our friends around the world to say: "Look, this is a sham and a charade and the position is as I have described it," he said. "They (Argentina) are not prepared to renounce the unlawful use of force. The Argentines got so frightened that they were going to lose that they had to trim their resolution and table a new one only a few days ago."

The foreign secretary described the Argentine resolution as "bogus." All they are really thinking about is how they can acquire the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands, he said. With the Argentines playing their hand as they are, it is not possible for us to go back to the negotiating table." He looked forward to the day when they would change their attitude, "perhaps in a year or two."

Mr Pym took satisfaction from the fact that all EEC countries apart from Greece had abstained.

U.S. COORDINATOR CHAPMAN ARRIVES 7 NOV

Role Assessed

NC080948 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 8 Nov 82 p 10

[Excerpts] Mr Chapman, the new special coordinator on the Cyprus issue at the U.S. State Department who arrived in Cyprus, today begins briefing contacts -- as they have been described -- with the government, the Turkish Cypriot leadership, interlocutors and with Mr Gobbi, the special UN Secretary General's representative in Cyprus.

According to assessments by diplomatic circles, the United States intends Mr Chapman to play the role of Habib in the Cyprus Issue at the appropriate time.

These assessments are based on the fact that, according to the State Department's statement on his appointment, Mr Chapman was given a special mandate to "support" the intercommunal talks and to be in close cooperation with both sides and the United Nations in order to ascertain how the United States can help toward a solution of the Cyprus issue. These circles say that the role given to Mr Chapman reflects the U.S. administration's intentions to put in motion certain other procedures to promote U.S. goals in the Cyprus issue.

[Text] The Democratic Party youth today held a Pan-Cypriot conference in Nicosia which was addressed by Mr Kiprianou, chairman of the party and president of the republic.

In his speech, President Kiprianou stressed that we will continue and intensify our efforts in every direction in the international arena until Turkey is compelled to abandon its unlawful designs against Cyprus.

Mr Kiprianou praised the alignment of democratic Greece which, he stressed, we highly appreciate. He added that we will continue the struggle until vindication, without selling out our rights and with tracing the fate of missing persons as the most important issue.

Mr Kiprianou further said his visit to the Soviet Union was very useful, constructive and substantive. He also criticized all those who, because of the preelection period, are trying to undermine even our efforts in the international arena and give interpretations similar to those given by the Turks. He stressed: We have not become the tool of anybody, neither of the West nor of the East, and we will continue our nonaligned policy.

He said that President Kiprianou's visit to the Soviet Union was a new landmark in the further development of Cypriot-Soviet relations.

He also said that the Soviet Union is in favor of the withdrawal of all foreign troops and the abolition of foreign military bases in Cyprus. He further said that the Soviet Union, within its powers, contributes to the just settlement of the Cyprus problem, which he described as an open wound that poisons the Cypriot people's life.

AKEL SATISFIED WITH KIPRIANOU'S USSR VISIT

NC062005 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] In a statement, AKEL's Central Committee expresses deep satisfaction with the results of President Kiprianou's visit to and his talks in the Soviet Union. The statement says that these results, and particularly the joint communique, most categorically reaffirm that the Soviet Union remains an unselfish and decisive supporter of the Cypriot people in their difficult struggle. Furthermore, the joint communique's statement on a solution of the Cyprus issue based on UN Resolution 3212 clearly shows the Soviet Union's intention and determination to play a more active role in promoting a solution to the Cyprus issue.

The statement further adds that the frequent reference to President Kiprianou as president or leader of the Cypriot state completely dissolves the malevolent impressions that foreign and internal enemies had tried to create about President Kiprianou's visit to the Soviet Union by promoting the allegation that the visit was downgraded.

[Text] We cannot afford to stand accused of failing to abide by what we preach. In this column we cannot preach calm, prudence and the realistic facing of affairs by others while we fail to do likewise.

We cannot possibly call on our entire political leadership to be careful in handling the Cyprus problem, to let national interests guide its actions, to look at the problems of our struggle from the national point of view and not from the point of view of ideological or partisan interests, while we do otherwise.

We will examine the joint Cyprus-Soviet communique with regard to the Cyprus problem guided by our national interests. Definitely, we would prefer the communique to refer by name to the Turkish occupation of a part of Cyprus and also to condemn by name the Turkish invasion. It particularly fails to do so. It condemns in general all foreign military or other interference in Cyprus.

What interpretation should be given to the failure to name the Turkish invasion and the Turkish troops occupying part of Cyprus? There is one interpretation: Soviet interests in general do not allow such a thing. If the United States does not overlook the factor called Turkey, why should the Soviet Union overlook it when it has a common border with Turkey -- Turkey with which we have accounts to settle.

We would definitely prefer to see the Soviet leadership condemn Turkey and its occupation troops by name. However, since this is not the case, we are not allowed to adopt a purely negative attitude toward the Soviet positions on the Cyprus problem. We must assess whatever positive element is in it, and undoubtedly it contains many positive elements. If nothing else, it contains the element of averting plans against us. The way in which the political climate around the Cyprus problem is developing -- the Soviet positions and the positions of other countries from the socialist and capitalist world and the nonaligned -- it follows that, under the present circumstances, it is not easy for Turkey to carry out its expansionist plans against us.

We must not underestimate the special emphasis which the Soviet leadership puts on the implementation of UN Resolution 3212 on the Cyprus problem. This is the resolution which was approved at the beginning of the contemporary Cypriot tragedy, which was also approved by Turkey and which asks for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Cypriot territories.

This is not the first time it has been said -- even by our official quarters -- that Ankara's goal is the complete occupation of Cyprus. This is not the first time that in their statements, both Denktas and other Turkish leaders have hinted that this is their goal. It would be impossible to prevent this goal by repulsing a Turkish military attack solely by means of our own powers. It is our duty to create, through political and diplomatic means, the suitable atmosphere that would avert conditions for the implementation of the Turkish plans. We have no doubt that the Soviet positions toward the Cyprus problem -- as well as the positions of other countries -- constitute a strong factor that averts the implementation of the Turkish plans; they constitute an important shield.

VENIAMIN TO VISIT ATHENS ON DEFENSE ISSUES 9 NOV

NC080930 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 8 Nov 82 p 1

[Text] Minister of Interior and Defense Veniamin will go to Athens on Tuesday for very important contacts, as they have been described. He will stay for about 3 days.

Mr Veniamin will hold talks with Deputy National Defense Minister Dhrosoyiannis and high-ranking staff officers of the Armed Forces on matters specifically pertaining to Cyprus' defense and security.

Most probably, within this framework, he will also meet Prime Minister and National Defense Minister Papandreou after completing his talks with the general staff.

Mr Veniamin's contacts will take place at a time of increased Turkish threats against Cyprus and acquire particular importance in this context. It is considered certain that the outcome of these talks will still further strengthen Cyprus' defense shielding for which renewed efforts are being made with positive results.

According to authoritative information, Mr Veniamin will give an extensive briefing in Athens on both our defense situation as well as new facts that have become known in Nicosia on the latest Turkish preparations.

INTERLOCUTOR STRESSES LACK OF PROGRESS IN TALKS

NC061008 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 6 Nov 82 p 10

[Text] In an interview yesterday, Mavrommatis, the representative of the Greek Cypriot side at the intercommunal talks, stated that if there is the political will to make the necessary decisions, then it will be possible to achieve progress in the intercommunal dialogue.

The work accomplished to date, he said, was sufficiently useful, because the differences between the two sides have become clear. During the process of the talks, he added, it is both possible to present thoughts as well as to overcome difficulties and to bridge them.

Mavrommatis, however, underlined that so far absolutely no progress has been achieved in the dialogue. The basic differences, he said, continue to exist, with the two sides adhering to their original positions.

In reference to the continuation of the intercommunal dialogue next Tuesday [9 November], Mavrommatis explained that this is the same cycle of talks during which there will be specific discussion of the territorial issue and certain aspects of the constitutional issue.

The Greek Cypriot interlocutor also said that it is expected that there will be a continuation of the effort to speed up the process by holding two meetings a week as agreed upon last June during the meeting between President Kiprianou and the UN secretary general.

Atakol Denies Allegations

TA071729 Ankara ANATOLIA in French 1525 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Lefkosa [Nicosia] 7 Nov (AA) -- Turkish Cypriot Foreign Minister Kenan Atakol has denied Greek Cypriot allegations that no progress has been made in the intercommunal talks. He also described as "pure fantasy" the allegation that Turkey would carry out a military operation in Cyprus in order to force a solution of the Aegean problem on Greece.

Mr Atakol recalled the latest report published by the UN secretary general on the issue of Cyprus where the latter points out that important progress has been made in the intercommunal talks. Mr Atakol added that there was no reason to be pessimistic about the future of these negotiations. He also described as "sufficient" the efforts being made by the United Nations regarding the issue.

In an exclusive interview with ANATOLIA, Mr Atakol also stressed that there were certain unresolved problems between the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and the EEC.

RIZOSPASTIS CITES PAPANDREOU REMARKS ON BASES

NC051743 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 5 Nov 82 p 1

[From RIZOSPASTIS correspondent L. Petsini]

[Excerpt] Bucharest -- Prime Minister Papandreou has officially confirmed that the Greek-U.S. talks on the bases, which began on 27 October in Athens, are aimed at retaining the bases. This arises from an answer to a question at the press conference which Papandreou gave in Bucharest yesterday at the end of his official 3-day visit to Romania. At the same time, Mr Papandreou made an effort to blunt the adverse effect that the retention of the bases will have on public opinion by promising in general and indefinite terms that when an agreement is reached -- he did not say when -- "there will be a specific time, which we are negotiating, which will mark the end, withdrawal, removal of the bases."

From the report it is clear that the government, in contrast to its policy statement where it explicitly said the negotiations will deal solely with the issue of the removal of the bases, has pushed the abolition of the bases to the indefinite future, which of course will constitute the subject of other negotiations after an agreement is reached and signed at the end of the present talks.

In order to justify the retention of the bases of death, Papandreou used the baseless rationale that "the United States is a major superpower and Greece a small country." Mr Papandreou also very clearly made it understood that the removal of the bases is impossible as long as the Greek-Turkish dispute and their "delicate relations" between Greece and NATO exist.

More on Romania Trip

NC051704 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 5 Nov 82 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] Romanian President N. Ceausescu assured Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou that Turkey agrees to the creation of a nuclear-free Balkan zone. This was revealed by the prime minister to Greek press representatives who accompanied him on his return to Athens from Bucharest.

Speaking to the representatives of the Greek press on board the aircraft, Papandreou replied to the following question:

Question: Is there any change in Turkey's position toward a nuclear-free Balkan zone?

Answer: Naturally I am in no position to make a direct statement, because I have had no contact. The president of Romania, however, did have a contact with Evren and assured me that there will be no problem. He is going to visit Ankara early in the new year, and the issue will then advance to the practical stage. I can accept no responsibility but, in any case, this is what Ceausescu told me. If, in reality, we do have Turkish participation in this, it will have very positive repercussions in general upon the area.

Question: When Evren passed through Bucharest he hinted that there could possibly be, if not a message per se, at least some "words" addressed to Ceausescu which he would like to have passed on to you. Did something like this happen?

Answer: No. It did take place earlier when [Romanian Foreign Minister] Andrei passed through Athens, and it had to do with the Cyprus issue. In my view it was a rather positive message, but I cannot elaborate.

A protocol on development of economic, industrial and technical-scientific cooperation between Greece and Romania was also signed during Papandreou's official visit.

The protocol provides that the two sides will support, through suitable measures, cooperation between economic organizations and concerns of the two countries in various sectors such as the chemical and petrochemical industry; telecommunications; road, rail, sea and air transportation; composite industrial projects; mechanical and other equipment; mining and exploitation of natural resources; agriculture; light industry and the food industry, as well as in other sectors of mutual interest.

Cooperation was also resolved in the sector of thermoelectric and hydroelectric powerplants. To accelerate cooperation in these sectors, a Greek delegation of experts will visit appropriate services in Romania as well as existing installations while the Romanian side will make available to Greece all the necessary information and facts necessary in order to make decisions and conclude agreements.

The two sides agreed to strengthen their cooperation in the telecommunications and transportation sectors. Specifically, Greece and Romania will proceed, within the shortest possible time, to the necessary actions in order to formulate their final decisions on cooperation in the electric transportation sector, on installation of signals and controls on a specific section of the Greek railways system and on certain additional projects to improve the railway system's substructure in Greece.

SPOKESMAN ON CANCELLATION OF NATO EXERCISE

NC061507 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 6 Nov 82

["Text" of government spokesman's 6 November statement]

[Text] As announced on 27 October 1982 by NATO Supreme Headquarters, an interallied exercise under the codename Apex Express 82 was to be held from 10 November to 5 December 1982 in northern Greece. In addition to Greek forces, the Allied NATO mobile force consisting of infantry and air force units of Italy, West Germany, Belgium, the United States and the United Kingdom was also to participate in this exercise, which was purely of a defensive nature.

During the last stages of planning the exercise, serious problems appeared because the allied authorities at Naples did not agree to a proposal by the Greek authorities to use Limnos [Island] as the target of a practice attack by air force units. Moreover, they did not justify their refusal. This stand by the NATO military authorities could lead to the creation of a precedent that would prove detrimental to the country's legal interests and, in a final analysis, to the security of its borders.

Following this, the Greek Government cancelled the exercise and informed the allied authorities. This morning, the Foreign Ministry briefed in detail the ambassadors of the five countries which have forces in the interallied NATO mobile force on the reasons for cancelling the exercise. The same was also done by Admiral Deyiannis, chief of the National Defense general staff, to these countries' military attaches.

Middle East

The two ministers "agreed that a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Middle East question can only be achieved through the withdrawal of Israel from all occupied Arab territories to its pre-1967 borders, self-determination for the Palestinian people, including their right to form an independent state, and the creation of conditions allowing all countries in the area to live within secure and recognized borders. ROESCH FAVORS COMPLIANCE WITH MISSILE BAN

AU081336 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 8 Nov 82 p 2

[Text] Commenting on the state treaty stipulation which bans missiles, Defense Minister Roesch declared in Salzburg on Sunday that he did not see any possibility of getting around this ban. Roesch, who was addressing the National Congress of the Officers Society, even declared that a one-sided Austrian attitude regarding this question would run the risk of the country's losing its sovereignty.

INTERIOR MINISTRY DENIES IIASA ESPIONAGE RUMORS

AU081338 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 6-7 Nov 82 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Text] Washington/Vienna -- There are new espionage rumors around the International Institute for Applied System Analysis [IIASA] in Laxenburg near Vienna, which this time concern computer technology: In a CIA report published in the U.S. periodical, PARADE magazine, it has been asserted that without the knowledge of its management, the international research center has become an espionage instrument of the Soviet Union. This has been denied at the Interior Ministry in Vienna: "These are merely old rumors -- we have not heard anything to this effect." At any rate, it was added, the Austrian security authorities are not conducting any investigation at present.

CSSR LIMITS LUMBER; CSSR, GDR GRAIN DEALS

AU081305 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 6 Nov 82 p 7

[Summary] Slovak Forestry Minister Margetin promised Austrian Minister of Agriculture Haiden that the CSSR would impose self-restrictions on low-priced lumber exports to Austria. In the future, these exports are to be limited to 393,000 cubic meters annually, the export volume in 1981. In the first 9 months of this year, CSSR lumber exports to Austria amounted to 319,000 cubic meters compared with 270,000 cubic meters during the corresponding period of 1981. Haiden welcomed the CSSR promise, stating that for Austria, a deliberalization of lumber imports is out of the question; consequently, it would have had no choice but to launch antidumping proceedings.

According to Minister Haiden, negotiations on Austrian grain exports are currently underway with a number of countries. Agreement has already been reached with the CSSR on the exportation of 70,000 tons of corn, and with the GDR on the exportation of 100,000 tons of barley. Of the 440,000 tons of Austrian bread grain available for export this year, 40,000 tons will go to Africa as development aid, while the remainder is still subject to negotiations. The USSR, the CSSR, the GDR, Yugoslavia and Poland have shown interest in buying this Austrian grain.

[Text] The spokesman for the Ministry of External Affairs confirmed at noon today that the Belgian charge d'affaires in Beirut was received by the Lebanese foreign minister, who conveyed to him a request from his government to Belgium to send troops to Lebanon as part of the multinational peace force.

Austria has also been requested to send troops by the Lebanese Government.

NETHERLANDS

CP MAY BREAK TIES WITH POLISH, CZECH PARTIES

NC081744 Paris AFP in English 1731 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Amsterdam, Nov 8 (AFP) -- The Netherlands Communist Party is thinking of breaking off relations with the Polish and Czechoslovak parties and of establishing contact with democratic opposition movements in Poland and Czechoslovakia, the party announced here today in the program for its congress, scheduled for later this month.

The opposition movements in question are the banned Polish independent trade union federation Solidarity and the Czechoslovak Charter 77 human rights movement.

The program also states that the existence of two enemy blocs, one led by the United States and the other by the Soviet Union, has led to a growing 'surplus of killing materials" on both sides.

The Soviet Union, the program says, "is therefore not automatically and naturally an ally in the fight against armaments and the danger of war, but must be judged on its merits."

The Dutch party, which holds three seats out of 150 in Parliament, won 1.8 percent of the vote in last September's elections.

TURKISH DEV-SOL MILITANTS ARRESTED IN AMSTERDAM

NC051329 Paris AFP in English 1310 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Amsterdam, Nov 5 (AFP) -- Police here today arrested some 10 militants belonging to the Turkish "Dev-Sol" (revolutionary left) who were occupying the Turkish Information Office and holding the center's director and a female employee hostage.

The group had held the office for several hours before being arrested and taken to police headquarters.

The Dev-Sol members said their action aimed to protest against "the Constitution of the American-influenced fascist junta" in Turkey.

In another protest against the Constitution -- which will be submitted to a referendum on Sunday -- Dev-Sol militants occupied the Turkish Consulate in Cologne, West Germany, Wednesday.

They gradually released some 70 hostages before surrendering to the police yesterday.

TRUDEAU FAVORS U.S. TESTING MISSILES IN CANADA

LD071950 Montreal International Service in English 1900 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] The Canadian prime minister, Pierre Trudeau, has defended the deployment of American nuclear missiles as a way of forcing the Soviet Union to conduct meaningful talks on disarmament. Mr Trudeau says he does not like the medium-range missiles which are scheduled to be deployed in Western Europe as part of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's defence arrangements and he says he hopes their actual deployment will never have to take place. But he says the planned use of Pershing and cruise missiles may be the only way of persuading the Soviet Union to reduce the missiles it has targetted against the West. For that reason, the prime minister said he favored allowing the United States to test unarmed cruise missiles in Canada.

Mr Trudeau was speaking to the annual convention of Canada's governing Liberal Party. Convention delegates later voted against the resolution calling for a ban on the cruise testing.

CHANCELLOR KOHL ON DOMESTIC, FOREIGN POLICIES

DW081029 Bonn DIE WELT in German 5 Nov 82 p 4

[Interview with Chancellor Helmut Kohl by editors Herbert Kremp and Manfred Schell; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] WELT: Mr Chancellor, After the time of Konrad Adenauer, no government chief ever has started his work under conditions as difficult as they presently are. There is every indication of a storm. Are you depressed by this beginning?

Kohl: No, I admit that the task is very difficult. It is a great challenge. However, when I look back at the 4 weeks following my election as chancellor, I must add that I have experienced an exceptional amount of personal encouragement and preparedness to support me.

WELT: Mr Chancellor, the trade unions are staging large-scale demonstrations against the economic and fiscal policy course. Ugly words are being used and there is talk of reintroducing the law of the fist. The DGB is refusing to revive the cooperative action. [konzertierte aktion]. How are you reacting to these attacks?

Kohl: Very calmly. I believe that on 6 March some 40-50 percent of the DGB members will vote for the CDU/CSU. That is my initial answer to these militant noises. Second, I can't take some of these statements seriously. Those who are now talking about the law of the fist are obviously living in another country. Either that or they are so far from reality in their executive suites that they have no idea what people are really thinking at their work benches and in factories.

WELT: Mr Chancellor, the particulars of the situation are as follows: continuously increasing unemployment, enormous state deficits and no indications of economic growth. How are you planning to face the citizens on 6 March with such burdens? Will you go to the factories and talk with the people there personally?

Kohl: I don't intend to carry politics into the factories. I said this before when I was opposition leader. I don't want to keep the people from working by presenting election propaganda. I support pursuing our line, that is, telling our fellow citizens without polemics and unnecessary dramatization, but also without window dressing, about the condition of the FRG. We will tell them what we will do to get the economy going and stimulate the desire to perform. In view of the German economy's weak financial resources, the Federal Government, Laender and communities cannot continue to run up debts. They must stay away from the capital markets as much as possible.

WELT: We have repeatedly discussed the 6 March elections. Among others, leading SPD politicians doubt that there will be new elections at all. The federal president's reservations have also been reported. What are your views?

Kohl: I said in the government statement that elections will be held on 6 March. Therefore, there is no need for me to stress this daily. On the other hand, I am under the impression that those who have put up the "we want elections now" posters would be rather happy if they found someone who could relieve them of the emotional stress regarding the 6 March elections. I won't be the one: I will do everything to keep my word.

WELT: Mr Chancellor, various opinion poll statistics show that the FDP seems to be recovering amazingly quickly. How do you explains this?

Kohl: There is a firm place for the FDP in the FRG. Certain formations arose among the German political parties after the war. There are some citizens who don't want to vote for one of the big parties -- neither the CDU/CSU nor the SPD -- because they have a firm idea regarding the term liberal.

WELT: Mr Chancellor, there will be a great deal of talk in Berlin [at the FDP congress] -- about the liberal profile. An important man in the FDP, Mr Ronneburger, has stated that the FDP's entering the Federal Government after the new elections "can only be justified if the Ministry of Interior is not occupied by the coalition partner."

Kohl: I think Mr Ronneburger should first attend the party congress like all other delegates. Then we should continue the work we have planned until 6 March. After that it will be up to the voters. Only then can we talk about the apportionment of positions. I don't like to talk about this 5 months before the elections.

WELT: The SPD has nominated Hans-Jochen Vogel as its candidate for chancellor. What do you think of your opponent?

Kohl: In contrast to my predecessor, I never ridicule my opponent. The SPD is a party with a great tradition. It has now appointed Hans-Jochen Vogel; he is their candidate. We will compete before the voters; we will be tough with regard to the matters at hand, but reasonable with regard to the form.

WELT: In a week you will be in Washington on an official visit and will meet with President Reagan. Your predecessor repeatedly spoke of specific German interests to be maintained with regard to Washington. What is your purpose in going to the United States?

Kohl: I am going to the United States as a demonstration of German-American friendship and partnership. I intentionally say it that way because I feel that for much too long we have let ourselves be kept from demonstrating for something because we have become accustomed to always demonstrating against something. I also want to express support for the mutual ideas which unite those of us in Europe with the United States. NATO is not simply a military partnership, but a partnership of ideas between people with the same constitutional order, the same views regarding human and civil rights, and with the same concepts of the moral norms which mold our personal and public lives.

It is of special importance for the Germans that the FRG wouldn't exist in its present form without the protection and commitment of the United States. Even the room we are now sitting in would not exist. The peace and freedom we have enjoyed for 35 years are indissoluably linked with the preparedness of the Americans to guarantee these blessings. Partnership and friendship mean that we should talk with each other and not about each other, and that one side will not give orders to the other. In the German-American relationship, no one gives or receives orders. I seek a clarifying, frank and constructive discussion. In this way, we will be able to deal with well-understood points of interest.

For instance, it is in our interests at the moment for our American friends to do everything to ensure the success of the Geneva negotiations on medium-range missiles. The Americans can feel most assured in this area because a government is in office in the FRG for which both parts of NATO's dual decision are valid -- the part on negotiations, and the preparedness to deploy modern American medium-range weapons if the desired success is not achieved at the negotiations. This opinion is supported by a broad majority of the people, and I believe that this is a good position.

A special German-American relationship has developed from the history of the past 35 years. By this I mean Berlin. The freedom of Berlin is shaped by the signatory powers, and among these powers the Americans are the decisive signatory power -- and this doesn't imply anything against the French and the British.

WELT: Mr Chancellor, I would like to ask you about a topical matter. Are you prepared to agree to stricter credit regulations in trade with the East if sanctions against firms involved in the natural gas-pipeline deal are lifted in return?

Kohl: I am really not the originator of the natural gas-pipeline business. Everybody knows that I have criticized this deal in many Bundestag speeches. The supply contracts, however, exist -- contracts about which the Americans have definitely been ambivalent for a long time. We are reliable partners with regard to all contracts. Reliability means that we will keep our word and that a commitment must be adhered to. That is my opinion.

I will now work as hard as I can on a logical clarification of the question as to how we should act jointly as regards trade with the East -- for instance, with regard to the transfer of modern technology to East Europe. To do this we must first reach agreement within NATO and the European Community that we will not outmaneuver and torpedo each other out of national egotism. On this point the Americans are certainly right in their criticism. The Americans themselves, however, must be the first to set a good example. If you look at the history of deliveries by the Caterpillar firm in this connection, many questions remain open.

WELT: In the past, the United States has rather frequently spoken about NATO's international responsibility. This was an attempt to make the Europeans politically engage themselves in other regions, such as the Gulf area. Is Bonn ready to assume any political responsibility in this regard?

Kohl: This must be defined very carefully because it may open the door to inciting people. The Atlantic pact has clearly defined its georgraphical area. I in no way want to change anything here. However, it is quite a different matter as to whether we shouldn't arrive at a division of labor with the United States in the face of worldwide conflicts in the ideological, economic and weapons fields. As a world power, America assumes international responsibility, including those spheres in which we are directly interested. Just think of the fact that roughly 60 percent of the crude oil consumed in the Federal Republic has to pass through the Arab Gulf. If -- to continue with this example -- the Americans are engaged in the Gulf region in our interests as well, then the question which the United States raises regarding what additional contributions we, the European NATO partners, are willing to make to lessen the burden on the United States is, after all, justified.

WELT: In your government statement you spoke of the "active securing of peace." Does this term replace that of detente?

Kohl: The term detente has many meanings. Almost anything can be understood under it. I do not want to discuss the various interpretations now. The FRG must contribute to securing peace. In this respect, I want to mention the responsibility we have to assume with regard to the Third World and in the struggle against hunger. Although our financial situation is limited for the time being, we must always do what we are capable of.

WELT: You speak of security partnership only with a view to our U.S. ally. Your predecessor included Moscow. How do you define relations with the East and how do you intend to handle treaty policy?

Kohl: The Soviet Union is our most powerful neighbor. The fate of Germany has been influenced to a decisive degree by the existence of Russia and in the past 60 years by the existence of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union exercises decisive authority over more than 17 million of our fellow countrymen. Together with all democratic parties, we know that war and force are not a political means for us. We realized this long before Willy Brandt and others. We have always spoken of peaceful reunification. Since I am not willing to abandon the idea of the German nation, I know that the Soviet Union will be a partner on this road. It is only reasonable to maintain, if possible, good relations with the Soviet Union. However, this must not be at the price of allowing the Soviet Union to have a say in what we have to do. As free citizens of a free country, we want to determine the road to follow in the future for ourselves.

The Soviet Union is simultaneously the other big world power; it is pursuing a determined an unrestrained armament policy. The experiences of Afghanistan, martial law in Poland and the violation of pledges and agreements made there all make it apparent to everyone how important it is for the Federal Republic to have a solid place in the alliance with the West. However, because we are predictable partners -- and I state this on behalf of the government I head -- we are also good partners. In the first few weeks I have been in office, the only signals I have received from Moscow indicate that under no circumstances will "things become rusty" between the FRG and the Soviet Union, as the Social Democrats have tried to make the people believe in election campaigns. Not at all!

This is why a word must be said about the treaties with the East. Every one knows that we would not have concluded the treaties in this manner. However, the treaties are there. I also favor filling them with life within the framework of what is possible. In everything we are saying about relations with the Soviet Union, we take note of the relations between both parts of Germany and of the people's desire for a German nation. This is an important reason for not only normalizing relations, but for also maintaining, if possible, good relations.

WELT: When will you travel to Moscow to explain to the Soviet Government the Federal Government's Ostpolitik?

Kohl: I still have a number of important things to do this year and then the election campaign begins. However, I am certainly prepared to travel to Moscow soon after 6 March under the appropriate conditions. As you know, I have toured the Soviet Union and have also taken every opportunity to confer with Soviet representatives in Bonn. This also includes meetings with Leonid Brezhnev.

WELT: At the time your predecessor traveled to Werbellin, the Polish crisis broke out. Now it appears to be heading toward a new climax. Does this crisis have any repercussions on your position toward the "GDR" and the Soviet Union?

KOHL: Everything that happens in Poland touches us in Germany. I have told every visitor from the Soviet Union that Poland is a test area for many things happening in Europe and the world. What is happening in Poland causes seismographic shocks -- in Rome as well as in Washington and in Belgrade as well as in Stockholm. Those responsible in Eastern Europe must understand that if anyone who has signed the CSCE Final Act strikes at an ancient and proud European people by imposing martial law in Poland, then this will have profound repercussions. The Europe prior to martial law in Poland and the Europe after the imposition of martial law and the ban on the trade union are not the same.

COMMENTATOR SEES KOHL ELECTION DATE HESITATION

DW091203 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 9 Nov 82 p 4

[Commentary signed Dr.: "Kohl Hesitates"]

[Text] Chancellor Helmut Kohl doesn't seem to be in any particular hurry to make preparations for early elections on 6 March. The CDU chairman has not informed his Federal Executive Board about when he wants to discuss procedures with the chairmen of the other parties, or what his ideas are about the procedures. The CDU leadership actually ought to be wondering about this because according to the agenda, they were to have made preparations on Monday for the elections and they don't even yet know how to pursue them. The CDU/CSU deputies are in a similar situation because they must withdraw their confidence from the chancellor in order for elections to take place next spring.

Kohl probably feels limited with regard to his activities, since he knows that the federal president is holding preparatory talks with the chairmen of the parties, because he is obviously unwilling to blindly implement what the government coalition wants him to. Despite his statements that elections will be held on 6 March, it can be inferred from Kohl's hesitation that he is not really very strongly pursuing what he pretends to be. However, the chairmen of the parties certainly share the chancellor's apathy. Hans-Dietrich Genscher has to be afraid that the FDP will be pulverized on 6 March, and how SPD chancellor candidate Hans-Jochen Vogel intends to implement his annoucement that he will govern with a minority cabinet remains a secret.

An absolute CDU/SCU majority is more a nightmare than a temptation for Kohl, because with an absolute majority he would have to reckon with Franz-Josef Strauss. Thus, he is the last person to be delighted by the thought of elections. The only difference is that Kohl has accepted the date, albeit reluctanly. Now it is exclusively up to him to look for a way out. It won't be of much help to him to point out that the grand coalition promised to change the election law but never implemented it because the SPD would'nt cooperate in the end.

FDP'S GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON PARTY POLICY

DW090147 Hamburg Norddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0710 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Interview with Hans-Dietrich Genscher, foreign minister and FDP chairman, by unidentified reporter; date and place not given -- live or recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] Are you trembling with fear over the continuation of the coalition?

[Answer] Certainly not. The FDP has stressed that it wants to continue implementing its liberal policy on the basis of the 1980 election program, and that is decisive.

[Question] Elections are to take place in Schleswig-Holstein on 13 March. The land executive board there strongly supports a coalition with the SPD. Won't that put the party's internal strength to the test?

[Answer] We have always let land organizations make their own coalition decisions in their own laender, and that will continue to be the case. In any event, the national party congress has made it very clear that we support the decision in favor of cooperating with the CDU/SCU in the Federal Government; that we want to continue this cooperation until 6 March and that we intend to continue it beyond 6 March, the Bundestag election date, under the prerequisite that the voters will give us the necessary majority and that we can then agree on a joint program. The voters now know what they are facing: Namely, that cooperation with the CDU will not last a matter of just a few months.

[Question] There will be a congress in Bochum on 28 November. Aren't you afraid that a cornerstone will be laid there which will make it impossible for the Free Democrats to achieve 5 percent of the vote, which is necessary to take seats in representative bodies?

[Answer] No, not at all. Naturally, there won't be a split in the FDP. The party congress has made that clear.

[Question] On 20 November, a land party congress will take place in Schleswig-Holstein. If it supports a coalition with the SPD in Kiel, would you condemn or tolerate it?

[Answer] The answer to one of your earlier questions applied here. We have always respected the decisions of land organizations. We have never maintained that the Federal Government and the land organizations should take similar approaches.

GENSCHER CITED ON TOPICS FOR CSCE IN MADRID

LD091110 Hamburg DPA in German 1013 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Cologne, 9 Nov (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has stressed that the Federal Government attributes major importance to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE). Speaking in a Deutschlandfunk interview today, Genscher examined the CSCE follow-up meeting in Madrid, which resumed today, in connection with other conferences such as the disarmament talks between the United States and the USSR in Geneva and a possible European disarmament conference. "Such a conference should adopt trust-building measures." A prerequisite "for successful arms control and disarmament talks," however, is the lessening of mistrust. These are "things which are, after all, not one-sidely in the interests of the Soviet Union, but which are just as much in our own interest."

According to Genscher, the CSCE process could "only be successful if both sides expect to gain something from it." In addition, the Madrid conference is a suitable forum for the Federal Government to also explain its views on events in the Warsaw Pact, for example, "also on events in the Polish People's Republic." Breaking off the Madrid conference would not end martial law in Poland. It therefore makes sense to use the CSCE process "to work toward an improvement, using the means at our disposal."

MINISTER BARZEL SPEAKS ON RELATIONS WITH GDR

LD051500 Hamburg DPA in German 1250 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Oberhausen, 5 Nov (DPA) -- Minister for Inner-German Relations Rainer Barzel (CDU) has stressed the government's readiness to hold talks and make agreements with the GDR. On Friday at the land party conference of the Rhineland CDU in Oberhausen we also called upon the government in East Berlin, as its responsibility toward Germany, to allow more freedom of movement for people, information and opinions.

Barzel, who described inner-German policy as his "heart's concern," stressed on behalf of the government, the validity of the treaties. The government is using these treaties as instruments of an active peace policy. "We are looking for dialogue, not polemics; results, not headlines." Without going into details, he indirectly leveled an accuastion against the GDR that realities in "some areas" are not in accord with the agreements, and that there are agreements which have not yet been fulfilled.

The minister also called upon the GDR to create human, dignified, peaceful and flexible conditions on the borders which are free from harassment, arbitrariness, fear and death. "If we have to put up with the reality of two states in Germany independent of each other and with the border between freedom and communism right through the middle of Germany, then this must be a border of good neighbors."

MITTERRAND, THATCHER CITED ON JOINT SUMMIT

PM090945 Paris LE MONDE in French 7-8 Nov 82 p 3

[Unattributed report: "Statements by Mr Mitterrand and Mrs Thatcher Reveal Different Concepts of the Community"]

[Text] The Franco-British summit took place in "a cordial atmosphere," Mr Mitterrand siad after his first talks with British Prime Minister Thatcher on Friday, 5 November. "Despite the difficulty which some of the questions discussed pose for us, we succeeded in placing them in an overall framework and including them in a political definition" which will lead to "greater harmonization of our approaches."

"That harmony has already been acquired in many of the most important spheres," the president of the republic added, mentioning "the life of the world [la vie du monde]," East-West and North-South relations, "our two countries' attitudes toward the United States," and, especially, "the problems posed by the sanctions on the gas pipeline," the IMF, the Law of the Sea, customs problems (GATT), "creeping protectionism," and so forth.

With regard to Community problems, Mr Mitterrand said: "There is one particular problem which can be picked out, which is causing difficulty and has not been solved and which will continue to be discussed, and that is the problem of the contribution (the British contribution to the European budget)." He recalled that since 1980, "different last-ditch agreements have been reached," but that "agreement has never been reached on the principles." Disagreement remains on "the amount and duration" of the payments at stake and even "on the way in which they are conceived." "Is it a question of a new institution, a new rule, which France rejects? Is it a temporary situation which has to be passed through?"

In order to "strengthen the nature" of Franco-British relations, meetings will take place each month either in London or Paris between the two governments' representatives, and they will make it possible to assess the way in which matters are developing and "the degree of our rapprochements on the existing disputes." "The frank nature of our discussions," the president of the republic concluded, "is bound to help achieve progress in our relations."

Mrs Thatcher welcomed the fact that France did not support the Argentine position on the Falklands at the United Nations. She pointed out that thorny problems like fishing are on the point of beingsettled within the Community (all that is required is Denmark's agreement). The British contribution problem has also been settled for 1982, the prime minister asserted.

Returning to that point when answering questions, Mr Mitterrand stressed that the budget refund granted to Britain "should not be turned into a principle," nor "be permanently established in intracommunity relations," and that the size of the refund should be gradually reduced. "It is that which divides us," he said. As regards the solution for 1982 alone, Mr Mitterrand did not entirely confirm Mr Thatcher's version. France had expressed "reservations" on the agreement reached on that subject at the last Community Council meeting. Judging from Mr Mitterrand's remarks, that reservation had not been completely dissolved on Friday (but apparently only the financial details still remain to be worked out).

Mrs Thatcher, for her part, stressed the fact that a long-term solution must be found because the present situation is "completely unfair for Britain," because Community resources are inadequate and will be even more so after the expansion to include Spain and Portugal. We must find a solution "quickly," she added, and one which lasts "as long as the problem."

With regard to the Falklands, Mrs Thatcher stated in particular: "We have no doubt about our sovereignty (over the archipelago -- LE MONDE note) and the Falklanders are British and wish to remain so." The U.S. vote (against Britain) at the United Nations was, Mrs Thatcher said, "incomprehensible and disappointing."

Mr Mitterrand, for his part, stressed that "France's considerations are not those of Britain." "Calling on the parties involved to negotiate" and giving the UN general secretary a good-offices mission (as does the Latin American resolution for which France did not vote) "is in keeping with our thinking," the president stressed. On the other hand, the drafting of the document proposed "prejudged the conclusion" and "placed Britain in the position of being a guilty party." That is why France did not vote for the resolution, Mr Mitterrand said. With regard to talks among Western countries on East-West trade relations, Mr Mitterrand said that France was "of course" prepared "to discuss conditions to be imposed on trade with the Eastern bloc countries, especially in the technological spheres." On the other hand, he added, if it is a question of "new concessions" to enable the United States to lift sanctions, "that cannot be the subject of negotiations." In addition, Mr Mitterrand wondered whether those "sanctions" are not, in fact, imposed by the Americans "on their allies." "Britain and France," he said, "are suffering from an unjust, legally highly dubious and politically unacceptable unilateral U.S. decision. If we can come to an arrangement, so much the better, but not in return for concessions in other spheres.... That is out of the question as far as France is concerned."

EGYPT'S 'ALI, PLO DELEGATION HOLD MEETING

NC071006 Cairo MENA in Arabic 0935 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, 7 Nov (MENA) -- Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali met at a late hour last night in the residence of the Egyptian ambassador in Paris with a high-level Palestinian delegation sent by the Palestinian leadership in Tunisia. The delegation arrived in the French capital a few hours after Kamal Hasan 'Ali and immediately went to meet with him.

MENA has learned that the meeting, which lasted about 2 hours, dealt with the results of the meetings of the PLO Executive Committee in Tunis and with the Palestinian position on the current activities and efforts to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the Palestinian issue.

The MENA correspondent in Paris says that it is clear that the PLO leadership is giving great attention to the forthcoming meeting in Washington between the Egyptian and U.S. sides, and hence the Palestinian interest in meeting with the Egyptian foreign minister to convey to him the detailed and specific Palestinian position.

Sources close to the Egyptian delegation accompanying Foreign Minister 'Ali have stated that the meeting was extremely useful and constructive. 'Ali was briefed on the position of the Palestinian leadership on the settlement [of the Palestinian issue] and on the Arab efforts for Arab reunification.

'Ali arrived in the French capital last night from Ankara. He will leave Paris at noon today for Canada and the United States.

HERNU JOINS NAVY CONSTRUCTION CONTROVERSY

PM080937 Paris LE MONDE in French 5 Nov 82 p 10

[Unattributed report: "The Navy Will Not Replace Its Warships on a One for One Basis"]

[Text] "The Navy's most important mission is still its participation in the strategic nuclear force," Defense Minister Charles Hernu said in Brest on Wednesday 3 November while presiding over the ceremony to mark the departure of the helicopter carrier Jeanne d'Arc on its annual world cruise with trainee naval officers on board. "Of course, such a definite choice in a difficult economic situation has made it necessary to set priorities and new timetables for the rest of the forces," the minister added.

"The Navy, the polyvalent and mobile section of the armed forces, will therefore have to develop its capability for taking part in rapid assistance and peace-keeping operations in the world. That does not mean that the facilities now in service must be reproduced on a one for one and ton for ton basis, Mr. Hernu said, recalling that by 1983 France will have three missile-launching submarines permanently at sea.

The defense minister's intention clearly was to reply to the National Assembly Defense Commission's observations on the 1983 draft naval budget. According to Mr Jacques Huyghues des Etages, PS deputy for Nievre and commission spokesman, "the Navy has inadequate funds for new additions to the fleet and for maintenance," and according to Mr Yves Lancien, RPR deputy for Paris, the Navy ordered barely 7,000 tons of ships in 1982, whereas between 12,000 and 13,000 tons should be ordered every year.

EXPLOITATION OF ANTARCTICA TO BE INCREASED

NC061121 Paris AFP in English 1006 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, Nov 6 (AFP) -- The economic exploitation of uninhabited French possessions in the extreme southern hemisphere and Antarctica "is just beginning," Secretary of Overseas Possessions Henri Emmanuelli said here.

In a speech yesterday to the newly appointed Consultative Council for the Territories, Mr Emmanuelli said budgetary allocations for Kerguelen, Saint Paul, Amsterdam, and the Crozet Islands and Antarctica's Tsrye Adelie rose from 65 million francs (13 million dollars) in 1980 to an estimated 92 million francs (13 million dollars) in 1983. [all figures as received]

He added that France planned to renegotiate "in good conditions" the Antarctic treaty in 1989 for the 1.8 million square kilometer [words indistinct] square mile, maritime economic zone lying south of the southern hemisphere's 37th parallel.

These frigid territories and their surrounding waters account for 17 percent of France's overseas possessions but are inhabited permanently only by about 180 scientists from France, Japan, the Soviet Union, Australia and West Germany doing basic geological and geographical research.

The southern territories also serve as support bases for France's aerospace program, notably the Ariane satellite project.

At present, the major exploitable economic resource is the rich fishing beds, which have the potential to produce 30,000 tons yearly. France has begun negotiations with the Soviet Union to provide crewmen to Soviet fishing vessels plying the waters.

Mr Emmanuelli said France planned to build a landing strip on Terre Adelie within the next five years and to assign a French military vessel to patrol the region.

TURKISH AIRLINE OCCUPIED BY ANTI-ANKARA TURKS

NC091110 Paris AFP in English 1102 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, Nov 9 (AFP) -- A group of about seven young Turkish opponents of the Turkish Government, faces concealed behind red scarves, today occupied the offices of the "Turkish air lines" in central Paris.

They locked themselves in the offices, together with the staff, and shouted anti-Ankara slogans and painted others on the windows.

The demonstrators, who did not seem to be armed, occupied the offices just before 11 a.m. (1000 GMT)

The Turkish commando at 11,30 a.m. demanded the freeing of nine of their comrades who were arrested in Cologne last week after occupying the Turkish consulate there and seizing hostages.

Their demand was made in a written message to French police which was slid under the front door of the airline office.

It also said that they looked on Sunday's referendum on Turkey's new Constitution as "illegal."

Police are trying to negotiate an end to the occupation of the airline office.

SPADOLINI ON U.S. VISIT, MINISTERIAL FEUDING

AU081950 Rome ANSA in English 1940 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 8 -- Premier Giovanni Spadolini declared that the high level of confidence in Italy he noted during his week-long visit to the United States "must force us to assess our domestic situation with extreme severity" in a statement made on his return to Rome this afternoon, and to the battle raging between his economics ministers which threatens to topple his five-party coalition.

The premier described his talks in Washington with President Ronald Reagan and members of the administration and other consultations held during his tour as "totally satisfactory on the level of friendship and on that of political and economic cooperation". Spadolini said that Italy did not ask American officials for help but for "confidence in the holding power of our economic system and in its recovery. This confidence in us was reaffirmed", he added.

Referring to the bitter infighting between Socialist Finance Minister Rino Formica and the Christian Democrat Treasury Minister Beniamino Andreatta, which exploded during his absence from Rome, the premier remarked, "political polemics within the coalition have been aggravated by inadmissable personal overtones. The principle of teamwork and ministerial coresponsibility has been violated". In tough words, Spadolini went on to warn, "Whoever delays or complicates the economic-financial maneuver, of priority interest for the government, will take on grave responsibility and will have to accept the consequences before the country." He said he would confer with President Sandro Pertini Wednesday on the position to take in dealing with the two ministers.

Press Comments on Problems

AU051823 Rome ANSA in English 1519 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) - Rome, November 5 -- Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini will get back from his current visit to the United States to face a whole range of problems, including bickering among his government partners, Italian press comment indicated this morning.

In an interview with the Rome daily, LA REPUBBLICA, the Socialist Finance Minister Rino Formica said, for example, that if Italy was a more serious country, elections would be held before Christmas. But the Milan daily, CORRIERE DELLA SERA, seemed inclined to think all was not lost, claiming that relations between the Socialists and the Christian Democrats "seem less tense" on the eve of the parliamentary budget debate.

Another problem which may cause Spadolini a headache is the showdown between management and labor on labor costs, and the ongoing vote among rank-and-file workers on union proposals to reduce the efficacy of Italy's wage indexation systems.

Most newspapers pointed out that the voting is not going as the union leaders hoped. The Communist Party daily, L'UNITA pointed to the "absenteeism at the assemblies and the vote".

The Rome daily, IL TEMPO, summed up the situation as follows: "One has the impression that, behind an apparently calm facade created by repeated statements from the leaders of the majority parties of full support for the Spadolini government in this particularly difficult moment, the conviction is ripening that it is very difficult, in present conditions, to overcome the hurdles facing the executive successfully".

And, in what may be an even more significant comment, the Christian Democrat mouthpiece, IL POPOLO, said that "disputes among the ministers" do not "help to find the right road." Also noting that the lack of the "necessary homogeneity for effective government action is now clear to all".

PAPER HITS INACTION ON ARGENTINA DISAPPEARANCES

PM051701 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 3 Nov 82 pp 1, 2

[Editorial: "An Unacceptable Silence"]

[Excerpt] "The government has approached the Argentine authorities numerous times about the problem of the missing Italians." That is what the prime minister's and foreign minister's offices say. But what approaches? What kind of approaches? Previously it seemed that the Italian Government and our embassy in Buenos Aires had besieged the junta with protests from time to time, but now the truth is beginning to emerge more clearly. It can be deduced from the Foreign Ministry communique: "Each case reported to the Italian authorities has formed the subject of a separate approach to the competent Argentine authorities. That can be seen in the archives of the Italian Embassy in Buenos Aires where copes of the relevant diplomatic notes are kept."

Leaving aside diplomatic language, that vague wording purely and simply means that the Italian Government has done absolutely nothing. It has merely asked the "competent Argentine authorities" for news of the missing people from time to time. And they would have politely replied that they have investigated the matter but that those missing people were not the Buenos Aires government's responsibility.

That is all. There has been no protest note, no threat to break off diplomatic relations, as has been done by other countries, especially by France, for much more minor cases. Aside from Pertini's solidarity with the Mothers of the Plaza De Mayo [organization of relatives of missing persons in Argentine], the Italian Government has not lifted a finger and, indeed, it is only thanks to the initiative of CORRIERE DELLA SERA's correspondent that the list of Italians killed by fascist action squads encouraged by the junta was finally made known to the public.

Parliamentary questions are now pouring in. The Communists, Socialists and Christian Democrats are all asking questions. Just a few months ago those same political parties -- why not recall the fact? -- urged Spadolini to dissociate Italy from the sanctions decreed by the EEC against Argentina in the Falklands war. Italy, it was said at the time, cannot isolate the Argentine Government; Italy cannot forget that millions of fellow nationals live in that country. Communists, Socialists and with them, all the Pintors and Rossandas [journalists] of the Italian left, had no hesitation in dredging up the old slogans of the proletarian nation (Argentina) attacked by the rich imperialism (Britain). The government joined the chorus and left the European allies in the lurch.

Well, the junta that we favored during the Falklands war was the same one that has buried 20,000 Argentine citizens, plus 300 Italian citizens, in contempt of all human rights. That junta which did not receive sanctions from us was the same one from which our ambassador and foreign minister very timidly requested "information" about the missing persons, afraid of annoying it if we merely raised our voice.

The Italian Government, usually very scrupulous when attacks on freedoms take place in other parts of the world, whether in Afghanistan or in Poland, deserves recognition for it and must be encouraged to continue doing likewise. In those cases, Olympics are boycotted, advantageous gas contracts are not signed and back loans are blocked or obstructed. The Helsinki Charter is invoked.

All this is fine. Indeed, excellent. However, does the Helsinki Charter not apply in Buenos Aires too? What would have happened in our parliament and our newspapers if General Jaruzelski had had 20,000 Poles and 300 Italians slaughtered? Does this mean that the prime minister's office, the Foreign Ministry and the Chamber of Deputies have two sets of standards?

DIET SPEAKER ON DELEGATION'S USSR VISIT

LD081438 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1300 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Speaker of the Diet Johannes Virolainen said that the Finnish-Soviet interparliamentary meeting in Moscow fulfilled expectations and that the contacts will be continued in the future.

The Diet delegation led by Virolainen returned in the afternoon from its 1-week visit to the Soviet Union. An official communique on the visit will be issued on Wednesday. Speaker Virolainen said that by this means he wants to avoid possible misinterpretations. According to Virolainen, the talks conducted by the delegation mainly dealt with Finnish-Soviet interparliamentary relations. Virolainen extended an invitation to his host, Aleksey Shitikov, chairman of the Council of the Union of the USSR Supreme Soviet, to visit Finland. The delegation's trip was the first to involve the participation of all Diet groups.

SKP LEADER KAJANOJA'S 'SURPRISE' MOSCOW VISIT

PM081145 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 3 Nov 82 pp 1, 15

[Unattributed Report: "Kajanoja's Visit 'Normal Working Trip'"]

[Text] The government can sleep soundly. Finnish Communist Party [SKP] Chairman Jouko Kajanoja brought no messages back from his surprise working visit to Moscow suggesting that the Communists should leave the government -- if anyone thought that they might. Party Secretary General Jorma Hentila [the target of recent attacks in the Soviet press] can also sleep soundly in his bed. His case was not raised in Moscow either. The same is true of the problems connected with the minority and majority Communists and the third-liners. The internal problems of the SKP were not discussed, aside from a recapitulation of the present situation delivered by Kajanoja himself.

So Jouko Kajanoja will not have any special messages for the SKP Politburo, which will meet today, he assured journalists and he is very surprised at the attention his Moscow visit has attracted in Finland.

A real anticlimax. So what was discussed at this meeting that came as such a surprise that the majority of Politburo members knew nothing about it Friday [29 October] afternoon?

Well, the two fraternal parties' 2-year program of exchanges, seminars and lectures and so on, Kajanoja said. "It was a normal working visit," he said, and looked at the journalists who had turned out to meet him with his innocent blue eyes. "We agreed on it 2 or 3 weeks ago."

He did not want to say anything definite about whether the initiative for the meeting came from Finland or the Soviet Union. "Let us perhaps say that it was a joint initiative." The fact that news of the visit was not released in advance, other than in the form of a short report in Sunday's KANSAN UUTISET, was at Kajanoja's own request. He did not want to cause unnecessary controversy or speculation about the visit.

The visit was slotted in between that of the Social Democratic Party delegation and that of the parliamentary delegation led by Eduksunta Speaker Johannes Virolainen. In actual fact, Kajanoja traveled out on the same train and was spotted when he arrived to catch it.

The Social Democratic Party delegation's visit was only spoken of in general terms, Kajanoja said. The SKP's involvement in the government was not mentioned at all. Kajanoja merely briefed his Soviet comrades on the situation.

The Finnish People's Democratic League's representatives will remain in the government until the elections, he assured his audience. Without the crisis to which the devaluation -- caused by the unexpectedly hefty Swedish devaluation -- led, government participation would not have been a problem at all for the SKP.

After the budget discussion this year, we were for once completely agreed on continued government participation, Jouko Kajanoja siad.

The only concrete thing he mentioned about the negotiations or discussions in Moscow was that the next official meeting between the SKP and the CPSU will probably take place in Finland. It is now the CPSU's turn to come visiting, he said.

His discussion partners in Moscow were the well-known Boris Ponomarev, CPSU Central Committee secretary, and Vitaliy Shaposhikov, a leader of the Central Committee's International Section.

PEACE FORCE FOR LEBANON NOT TO BE INCREASED

LD081050 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Finland will not increase the strength of the UN peacekeeping forces to be sent to Lebanon. Last Saturday, the United Nations asked whether Finland could send 725 men to Lebanon instead of the 460 men agreed on earlier. The Foreign and Defense Ministries discussed the matter this morning and decided that it is not suitable to increase the number of peacekeeping troops. Foreign Minister Par Stenback said that the actual political decision to send peacekeeping troops was made by the government last week, and that this decision will not be changed. The foreign minister also pointed out that economic factors have contributed to the negative decision.

According to the foreign minister, however, it is possible to effect slight changes in the troop strength if it becomes necessary. Of the 460 Finnish peacekeepers, an advance group of 12 officers has already reached Lebanon. A second advance group of 65 men is to leave for the Middle East in a week's time, while the main body of troops will leave the beginning of December. The Finnish battalion will replace the Nepalese troops being withdrawn.

The UN enquiry concerning a possible strengthening of the Finnish troops came after Nigeria announced over the weekend that it would withdraw its own peacekeeping forces from Lebanon.

BODSTROM PRESS CONFERENCE ON 'ORIENTATION' TALKS

PM081441 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 3 Nov 82 p 15

[Unattributed report: "Foreign Minister Bodstrom: Unremarkable"]

[Text] Swedish Foreign Minister Lennart Bodstrom was immediately asked to comment on reports of NATO transports through Sweden when he took part in a press conference yesterday with his host, Finnish Foreign Minister Par Stenback, at the end of his "orientation" visit to Finland. According to Bodstrom, the reports of the transports seem "unremarkable."

Pressed on the matter, he said that he at least was prepared to have someone look into whether Swedish law could possibly put obstacles in the way of transports of this type. Bodstrom seemed to take the matter lightly. He pointed out that Sweden itself exports arms, and that these also sometimes pass through third countries before they reach thier final destination.

He also pointed out that "Norway's attitude is one of the greatest friendship" and that there is "deep peace" between Sweden and Norway. "We should not conjure up the conditions of World War II," he added by way of warning.

The rest of the press conference dealt mainly with the controversial nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area. Bodstrom was, as he himself said, at pains to point out that his round trip which he was beginning in Helsinki and which would take in all of Sweden's Nordic neighbors would not simply deal with the zone issue. The view that Sweden is about to take the initiative for a new round of talks on the issue is principally due to the phrasing given to Bodstrom's statement in an interview with Sweden's TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA news agency. Bodstrom himself pointed out that he had answered a lot of other questions in the interview, but that the interviewer had made the nuclear-free zone into a major issue.

Both Bodstrom and his Finnish host, Par Stenback, stressed that the visit was chiefly one of orientation. Bodstrom had briefed Stenback on the new Swedish Government's foreign policy line and Stenback had briefed Bodstrom on the Finnish view of several current issues. There will be more detailed discussions later.

In practice, Bodstrom's statements supported the traditional Swedish position on the zone issue: The Baltic should form part of the zone and the Nordic zone should be seen as a stage in the work toward a larger nuclear-free region. However, at the same time he seemed to expect that the nuclear-free zone issue would attract greater interest as the peace movement and awareness of the nuclear threat grow.

He particularly stressed that governments should work in harmony with popular opinion. "It is quite clear that in both Sweden and Finland a rapid expansion of support for peace work is taking place," the foreign minister said, noting further that awareness that nuclear arms could "mean the end of most things" is also growing. In the present situation when "the risk is so enormous," it is necessary to discuss and test even small steps aiming at something better.

As a result of this development, Bodstrom said that he thought that it would be difficult to hold the Nordic foreign ministers meeting next spring without discussing the nuclear-free zone. Nor is an official "No" to be expected from any party in the Nordic area, he said. The question is merely "with what intensity" the issue will be pursued in the future.

In an interview with Finnish radio news, Bodstrom said yesterday that the nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area is a "realistic and necessary goal."

It also emerged at the press conference that Finland and Sweden intend to continue exchanging information about the nuclear-free zone. The civil servants whose task it is to work on analyses of developments in the issues are to maintain contacts with each other.

At yesterday evening's press conference, Bodstrom was also asked whether it would serve any purpose if Finland and Sweden were to decide to establish a joint nuclear-free zone. He pointed out that both countries are nuclear-free already and that neither has any plans to acquire nuclear arms. The question is therefore "completely superfluous," he said -- a mini-zone already exists in practice.

In reply to a question about the Swedish call for the Baltic to form part of the Nordic nuclear-free zone, Foreign Minister Par Stenback said that Finland had never firmly committed itself to any one solution on the issue. There should be room for negotiations, first between the Nordic countries and later with the superpowers. However, the Finnish point of departure has always been that it is the Nordic countries which should comprise the nuclear-free zone.

During yesterday's talks there was detailed discussion of the major Swedish devaluation and its consequences. Foreign Trade Minister Esko Rekola and Finland Bank Director Seppo Lindblom took part on the Finnish side in the foreign ministers' talks at Koenigstedt in Vantaa.

At the evening press conference Foreign Minister Bodstrom said that he understood that Sweden's devaluation had caused irritation in the other Nordic countries. He said, however, that he had noted that this irritation had begun to die down. He was also at pains to point out that Sweden's neighbors, Finland in particular, will benefit from a Sweden which has gotten its economy on its feet again.

During his short visit to Finland, Foreign Minister Bodstrom also met Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa and President Mauno Koivisto. Bodstrom said that his talks with the president had taken the form of an assessment of the international situation. "We are both equally worried about the growing conflicts between the superpowers," he said. Koivisto did not raise the question of Sweden's devaluation.

Interview On Visit

PM081051 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 2 Nov 82 p 7

[Interview with Swedish Foreign Minister Lennart Bodstrom by Erik Appel in Stockholm -- date not given]

[Text] Stockholm -- "An indication, not a demarche," is how Sweden's new foreign minister, Lennart Bodstrom, describes his coming talks on a joint Nordic approach to the nuclear-free zone, as he begins his Nordic odyssey today with a 1-day visit to Helsinki.

He also confirmed that Sweden was never seriously trying to sink or even damage the possible submarine it was hunting in Stockholm's southern archipelago. Sweden was trying to force it to the surface, and this was an impossible task, he said.

Lennart Bodstrom was generally cautious in his statements when he received me in his offices on Gustaf Adolf Square. He is not exactly a Virolainen [former Finnish prime minister and Center Party chairman]. He therefore brings no new initiatives with him when he arrives in Helsinki today for meetings with Foreign Minister Par Stenback, Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa and President Mauno Koivisto before flying back to Sweden in the evening and continuing with visits to Norway and Denmark.

Sweden wants to use the present visits to indicate that its interest in the zone question is still alive and has perhaps even grown. Lennart Bodstrom also pointed out that the Swedish Riksdag has entrusted the government with the task of working for the nuclear-free zone together with its Nordic neighbors, so there are no new developments.

Nor do there seem to be any major changes in the Swedish Government's position after the power changeover. In the Swedish Government's view, the Baltic should, for example, be included in the zone so that no nuclear-armed vessels are permitted in this inland sea.

"It is true that the Baltic constitutes free waters, but if the coastal states forming a zone promise not to allow nuclear arms on their territory, then it is reasonable that they should also have the right to insist that no nuclear-armed vessels be allowed in the inland sea. Such a demand seems to have some justification," the foreign minister said.

Bodstrom also was not enthusiastic about a unilateral declaration by Finland and Sweden. "We are already nuclear-free in practice, we do not produce any nuclear warheads -- although we have the necessary technology -- and so the usefulness of a unilateral declaration would be minimal," he said.

On this point he should have no difficulty in persuading President Koivisto, who has also rejected the idea of a zone limited to just Sweden and Finland. There is also no mistaking Finland's interest in a nuclear-free Nordic area (Finland has the "patent" on the idea). So Bodstrom does not need to worry about any great differences of opinion in Helsinki (apart from the business about the inclusion of the Baltic, which could be sensitive). Things could be more difficult in Oslo.

But the nuclear-free zone is just a theme for discussion. Bodstrom intends, if he has the time, to go through the whole spectrum of questions of joint interest. This includes, for example, the problems of the lumber industry and the possible extension of the gas pipeline from the Soviet Union. On this latter point, the Swedish Government has not yet made up its mind, he said. The lumber industry's problems are connected with the devaluation. Lennart Bodstrom does not think that Sweden's Nordic neighbors have any reason to be annoyed with old Sweden.

There was no other course than a proper devaluation, he said. Speculation had started about a 10-percent devaluation in connection with the change of government. Money began to flow out of the country. The National Bank became worried and called for a drastic devaluation. This was decided in consultations with the government, which had not taken office at that point.

Minister Bodstrom also denies that Sweden did not consult its Nordic neighbors. The finance ministers and The National Bank chiefs were called to the much-reported meeting at Arlanda [Stockholm's international airport] the day before the announcement of the devaluation was made, he said. These were real consultations since Sweden acceded to its neighbors' requests and reduced the devaluation percentage, he pointed out (reports state that the devaluation was cut from 20 to 16 percent).

But the devaluation has nevertheless caused a certain amount of irritation (although this has decreased, Lennart Bodstrom said). The EEC is even considering whether or not to impose tariffs on exports of Swedish timber products in excess of the duty-free total, but not on Finnish exports.

Lennart Bodstrom takes this calmly. "If this is the case, then Finland has nothing to complain about," he said. "This would only be in force for a couple of months. In 1983, the situation will be a new one and then Sweden and Finland will be competing again on an equal footing." Sweden has no aspirations to become the leading nation in the Nordic area, Bodstrom also assured me. "We only want Sweden to again be a good market for its neighbors."

Minister Bodstrom confirmed that Sweden had never intended to damage, even less to sink, the submarine or submarines hunted in Stockholm's southern archipelago -- if there were any, he added cautiously. Sweden was only trying to force it to the surface, and this is something that no one has ever succeeded in doing without damaging the submarine.

Minister Bodstrom described the Swedish defense forces' measures as "civilized behavior," but the Palme government has now clearly stated that Sweden's patience could run out and that in the future foreign submarines run the risk of the Swedish Navy depth charging them directly instead of dropping them at a respectful distance. "This is a serious decision, but the responsibility rests with those who ordered the submarine into Swedish waters," he said.

He also assured me that the submarine incident had not caused any damage to confidence in Swedish security and neutrality policy. Lennart Bodstrom does not take the view that some power or powers have begun to doubt Sweden's neutrality, nor that they underestimate Sweden's bite. No such doubts have been articulated by either of the power blocs, Minister Bodstrom said.

But how are these submarine incidents to be interpreted, then? Has activity along the Swedish coasts increased, and if so, why? To these questions Minister Bodstrom gives no answer. He pointed out that a commission has been appointed to look into precisely these questions.

"Active but not threatening," is how Lennart Bodstrom described Sweden's foreign policy. It is possible that certain superpowers, such as the United States, might take a different view since Foreign Minister Bodstrom's speech to the United Nations, but Bodstrom assured me that Sweden does not want to be either a world conscience or a judge.

"We have not adopted a role which means that the superpowers need to feel that Sweden is hostile," he said. "Swedish security policy is intended in part to prevent a war or an outbreak of war in the Nordic area. However, the Nordic area is such a stable region that the likelihood of something like that is very slight. For this reason, Sweden also wants to make an active contribution to peaceful developments elsewhere in the world. A war elsewhere, even somewhere distant, could even spread to the Nordic area. That is why Sweden is prepared to arbitrate, mediate and contribute to the peaceful solution of all such conflicts," Bodstrom said. But Sweden will also have to convince a superpower like the United States of this.

GOVERNMENT WILL CONSULT STORTING ON DEPLOYMENT

PM081429 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 4 Nov 82 p 5

[Morten Malmo Report: "New Missiles Could Be 'Withdrawn'"]

[Excerpt] "According to plans, the deployment of NATO's new medium-range missiles will begin next year and be completed by 1988. Therefore, the time available for negotiations for nuclear arms reduction does not run out in 1983. If an agreement for reciprocal reductions is reached, missile systems already deployed could be withdrawn." Norwegian Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad said during Storting question time yesterday.

Sjaastad was answering a question from the Socialist Left Party's Stein Ornhoi, who asked how the government intended to present the final decision for deployment to the Storting. "In its future treatment of the matter, the government will consult the various bodies in the Storting," Sjaastad said.

"This means that the government has not committed itself to submitting the matter to the full Storting, but it is willing to consult the full Foreign Affairs Committee. However, four members of this committee can demand that the matter be discussed in the Storting. It is therefore possible that the matter could be dealt with in complete openness in the Storting. The Socialist Left Party will work for this," Ornhoi promised.

"It is obvious that the developments in this matter could become so complicated that it is impossible to say how it will finally be dealt with, apart from the fact that the Storting will be kept informed of the Geneva negotiations," Sjaastad said.

Stein Ornhoi also wanted to know whether Norway has reached agreement with the United States enabling units of the U.S. Marines to operate in Norway without nuclear arms. Defense Minister Sjaastad pointed out that the contingency stockpiling agreement between the United States and Norway has formulated in accordance with Norwegian nuclear policy and that the transport of Marine brigades from the United States will be a conventional reinforcement.

BRUNDTLAND ON DEPLOYMENT, MUTUAL DISARMAMENT

PM081003 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 29 Oct 82 p 8

[Interview With Norwegian Labor Party Chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland by Thor Viksveen -- Date, place not given]

[Text] "As Labor Party chairman I do not -- as [former party Chairman and Trade Minister] Reiulf Steen did -- want to say anything about what the party's final position on the missile affair will be."

"It is important that we are not taken by surprise by various statements by individuals in the nuclear debate, but that the question be treated with the necessary calm."

"Despite the accuracy or inaccuracy of the information about U.S. nuclear policy, it could have an effect on the Norwegian debate."

"There have been no talks with the government aimed at a compromise of any sort on the missile affair."

These were some of the views expressed by Labor Party Chairman Gro Harlam Brundtland in an interview with ARBEIDERBLADET in which she was asked to comment on the various stages of the recent missile debate.

[Question] Nonsocialist circles are claiming that there are talks going on between at present the Conservative and Labor Parties seeking a compromise on the allocation of funds for preparatory work for missile deployment. The opposition rejects the assertion that such talks are taking place. How can such misunderstandings arise?

[Answer] It is simply due to the fact that there have been contacts on an informal basis inside and outside the Storting on most current issues, and briefings given of the differing views. There have been no discussions on the missile affair.

[Question] And there isn't a compromise in the air?

[Answer] If the government does not choose a different point of departure and postpones the question of fund allocation, the Storting will be divided. The Labor Party position is clear. At the present time we should not allocate earmarked funds for the section of the infrastructure program embracing the preparatory work for missile deployment.

[Question] There are claims that the Labor Party's position on this issue has a so-called "contagious effect" on other countries. Is there a possibility that the party's position could make deployment more difficult, even though the Geneva negotiations do not produce the right results?

[Answer] Each NATO nation has both a right and a duty to engage in a running assessment of the progress of the dual decision. We cannot refrain from such an assessment because the consequences could be such and such. We have not been given the necessary information by the government to put the allocation question into a broader context. The government has not provided us with the broad information we asked for during the debate on the issue last spring.

It is also a dangerous problem when "the contagious effect" is brought in as an argument. A central assumption in this argument is that it is best to refrain from discussing the matter for fear that the outcome could be affected by a discussion.

[Question] What faith do you have in the U.S. sources which claim that the Marines will have nuclear arms with them when they come to Norway's aid in a war situation?

[Answer] [I strongly doubt that anyone at a sufficiently high level and with the necessary insight said or intended anything of the kind.] Both the contingency stockpiling agreement and our nuclear and base policy are based on the fact that the Norwegian authorities will have full control over the decisions affecting Norwegian territory. The agreement clearly states this.

[Question] Do you think that the reports, regardless of their accuracy, will set their stamp on the continued nuclear debate here in Norway?

[Answer] When there are such false claims, it is clear that they could affect the debate. This is why it should be demonstrated very clearly that it is the Norwegian authorities that have control over Norwegian base policy.

[Question] Reiulf Steen has said that he has no doubts that the Labor Party will in the end oppose deployment. Do you agree with this assessment?

[Answer] We all hope that the results will be such that the missiles will not need to be deployed. It is important that we stick to the line established in a national executive resolution last December that an assessment of the Geneva negotiations must be made at the time their results are available and there is a better overview of the situation. We all have our personal thoughts and hopes about the negotiations. As Labor Party chairman, I do not think it right to draw any conclusions now. The national executive's aim is to reach a situation in which deployment will not be necessary.

It is also important to note that a "no" to deployment today also means a "yes" to the hundreds of SS-20 missiles the Soviet Union has already deployed. We want real disarmament on both sides.

[Question] Do you feel that the many foreign and domestic demarches in the missile affair could weaken national unity on security policy?

[Answer] We cannot build national unity on silence. National understanding of a problem is based on the greatest possible insight so that the greatest number of people are put in the best possible position to make up their own minds. As long as we succeed in treating such an issue with the necessary calm and wisdom and do not allow ourselves to be surprised by statements from individuals, we are most likely to work our way toward national solutions which have the support of as many people as possible.

SWEDEN

BODSTROM ON TURKEY, POLAND, PLO, HOSTING CSCE

PM081133 Stockholm STOCKHOLMSTIDNINGEN in Swedish 2 Nov 82 p 7

[Interview with Swedish Foreign Minister Lennart Bodstrom by TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA's Sven Thiessen in Stockholm -- datenot given]

[Text] Stockholm -- "Sweden is prepared on certain conditions to host a European disarmament conference," Foreign Minister Lennart Bodstrom said.

The CSCE conference originally held in Helsinki in 1975 began a followup meeting a couple of years ago in Madrid. This meeting was adjourned this spring because of disagreements about Poland and will resume 9 November. "If the CSCE meeting in Madrid were to find that a special European disarmament conference would be of value, in my view it would not be difficult for Sweden to host such a conference," Bodstrom said.

The foreign ministers from all of Europe's neutral and nonaligned states intend to play an active role at the continuation of the CSCE meeting. The differences between East and West are considerable, but both camps have shown interest in a European disarmanent conference, and Sweden has declared itself willing to arrange such a conference in the past.

In the immediate future, Bodstrom will raise the question of a Nordic nuclear-free zone with his Nordic counterparts. An agreement on such a zone would, Sweden thinks, relax the tensions between the blocs and reduce the risk of nuclear attack.

"In Sweden there is broad agreement on a nuclear-free zone," Bodstrom said. "This was also stressed in the government declaration as well as in the speech I delivered to the United Nations. Even though the Nordic countries have chosen different solutions to their security policy problems, it would be good if we could act jointly on this question.

"Our wish is that such a zone be established as a phase in the process toward a nuclear-free Europe. In this spirit, we support the view that a nuclear-free zone should also be established along the entire border between the two power blocs.

"The major objective of Swedish foreign policy should be to assert the human rights of individuals and the right to security of individual states. Conflicts should be resolved through negotiation and possible impartial judgments, not through violence."

[Question] Can Sweden do anything to save the lives of the 50 trade unionists threatened with the death penalty in Turkey?

[Answer] In the United Nations, Sweden called on the Turkish military dictatorship and received the response that the country was not a real military dictatorship; it intended to mend its ways soon and it was only a matter of time before general elections were held. We will have to see if the international statements directed against Turkey have reduced the country's prestige enough to expedite the business of creating democratic rights for its citizens. In the case of Turkey, we also intend to demand that the country respect human rights through the Council of Europe.

[Question] Do you think that the Polish military junta made a mistake when it banned Solidarity?

[Answer] Definitely. Even Poland has approved the ILO conventions that the trade union movement should be independent of the state. Then of course it is a mistake to dissolve Solidarity and then want to create a new trade union movement. It is claimed that it will be free, but it cannot win the same respect as a trade union movement created by the people themselves.

[Question] Can we expect Swedish contributions to the North-South dialogue on a leveling-out between rich and poor states?

[Answer] Yes. This leveling-out must continue, and the main problem is to get the developing countries industrialized. They cannot in the long term simply be raw materials bases for goods which are made in the industrialized nations and then sent back to the developing countries. However, the industrialization must benefit the developing countries' peoples and not one-sidely benefit companies in the industrialized nations which exploit the developing countries.

[Question] Can you imagine inviting PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat to Sweden to discuss the Palestinians' future with him?

[Answer] This is something we have not discussed. When 'Arafat has been invited to various countries it is primarily an organization which has been the host. Even though we cannot give diplomatic recognition to the PLO since we only recognize states, we do see the PLO as a political force. Just as the PLO should recognize Israel and its right to exist, Israel should accept the fact that the PLO looks after the rights of the Palestinians and negotiate with the PLO.

STABLE NORDIC FOREIGN, SECURITY POLICY URGED

PM051203 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 31 Oct 82 p 2

[Editorial: "The Nordic Area and Security"]

[Text] After his guest appearance at the United Nations [Swedish Foreign Minister] Lennart Bodstrom will, like some commercial businessman -- he is a sort of trade and commerce minister for the time being -- visit not only the Nordic capitals but also EFTA and the EEC. Let us note with appreciation how quickly the foreign minister is visiting the European Community's headquarters in Brussels. This could perhaps be taken as an indication that the old Social Democratic strategy of passing up perquisites has been abandoned.

Our relationship with international trading organizations like the EEC, EFTA and GATT is extremely important, especially after the brutal devaluation. However, this must not be allowed to obscure the fact that Bodstrom has every reason to give serious thought to the Nordic situation. Sweden must be cautious about believing our neighbors will be quick to shake off the cold shower the Palme government has given them. Things have gone pretty far when even the Norwegian Storting's request to Sweden is thought not to be a brake on Nordic cooperation.

However, this is not the biggest problem. Even more serious is, of course, the increased tension and concern in our part of the world at a time when the rest of the world is asking if the Nordic balance really works or whether the tendencies toward dissolution will grind stability down.

Since World War II, Denmark's, Iceland's and Norway's membership in NATO; Swedish neutrality supported by what in the past was seen as credible defenses; and Finland's neutralist policy as shaped by the Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance Treaty with the Soviet Union, have been of crucial importance for this stability. It is in the interests of all the Nordic countries that this pattern does not break down. Every change -- for example, that the East and West probably do not have any confidence in Sweden's ability to expel uninvited guests -- reinforces the disquiet; every extension of the pattern strengthens stability. We must therefore be careful that changes -- and nothing is completely static -- do not harm what is most important: peace and detente in our part of the world.

Our new government entered office at a time when it is important that our foreign and security policy foundations are not misunderstood. However, this is not only true of Sweden, but of Finland and Norway as well. So what is happening?

It was hardly a coincidence that in the Riksdag's general debate, Olof Palme emphatically stressed that confidence in our determination and ability to preserve our neutrality must be maintained and that Swedish territory be protected from violations by all available means. One of the most important foundations for our policy is that both East and West should believe that we are able to defend our own territory. In fact this is one of the keys to Nordic security policy. Approximately a year ago, the Academy of Military Science put it in the following terms:

"Finland's status and integrity are based in part on the fact that the Soviet Union is confident the Western bloc does not have, and would not find it easy to gain access to Swedish territory. That is, Sweden is fully able to defend its neutrality with its own resources. Norwegian and Danish defenses are also dependent on the consideration that the Eastern bloc is unable to make use of Swedish territory for acts of aggression against them.

In the rest of the world the submarine incidents have eroded confidence in our ability to defend ourselves. To a certain extent, this is balanced by the determination Sweden demonstrated to defend itself. There is, for example, no reason to anticipate the report of the submarine commission. It is enough to state that many of our other endeavors, including those to do with peace and detente in Europe, could prove fruitless if confidence in us is lost.

Statements of the sort made by [Social Democratic disarmament expert] Maj-Britt Theorin the other day in SVENSKA DAGBLADET about a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area which conflicted with what the Riksdag has said, naturally lead to questions about whether important features of our security policy are being changed. The questions are of course building up most among Sweden's neighbors. Now Theorin's statement has been raised in the Riksdag. It would be just as well if the government were to repudiate her remarks and admit that they were an occupational accident by someone new to the job.

As far as Finland is concerned, it is Center Party politician and Eduskunta Speaker Johannes Virolaine's foreign policy maneuvers which have been the cause of the controversy. It is difficult to assess to what extent he has been acting on his own initiative, but it is clear that he is making use of his position as IPU chairman in a fashion which is embarrassing for President Koivisto and Foreign Minister Par Stenback.

The newness of the situation and the slight light-headedness with which the third republic -- Koivisto's in Finland -- has begun was perhaps impossible to avoid. A broader debate on foreign policy is desirable in itself. However, it is necessary that no doubt arise about who Finland's foremost voice on foreign policy is, President Koivisto. However, we cannot rule out the possibility that Virolainen is trying to torpedo this.

As far as Norway is concerned, the disintegration over security policy within the Labor Party, unfortunately seems to be continuing. The left wing, which since the party pushed through Norway's membership in NATO, has never really kept quiet, is exploiting temporary concessions and turning them into more far-reaching demands. To cap it all, Swedish knowledge is slight and its misunderstandings great, about the fundamental premises for Norwegian security policy and Norway's special position within NATO with regard to nuclear arms -- where Norway retains its sovereign right to make the decisions.

It is not good for any of the Nordic nations that the foreign and security policy stability in our part of the world is being called into question and that questions are being asked in capitals throughout the world, as to whether the Nordic pattern is undergoing a radical change.

QUESTIONS RAISED ON CIA ROLE IN ARMS TO IRA

LD081448 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1343 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Northern Ireland Secretary Mr James Prior said today he was "disappointed" at the acquittal in America of five men who admitted stock-piling weapons for the IRA. Mr Prior is planning to visit the U.S. next week and he said he wanted to inform Americans of the Provisional's real aim of their campaign of terror in Northern Ireland.

The five men were found not guilty on Friday of violating federal law after a jury accepted their claim that the CIA was behind their scheme to store guns for the IRA. One of the men cleared by the New York court was Michael Flannery, 80, a founder member of NORAID, an organisation which raises money for Irish Republicans.

Mr Prior said today in Portadown, County Armagh, where he opened an electronics factory, that the acquittal was not a victory for the IRA. The arms had been captured and the IRA did not get them. But he admitted the not guilty verdict had "disappointed" him.

He said: "It would be quite wrong to say it was a propaganda victory. They want the arms and they are not getting them. The victory would be if they were getting them." He added: "I won't be satisfied until all support for the IRA, whether in terms of arms or money, is prevented. That is the only satisfaction I want, and that is why someone like myself has to go to the States regularly to go on getting the message across."

A Conservative MP today expressed his concern at the allegations that the CIA is helping the IRA to smuggle arms. Mr Brian Mawhinney, secretary of the Conservative Backbench North Ireland Committee, said: "There is obviously great sympathy for the IRA in New York City in particular. It would seem that the legal framework is such that that sympathy could be turned into an acquittal almost, it appears, regardless of the facts of the case. Now that has got to be very worrying. If that is not true, the claim that the CIA was involved in some way has got to be investigated because that is the only other explanation."

In an interview on BBC radio's World at One programme, Mr Mawhinney said: "It is fashionable these days in the States to blame the CIA for anything that goes wrong in the world, and if you have a jury that is sympathetic to NORAID and the IRA they could latch on to this and acquit on that basis. Alternatively, there may be some truth in this. The CIA gets up to a lot of things, and its record over the years has not been one of lily-white purity. It may well be the case."

He said he was particularly concerned that because the CIA operates only outside the United States, if the organization was involved it must be involved in the UK or in Ireland.

"In other words, some of the people who are exployed by the American Embassy in London or Dublin, on the face of it if this report is to be believed, are actively working to undermine the policy of her majesty's govenment and the policy of the Dublin government. "That makes very serious implications indeed," he said. "Questions of this sort should be asked, and binding assurances should be given.

MOZAMBIQUE MILITARY DELEGATION IN LONDON

MB051657 Maputo English to Southern Africa 1800 GMT 4 Nov 82

[Text] The Mozambican military delegation visiting London is to hold discussions with the British authorities on possible military cooperation between the two countries. The Mozambique mission, headed by the defence minister, Lt Gen Alberto Chipande, has been in Britain for 3 days, and the visit is due to end this weekend.

General Chipande has already had meetings with British Defence Secretary John Nott and with senior officials of the Foreign Office. Last night he had dinner with high ranking officials of the British Armed Forces. General Chipande has also visited the British paratroop regiment and a factory outside London which manufactures military telecommunications equipment.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH ON U.S. VOTE ON FALKLANDS

PM081545 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 6 Nov 82 p 14

[Editorial: "Stirring the Teacup"]

[Text] Too much is being made by some people of the fact that the United States voted for the United Nations General Assembly resolution calling for resumption of negotiations between Britain and Argentina on Falkland Islands sovereignty. Mrs Thatcher said in Paris yesterday that she found the American vote "incomprehensible and disappointing." Disappointing it may be, but incomprehensible it was not. Mr Pym was nearer the mark when he described the UN debate and the resolution as a sham and a charade, and said it would make no difference to Britain's attitude.

The resolution, sponsored by 20 Latin American countries, had been considerably trimmed down from its original version, when its sponsors realised that that version would not receive enough support. It is advisory only. As Mrs Thatcher quite correctly said, it is not a defeat for Britain. Britain does not intend to start negotiations with Argentina on the sovereignty issue at the moment. Why then the outcry about the American vote? It is not as if Washington has not got a lot of fence-mending to do with its Latin American neighbours and fellow-members of the Organisation of American States, following President Reagan's wholehearted support moral and material, for Britain after the Argentine invasion. The UN vote was part of the fence-mending. It will be followed shortly by Mr Reagan's visits to Brazil, Colombia and Costa Rica. It is certainly in Britain's and NATO's interests that there should be good relations between North and South America.

There is a disturbing undertow of anti-Americanism apparent in some of the reactions to the United Nations vote from quarters in this country which ought to know better. Justly nationalistic feelings of pride over the outstanding performance of Britain's Armed Forces in the South Atlantic should not be allowed to create the delusion that Britain is capable of "doing anything and going anywhere entirely on her own." Britain's alliance with the United States remains the bedrock of all our defence planning. An alliance between two such mature democracies must imply readiness to accept minor differences along the way.

KIPRIANOU MEETS CHAPMAN, EXCHANGES VIEWS

NC081506 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] President Kiprianou today received Mr Christian Chapman, special coordinator on the Cyprus issue at the State Department, and briefed him on the course of the Cyprus issue and the Cyprus Government's views.

Mr Chapman stressed that the position of the U.S. Administration is to actively support the UN efforts in finding a solution to the Cyprus issue. Replying to a journalist, the U.S. official clarified that he is not carrying new proposals for initiatives to Cyprus.

Later Mr Chapman met Mr Veniamin, acting foreign minister and minister of interior and defense. In the meeting, the minister reported the Cyprus Government's positions regarding the solution of the Cyprus problem. U.S. Ambassador Ewing accompanied Mr Chapman in his meetings today. During his visit, Mr Chapman will also have contacts with Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, and with the Greek and Turkish Cypriot representatives in the intercommunal talks, Mr Mavrommatis and Mr Onan, respectively. He will also meet with Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas.

Chapman's Role Considered

NC081229 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 8 Nov 82 p 5

["Every Monday's column by Filippos Stilianou: "The Special Coordinator"]

[Text] Christian A. Chapman, who was appointed by U.S. President Ronald Reagan as special coordinator for the Cyprus issue, arrived in Cyprus yesterday to support the talks being held under UN auspices.

The fact that Chapman is visiting the island immediately after his appointment may give the impression that a fresh U.S. initiative for a solution to the Cyprus issue is in the offing. In fact, there is nothing of the sort. Chairman is carrying no U.S. plan, formula or even ideas. Had the United Nations not suggested this on-the-spot visit, he might have even followed the example of his predecessor, Mr Bartholomew, who confined himself to his State Department office and did not come to Cyprus at all. The purpose of Mr Chapman's visit appears to be purely for briefings and for an orientation on the role that he has undertaken.

According to the statement made at his appointment, Chapman's role is "to meet with UN personnel and other interested parties to the Cyprus issue to help decide the most constructive way in which the United States can help the UN secretary general in his efforts to resolve the Cyprus issue."

In the above statement and phraseology, one sees the effort of the U.S. Administration to avoid the misunderstandings, reactions and accusations caused in the past by its actions regarding the Cyprus issue. At the same time, the statement appears to fully respond to the statement-appeal which the Cyprus Government has repeatedly made, namely, that it accepts any help and initiative from any quarter as long as it is within the UN framework.

With this in view, impressive initiatives within a "Western framework" should not be expected from the United States, nor should the impression be created that the U.S. Administration wants to give to an experienced and able State Department official like Christian Chapman something with which to occupy himself.

Chapman's mandate contains a very strong element, which must involve similar aims and intentions of the U.S. leaders on the present phase of the Cyprus issue.

The special coordinator will work not only with the United Nations, but also with the interested parties to the Cyprus issue which, besides the Cyprus Government and the Turkish Cypriot leaders, are primarily Greece and Turkey. There is no doubt that the United States will exercise its influence primarily with the latter two in order to achieve certain results.

In other words, according to the impetus that the United States would like to give to developments, coordinator Chapman could end up as a moderator to the talks.

Of course it is very early for one to say whether things will develop one way or the other. Even if the United States ultimately decides to help the UN secretary general on the Cyprus issue, this will take a long time to manifest itself because of the 3-month period prior to the presidential elections in February. The election results may even determine whether or not there is a role for Mr Chapman. It cannot be ruled out that the true aim of his early visit is to obtain an advance answer to this question.

SPOKESMAN ON ALLEGED EVREN MESSAGE TO PAPANDREOU

NC060914 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 6 Nov 82 p 1

[Text] Commenting on yesterday's reports (not in O FILELEVTHEROS) that the chief of the Turkish junta, General Evren, was allegedly going to withdraw Turkish troops from Cyprus and that he allegedly reneged because the "Democratic Party-Akel coalition insisted on the process of the intercommunal talks," The government spokesman stated: "The comment is not even worthy of ridicule. It evokes pity for the low standard of mentality of the editors who concocted it."

Certain statements by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou revealed that General Evren's intentions on the withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus were passed on to him by Romanian Foreign Minister Andrei during his visit to Athens.

Yesterday the government spokesman, confirming that the Cypriot Government was informed about the message from the Romanian foreign minister to Papandreou, added: "The Cypriot Government does not wish to elaborate on this subject."

'Minimum Program' Opposed

NC061018 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 6 Nov 82 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "What Is Bad About the Minimum Program"]

[Text] In an indirect but extremely clear manner, Prime Minister Papandreou has confirmed our report that the head of the Turkish regime informed him that he was prepared to discuss a gradual withdrawal of the occupation forces from Cyprus.

Papandreou avoided elaboration for understandable reasons, but according to information available to our newspaper, Evren "backtracked" after publication of the coalition's [Democratic Party-AKEL] minimum program.

This is because so long as the Cyprus Government remains exclusively glued to the line "talks and again talks and once more talks," it only plays Turkey's game. It is Turkey that benefits from the indefinite protraction of the talks. It is a fact that to date Turkey has respected neither its own signatures nor keep its word. If, however, the minimum program provided Evren even with a mere excuse for reneging, then this in itself causes sufficient damage to Cyprus.

TURKS REPORTEDLY FIRED ON TRAINING PLANE 3 NOV

NC071012 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 7 Nov 82 p 1

[Text] The Cypriot Government was the object of a most serious and provocative act by the occupation troops on Wednesday night near Pyroi village.

According to our reports, a small plane (it has no connection with the art of war) that is used for certain special cases was fired upon by the invaders without it having made any provocations. In order to avoid the gunfire, the small Cesna training plane carried out a number of maneuvers and headed toward Larnaca.

The National Guard, and more specifically, the Ministries of Interior and Foreign Affairs and the government, have not lodged any demarche up to the moment. They have accepted a written Turkish warning through the UN peace force according to which "south Cyprus" should not repeat similar provocative -- as they have been described -- acts.

According to reports, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs believes that since the so-called incident took place within the Cyprus Republic's airspace, the Turkish warning will not be taken into consideration nor will it be answered.

POLICE BELIEVE TURKS RESPONSIBLE FOR BOMBINGS

[Unattributed report]

[Text] Police believe that Turks, either defectors or agents, lurk behind last month's bomb explosions of automobiles in Nicosia and Limassol. This has been concluded because no evidence has been discovered through police investigations to connect the explosions with any motives, either personal or professional, to the victims.

An important element which strengthens the views of the police is that the explosions occurred at a time when the Turks had created the issue over the Armenians and had threatened an armed raid against the Melkonian Institute [Armenian school in Nicosia].

The police are concerned that the Turks will attempt to create confrontations between the followers of the various parties during the pre-election period.

There are reports that defectors are transporting narcotics from the occupied areas for distribution in the free areas. At the same time, defectors have recently started creating problems for the police through various activities, by quarrelling amongst themselves and by using the excuse that they want to return to the occupied areas. They are also involved in thefts and burglaries.

TURKISH REPORTS ON WAR PREPARATIONS DENIED

The spokesman added that neither Mr Veniamin nor General Papanayiotou made such statements.

The Soviet Government asked its ambassador in the Turkish capital to study the text of the communique prior to its release in order to ascertain whether it included anything that could annoy the Turkish Government.

ATAKOL DENIES ALLEGATIONS OF 'TURKISH THREAT'

TA081524 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, has said that the Greek and Greek Cypriot allegations that there was a Turkish aggression in Cyprus were totally unfounded. Mr Atakol was referring to press reports that the defense minister of the Greek Cypriot administration, Mr Veniamin, would be going to Athens to discuss defensive measures against what they described as "Turkish threats." Mr Atakol said that these visits and statements were part of the propaganda by the Greeks and Greek Cypriots to keep the Cyprus problem fresh in the mind of the world public. He stressed that both the Greeks and Greek Cypriots know quite well that there is no threat of Turkish aggression and there could never be.

Mr Atakol repeated that such fabricated reports were well-known Greek and Greek Cypriot tactics. He added that if the Greek and Greek Cypriots were trying to threaten the Turkish Cypriot community by showing that they attach importance to military matters, they should never forget that the Turkish Cypriot community is the descendant of a nation which does not know fear in the defense of its homeland.

DENKTAS' DONATION OF ART OBJECTS DENOUNCED

NC060907 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 6 Nov 82 p 1

[Text] According to verfied information originally published on 24 October in the U.S. newspaper Richmond TIMES-DISPATCH SUN, Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas has donated 20 ancient Cypriot pottery pieces -- some of them dating to the first millenium B.C. -- to the University of Virginia.

Foreign Minister Rolandhis yesterday made the following statement: "This act by Denktas is a direct blow at the Cypriot cultural heritage and is an unholy attempt to usurp our fatherland's centuries-old antiquities treasures. Denktas has not only usurped archeological finds, but is now posing as a donor of stolen goods.

"As soon as this unacceptable act by Denktas became known, the republic's embassy in Washington, acting on my instructions, contacted the University of Virginia, and it is expected that the stolen antiquities will be returned to the Republic of Cyprus.

"At the same time, instructions were forwarded to the republic's delegate to UNESCO, Konstandinos Levendis, to lodge a very severe protest, stressing the necessity for the protection of antiquities found in the Cypriot areas occupied by the Turkish troops. Instructions were also issued to Mousiouttas, the republic's permanent representative in New York, to inform the UN secretary general about the matter."

Denktas' Reply

TA061208 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Text] Pointing out that all antiquities in the north are under the control of the Turkish Cypriot Department of Ancient Monuments, President Rauf Denktas has said that it is for that department to decide which antiquities can be disposed of abroad and which will be (?kept). In a statement to a Turkish Cypriot news agency [TAK] correspondent today, Denktas replied to allegations by Rolandhis, the foreign minister of the Greek Cypriot administration, to the effect that antiquities were donated by Denktas to the University of Virginia.

Denktas said that the pottery was donated to the university on behalf of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus after proper permission was obtained from the ancient monuments department, seeing that there were enough of these pottery pieces in the museum and that it was possible to dispose of them abroad.

Denktas continued: As will be recalled, the University of Virginia has greatly contributed to the reorganization of our mental hospital and the training of its medical staff. Therefore, all Greek Cypriot allegations and the accusation that these actiquities were stolen are incompatible with Cypriot realities.

KHARAVYI COMMENTS ON U.S. ENVOY'S VISIT

NC090927 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 9 Nov 82 p 3

[From the "Views and Comments" column: "Nothing New From Mr Chapman"]

[Text] Mr Christian Chapman must definitely feel that he has no time to waste. Only 2 weeks after his appointment as U.S. Department of State "special coordinator for the Cyprus problem, he arrived in Cyprus obviously determined to immediately engage himself in the task assigned to him by Washington. Mr Chapman's haste along with recent demonstrations of U.S. "interest" in the Cyprus problem leave no doubt that the U.S. Government has immediately decided to play a more active role in our problem.

We have repeatedly advanced the view that the United States is in a position to contribute better than anyone else to a fair and peaceful Cyprus settlement. Besides, the United States has a great moral responsibility to do so. The very creation of the Cyprus drama and the fact that its consequences have been torturing our people for 8 continuous years are the main results of U.S. activities and off-stage machinations. Nobody is naive enough not to see that, if the United States wants to, it can compel Turkey, which is dependent on the United States, to comply within a few days' time with the UN resolutions and to restore international lawfullness and the inalienable rights of the Cypriot people; rights which Turkey is brutally violating.

However, for the hundredth time it seems that U.S. initiatives are not aimed at the guilty party, but at the victims. Considering all facts, we are unable to perceive in the "Chapman operation" any other intention than the promotion of the permanent U.S. goal to solve the Cyprus problem -- behind the backs of our people and the international community -- within the "Western framework" and, therefore, based on Western interests, which are manifestly contrary to Cyprus' interests.

Despite the official Washington declarations, no realistic political observer has any doubts that it will again be attempted to downgrade the UN role in the Cyprus problem or that our problem will be completely removed from the United Nations in order to assist a Camp David-type "settlement," the final goal being to drag Cyprus into the imperialist orbit.

Mr Chapman is received in Cyprus with the same feelings that our people have seen Ball, Clark and so many other annoying Washington envoys come and go. If Mr Chapman had something new and positive in his briefcase, he should have taken it straight to Ankara and notified the Turkish generals of the demand to withdraw the occupation troops from Cyprus and for the immediate implementation of the UN resolutions. Any other visits or "ideas" are unnecessary.

DIKO SPOKESMAN SCORES KLIRIDHIS PRO-WEST STANCE

NC090836 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 9 Nov 82 p 1

[Excerpt] Referring to the allegation by Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis that President Kipiranou in cooperation with AKEL "alienates Western quarters," a Democratic Party [DIKO] spokesman observes that Mr Kliridhis continues to be possessed with illusions with regard to the Western quarters. The spokesman also notes that despite the efforts of the Cyprus and Greek Governments to succeed in positively activating the Western quarters for the Cyprus problem, in fact nothing has changed and U.S. policy continues to identify itself firmly and invariably with Ankara.

At the beginning of his statement, the DIKO spokesman points out the responsibilities of the Western quarters both with regard to the coup and the invasion. He adds:

"Despite all these negative facts, President Kiprianou's policy has never been based on underestimation of the Western quarters. Just as President Kiprianou has repeatedly declared, we cannot afford the luxury of choosing friends. We seek and look for international support regardless of origin, without prejudice and without becoming anyone's tool. This is the proper policy and it is precisely this policy that provides a guarantee for the future and serves to avert Turkish expansionism.

"Mr Kliridhis must not forget that Cyprus was led into catastrophe precisely when its nonaligned position was violently terminated on 15 July 1974, that is, when Western quarters had Cyprus at their disposal. Mr Kliridhis systematically disregards Cyprus' nonaligned position. He also disregards the need for the consolidation of some international equilibrium around the Cyprus problem that would help resolve our problem and at the same time avert the consolidation of Turkish expansionism.

"Mr Kliridhis maintains that the DIKO-AKEL cooperation renders Western quarters inactive. But this cooperation has been in force only for the last 8 months. What have the Western quarters done during the last 8 years to help resolve the Cyprus problem? What did the Western quarters do in August 1974, to at least prevent the second Attila, particularly at a time when Mr Kliridhis himself was 'president'?

"As for the interests of the Greek Cypriots, it is most obvious who is sacrificing them and who is defending them.

"President Kiprianou has spent 30 years on the frontline of the Cyprus struggle. He took over the office of president and is continuing Ethnarch Makarios' task for a struggle until vindication and, at the same time, for the reconstruction of the ruins brought about by the Turkish invasion."

PAPANDREOU VIEWS CANCELLATION OF NATO EXERCISE

NC081456 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Excerpts] Today the Air Force is observing the day of its patron saint. Hellenic Radio Television [ERT] reporter Aris Xipolitidhis reports from Tatoi on the celebrations held there.

[Begin recording] Our Air Force honored today, as every year, the day of its patron saint, Arkhangelos Mikhail, with the traditional ceremony at Tatoi Airfield in the presence of President Karamanlis and Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou.

After the ceremony, a reception followed at the Air Force cadet officers school which Prime Minister Papandreou attended.

Answering a question by a newsman on the cancellation of the NATO exercise, Mr Papandreou said: [Begin recording] It is very simple. Limnos belongs to Greek territory and according to the Montreux Treaty, the Greek Government has every legal right to militarize it. Therefore, failure to recognize this right of the Greek Government within the framework of a NATO exercise is unacceptable to us. Today NATO, the planning committee, will decide whether or not it will accept the Greek decision. If it does not accept it, our own decision, of course, is that the exercise will not take place. [end recording]

More on Cancellation

NC082232 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2200 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] In a detailed statement today, the government spokesman referred to the entire background which led to the cancellation of the NATO exercise Apex Express-82.

Specifically, following a briefing by the Ministries of National Defense and Foreign Affairs, the government spokesman made the following statement:

Since May 1980, there have been guideline instructions by NATO Secretary General Luns pointing out to the military commanders of the alliance that exercise plans should not include areas that could cause political problems. On the basis of these instructions from Luns, Limnos Island was not included in the Apex exercise planning which started in the summer of 1981. From the first moment, however, the governmentof change did not accept this guideline of the NATO secretary general. So, in the summer of 1982 when a committee of U.S. experts wanted to inspect the technical substructure of the Greek military airports -- except the one at Limnos even though Greece had explicitly recommended one be conducted -- the government reacted immediately and stated that it would not agree to the inspection unless the Limnos airport was also included. Finally, faced with the Greek Government's firm stand, the NATO authorities gave their consent and the experts then inspected Limnos airport as well.

At the same time, in July 1982, the representative of the NATO Air Force Headquarters in Naples asked that Limnos be dropped as a target area for the Apex 82 exercise. However, Greece opposed this request and on 13 September 1982, in a document of the Greek National Defense General Staff addressed to the Naples headquarters, stressed that an essential prerequisite for the exercise to be carried out was that Limnos airport also be included. Despite this warning and the continuous telephone reminders, the Naples headquarters did not reply until 5 November. On that day, the National Defense General Staff sent an urgent message to the NATO headquarters in Naples reiterating that Greece would not participate in the Apex 82 exercise unless Greece's request was accepted. The Naples headquarters gave a negative reply under the pretext that it was an order from higher echelons.

Following this development and upon a suggestion from the National Defense General Staff, the government decided that Greece will not participate in the Apex Express-82 exercise.

As an explanation for the fact that no answer was given to the 13 September 1982 document of the National Defense General Staff, NATO said that this document was channeled in the wrong direction and was lost due to an administrative error by the Naples headquarters.

It is indicative that the Defense Planning Committee, which dealt with the problem this morning in Brussels, has ordered investigations into the loss of the document by the Naples headquarters. Concerning the substance of the matter, the Defense Planning Committee judged that it is solely of a military nature and that no representative of the member countries stood against the Greek representative's position that NATO Secretary General Luns is not competent in giving political directions.

PART TWO OF PAPANDREOU TA NEA INTERVIEW

NC031652 Athens TA NEA in Greek 2 Nov 82 p 5

["Text of Part Two" of Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou's "exclusive" interview with TA NEA Managing Editor L.V. Karapanyiotis; Part One published in the 3 November DAILY REPORT -- date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: Shortly after the second round of the municipal elections, you referred on television to the backing of KKE candidates by New Democracy. Do you think that there has been an informal alliance, convergence of reaction, collapse of barriers or even "prejudice" or something else?

Answer: The New Democracy and the KKE strategies have different ideological starting points. However, their leaders note that their main political reasoning is powerless and "out of phase." They are unable to influence or determine the directives, the tempo or the conditions of universal developments in our country. Their strategies knock on and are neutralized by the political and electoral as well as ideological self-sufficiency of PASOK.

The rightwing leaders are trying to portray as a magic and salvational solution "the riddance of the change." For this reason, they have been promoting the policy of polarization, hysteria and division, which can be summed up in the dogma "everything for the sake of exercising opposition." The KKE leadership has been trying to confirm its role -- from a certain point and beyond -- not only within the opposition, but within the sharing of "responsibilities" in the exercise of government authority. The "responsibilities" are a fresh political invention presented for the first time in documents prior to the KKE congress. It is well known that the KKE leadership believes that unproductive opposition and pressuring constitute its negotiate trump card for some "responsibilities." Thus, the KKE is escalating its activites in accordance with two contradictory doctrines which reveal the crisis in strategy and their contradictory attitudes. These doctrines are "we exercise opposition while we support the government" and "we support the government while exercising opposition."

The orbits of these options by the leading circles of the two parties are adjacent to each other and many times coincide.

During the municipal elections, New Democracy tried, in a well-studied way, to mainly back the KKE candidates during the second round of the elections within the framework taking revenge from and of weakenings PASOK. Of course, at the same time the leadership and the press of the rightwing, by embarking on excessive hypocrisy and loquacity, spread everywhere and at all levels the awkward joke about "popular front."

The game of the rightwing leadership is strange but it can be explained, and it is now obvious. Above all stands the political and class interest of oligarchy and of the system of dependence. Its ideology is adapted each time to continually serve and consolidate this interest.

However, it is alarming, because the KKE leadership either does not realize this or silently accepts it, hoping for its share from the "wearing" of PASOK. We tell them that in this game the upper hand, the leading role and the initiative of movement is with the rightwing leadership. With its tricks, it overcomes its difficulties, thus preparing for its "restoration" to power. In view of the obvious and existing danger of PASOK consolidating itself in power, the rightwing leadership is capable of outflanking all past prejudice with which it has imbued its supporters. The rightwing leadership has proved that it has a well-developed sense of self-preservation. It cannot walk by itself so it is looking for crutches.

After noting all this, one would expect that the KKE leadership would have shown greater historical knowledge and political shrewdness.

Question: What would be the repercussions to public life from this phenomenon? Does the political map actually change?

Answer: I hope that this will be a coincidental phenomenon, but until it completely fades out it will have moments of escalation as well as periods of abatement.

I do not think it can change the political map. It can alter political characteristics in the short term through intentional confusion. However, in the medium term the field of political contrasts and struggles will become clear. Maybe at some moment the truly progressive people will become aware of the fact that myopic opposition is a luxury, if not mere hypocrisy. Besides, this "opposition cartel" is so contradictory, so weak and divergent that under pressure from the people's forces it will collapse each time.

Question: In any case, the municipal elections are now part of history. Can you explain how and why you view local self-administration as a "tool" for the cause of change?

Answer: Local self-administration is not just a tool in the cause of change. It constitutes the foundation of democracy and a leading factor for development and change.

It is the institution which is closer to the people. It can serve the carrying out of the essential part of change and of socialist transformation, of people's participation.

It is only through decentralization and local self-administration that we would be able to give our cities the human appearance that they lack and to revive our villages.

Exactly for this reason I believe that it is necessary to activate all citizens irrespective of their political affiliations or partisan preference.

For this reason, PASOK's present self-sufficiency in the municipalities will be properly utilized solely in order to make the municipalities a bastion of democracy, a field of dialogue with all the citizens within the framework of national people's unity.

Question: Economic affairs is, of course, an area in which many questions can be asked. Let us ask the "wider" one. How do you view the development of the Greek economy in relations with the income -- the "purse" -- of the average Greek?

Answer: To start with, I would like to observe that if one is to judge the development of an economy, one must use criteria wider than the income -- the "purse" -- of the average citizen.

In connection with your question, I believe that for the socially important categories of people, their income was within satisfactory levels during the past year.

Our policy aimed at increasing and supporting the income of the people with low salaries and pensions.

The need for social justice becomes more imperative when the national income either does not increase at all, as was the case in 1981, or it is increased at a low rate, as was the case this year because of the international crisis.

The development of income in the agrarian field has also been satisfactory. The government's anti-inflationary policy is connected with the "purse" of the average Greek. The fact that inflation will be 2 to 3 units lower than last year means that the average Greek, all Greeks, gain from the point of view of real purchasing power.

It must be noted that for the sake of a permanent and substantive improvement of quality, there must be a series of deeper structural changes in our economy.

It is necessary to have a considerable increase in investments, a change in the institutional framework and mobilization of all the productive forces of the country.

This presupposes recognition by all of the seriousness of the problem and a change in our habits as consumers.

The consumer habits and expectations that have recently developed in our country are not compatible with our economic possibilities. It is necessary to transfer resources from the consumer goods market -- particularly the imported ones -- to the field of investments.

It is only in this way that we will be able to secure a permanently high standard of living under conditions of economic development and social justice.

Question: It is skillfully rumored that fresh taxes are ... forthcoming and, along with this, the impression is being promoted that there will be increases in rates and so forth as well as in rates for services and goods under state control. What and why should we expect increases?

Answer: To start with, I must say the government has not finalized its decisions on the 1983 budget or its policy regarding the invoicing policy for public enterprises.

For 1983, the margin for the introduction of new taxes is limited, not to say insignificant. Emphasis will be put on the collection of existing taxes, the curbing of waste and the control of expenditures with the exception of the fields of health, welfare and education, which enjoy high priority in our socialist program.

As for the prices of goods and services of the public enterprises and organizations, I have to say this:

The Government is methodically and consistently proceeding with the cleansing of these organizations and with the reduction of their administration deficits. We must not forget that these deficits are finally met either directly by the taxpayers or indirectly by the increase in inflation, which indirectly affects the income of all the citizens and particularly the low-salaried people.

Emphasis is mainly put on the increase in productivity and the curbing of operating costs. As for the revenue side, no increase in prices is being considered for the immediate future. There may be an exemption in a case or two because of particularly low prices as compared to the cost of production or the corresponding prices prevailing abroad in the case of similar services.

Question: Allow me a question on your relations and cooperation with the president of the republic, precisely because many irresponsible things are being reported about this.

Answer: The interest recently demonstrated in connection with the relations between the president of the republic and the government is natural. This is because the institution of president of the republic -- with his strong personality and impressive presence and his contribution to the postwar political life of our country -- comes from an ideological field which is different from that to which the PASOK government belongs.

I wish to confirm something which is obvious: The president is irreproachably exercising his duties with above-party criteria. As for the relations of the government and myself personally with Mr Konstandinos Karamanlis, they are excellent. Our cooperation is regular, absolutely harmonious and always useful for the promotion of our national interests. The way in which the president of the republic is exercising his duties decisively contributes to the strengthening and consolidation of our democratic regime, and I absolutely believe that this valuable contribution will continue undisturbed in the future as well for the benefit of our nation and people.

Averof Reaction

NC031922 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 3 Nov 82 pp 1,3

["Text" of 2 November reply by New Democracy Chairman Averof to Prime Minister Papandreou's TA NEA interview]

[Text] The PASOK leader has again embarked on theoretical adventuring, which has always been characteristic of him and which, recently, because of his nervousness caused by the municipal election results, becomes still more confusing and more excessive in enigmatic hints.

I do not think that there is need to answer these hints when they refer to his relations with the KKE -- relations which will fundamentally remain allied -- or when they refer to vague statements which cannot be easily summed up.

But I must answer some of his clearer hints directed against New Democracy.

Mr Papandreou does not have the right to claim that men who have created Greece, men who have consolidated democracy in this country and who for 7 years have governed the country honestly and capably, are undermining democracy.

I do not overlook the fact that he is overcome by agony because it was established that New Democracy is on the rise, during the recent municipal elections, but in no case does this mean that he has a legal basis [to say all this].

The Greeks know that the charges he is leveling against New Democracy were turned into deeds in the most unjustified and violent way when he came to power. The people are not naive, and unfortunately for Mr Papandreou, the people are getting to know him well.

OFFICIAL SOVIET TRADE UNION VISIT ENDS 5 NOV

NC051327 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] The official visit of a Soviet trade union delegation visit ended today after a 1-week stay in Greece at the invitation of the Greek General Confederation of Labor [GSEE].

It was established during the talks between the Presidium of the GSEE and the Soviet trade unionists, as stressed during today's press conference, that there are great prospects for further tightening the already friendly relations between the GSEE and the Soviet trade unions.

The two delegations announced that they resolved to coordinate the activities of the trade union organizations of the two countries for peace and disarmament. They also agreed to exchange [visits by] trade union personalities for mutual briefings.

A joint communique issued at the conclusion of the talks stresses, among other things, that the Greek and Soviet trade unions support efforts being made toward conversion of the Balkans into a nuclear-free zone, an effort toward which the Greek Government offers fundamental support.

PAPER COMMENTS ON INEFFECTIVE PAPANDREOU BUDGET

NC081123 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 7 Nov 82 p 9

[Editorial: "A 'Bipolar' Method of Thinking"]

[Text] The state budget and the more general financial policy influence the entire economy's progress to the same degree that the budget is directly influenced in its preparatory stages by progress in the economy. This two-directional function, however, is not accomplished automatically. Government decisions intervene. This is the "government's will" -- a term repeatedly stressed by the prime minister and other members of the PASOK government in the early stages after taking over authority in an effort to convince the Greek people that whatever they undertake obeys a well thought-out and irrevocable decision-making process.

The past 12 months, however, in no way confirm any positive intervention by the "political will" in our financial affairs. On the contrary, preparation of the 1982 budget is, largely responsible for the deterioration of national economic activity. At the same time, this activity contributed to the deficit and the crippled operation of the budget itself. The government's financial policy, as inspired by "the will" of the government and organizational responsible officials of PASOK, is the sole factor responsible for the failure of the more general government practices in the economic sector. There must be no attempt to avoid the bitter pill of this situation with "explanations" which try to present our economic retardation as an expected and temporary result of replacing "capitalist" policy with a "socialist" solution.

What was particularly felt during the first year of PASOK's authority was the non-existence of any policy -- capitalist, socialist or third road. What was particularly felt was the existence of a bipolar thought process among the leading circles of the "movement." This prevented implementation of measures in support of the economy, which gave it the satisfaction of destroying the apparatus which has enabled the economy to function to date.

If the prime minister does not solve this problem, if he fails to impose -- naturally, if he wants to -- only one pole as a source of inspiration in his government's economic policy; and if this inspiration is not dominated by the aim to bolster the economy instead of sawing at its supports in the hope that this method will bring down the "rightwing" and the "oligarchy;" then no matter how many meetings he holds with the representatives "of the two poles" the results will be nothing but one more step toward the decomposition of our national economic potential.

The implementation of "reinforced" social policy measures -- no matter how exposed to danger they might have been during a period of severe productive and commerical difficulties -- would not have had any negative effects on the operation of our economy had it not been for all the rest -- the alleged organic measures aimed at supporting the "socialist regime." These measures -- copied from the most undesirable, antidemocratic precedents of "existential socialism" -- only managed to cut down the state's and private sector's productivity. This happened during a period when the most authoritative government personalities insisted on the need to increase productivity so that our ecomony might "regain its balance" after having been severely shaken -- which was logically expected as a result of social aid grants resulting from inflationary trends.

Now the state deficit is approaching 450 billion drachmas; the industrial productivity index last August dropped to the levels of August 1976 -- in other words, 6 whole years of development have been lost. Before industries can get credit from the banks they have to be relisted as handicraft industries; new deposits have been absorbed by the state and banks are borrowing from the Bank of Greece in order to meet their current requirements (the national bank is in the "red" to the tune of 20 billion); foreign exchange reserves have been depleted and the state is now studying the ultilization of the foreign exchange reserves of commercial banks (amounting to more than $1 billion, the taxation potential of our economy has been further weakened, and the only hope of coping with expenditures in the inflationary budget lies in extracting a larger proportion of funds from inflated domestic sources.

No logical man will object to the formulation and implementation of an economic policy, no matter what its label, that can effectively contribute to the promotion of the worker's interests. Respect for past methods of economic development is obligatory only when these methods cannot be replaced by more effective ones. If new methods have not been discovered and checked, then the only permissible action by that "other political will" is to rid the older methods of their negative elements. Obviously, this policy does not enjoy the approval of these faithful to the stone-age Leninist recipe. At the same time, however, the social entity as a whole cannot continue to give its approval to calamitous experiments for much longer. What has taken place during the first 12 months of political and financial handling is more than enough.

PAPER SAYS AGRICULTURE MINISTER MAY RESIGN

NC081806 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 7 Nov 82 p 20

[Excerpts] There have been hints that Agriculture Minister K. Simitis will resign following his "unusual act of political piracy" the day before yesterday when he allegedly announced as a program drafted by PASOK what is known in Greece as the Konstandinos Karamanlis program for the utilization of forests in the Attiki basin. According to a statement by the New Democracy agricultural projects parliamentary group, this aforestation program, which envisages a network of forests and social and recreational centers in the Attiki Basin, was drafted by the Ministry of Agriculture and Public Works under the mandate of then-Prime Minister Konstandinos Karamanlis.

The statement stresses that usurping another's project, making it appear to be a new project and ignoring those who inspired and promoted it during its first 5 years is an unusual political act. The usurpation of this program by the present agriculture minister is an act of despair. During a meeting at the agriculture Ministry the day before yesterday, the agriculture minister himself declared his disappointment over the lack of projects by the ministry's new administration, and decided that the appropriate reaction would be to announce a project that was not his own.

The statement adds that so far the agriculture Ministry, where it does not demolish, copies and usurps. However, the issue of whether the minister will remain in the government has now arisen, and the prime minister cannot but assess the repercussions of this ridiculous affair.

HIJACKED AIRCRAFT DEPARTS FOR USSR 8 NOV

TA081512 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1505 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Sinop, 8 Nov (AA) -- The Soviet airliner which was hijacked on Sunday afternoon and forced to land in the Black Sea port of Sinop while flying from Novorossiysk to Odessa took off from Sinop today at 1355. Officials in Sinop said the Soviet aircraft left for the Soviet Union after refueling with 37 passengers and crewmen.

Investigations of the three Soviet citizens of German origin, Boris Schmidt, Vitali Schmidt and Arthur Schuller, who hijacked the Soviet airplane, are being conducted by the Sinop public prosecutor, Unal Canpolat.

Hijackers Detained

NC081715 Paris AFP in English 1659 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Excerpts] Ankara, Nov 8 (AFP) -- Three students who hijacked a Soviet airliner to Turkey and asked for political asylum yesterday were today charged with air piracy and assault and battery, judicial sources here said. However, an extradition treaty [words indistinct] between Turkey and the Soviet Union, and the three might be turned over to Soviet authorities.

The three, described as Soviet citizens of German origin, were identified as Vitali Schmidt, 27, Boris Schmidt, 23 and Arthur Schuller, 23. They were at first identified as East Germans.

Sources said they are accused of commandeering an Antonov-24 aircraft, on an Odessa-Novorossiysk flight with 35 passengers and five crew aboard, and forcing it to fly to the Turkish-U.S. airbase at Sinop on the Black Sea.

The Sinop public prosecutor said the three had asked for asylum, and also to rejoin their families in West Germany.

The Sinop prosecutor said the three accused hijackers were part of a German community that settled in the Soviet Union's Black Sea region between the two world wars.

Foreign Ministry sources said here later that the three will probably not be extradited to the Soviet Union as the 1977 Soviet-Turkish extradition treaty was "never ratified by Turkey".

Meanwhile, talks on an extradition continued today between Soviet Embassy officials here and the Foreign Ministry. The hijacked Antonov-24 took off from Sinop for the Soviet Union a little after midday, a Foreign Ministry spokesmen said.

GOVERNMENT SIGNS PROTOCOL ON BORDER WITH USSR

TA051308 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1145 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Text] Ankara, Nov 5 (AA) -- A protocol on the redelineation of the Turkish-Soviet border along Arpacay Dam and reservoir constructed jointly by the two countries was signed at the close of the final session of negotiations.

Signing on behalf of the Turkish Government, Asaf Inhan of the Foreign Ministry pointed out the land border between the two countries had been delimited fully in 1973 and the border between their territorial waters in the Black Sea had been marked with a 1980 protocol signed in Tbilisi.

Now the realization of Arpacay (Ahurian) Dam through bilateral cooperation had necessitated the re-delimitation of the border along the new reservoir, which would constitute an artificial lake 2 km wide and 32 km long full.

Construction on the main part of the and most border marks were already completed [as received], and water could be released from the dam next summer, Ambassador Inhan estimated. With the current protocol, the dam was actually becoming operative.

Signing on behalf of the Soviet Union, head of the Soviet delegation, (Pavel Kuznetsov) confirmed the protocol was the fruit of 5 years of negotiations between the two countries. Undersecretary of the Turkish Foreign Ministry Ercument Yavuzalp and Soviet Ambassador to Ankara A. Rodinov were also present at the signing.

VOTCP COMMENTARY ON CONDUCT OF REFERENDUM

TA080829 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Station commentary: "On the Referendum Results"]

[Text] Citizens, you are listening to your radios and televisions for the results of the constitutional referendum as announced by the junta. As you must have gathered, you are facing the junta's deceits and brute force, which in no way consider the people. Citizens, this is a scandal. It is an unprecedented act of charlatanism. The junta is announcing as referendum results those it had decided upon earlier.

Citizens, the Constitution was opposed by partisans of the Republic People's Party [RPP], of the National Salvation Party, of the defunct Turkish Labor Party and of other leftist parties, by the members and sympathizers of the Turkish Communist Party.

Junta chief Evren himself announced that the Justice Party was opposing the Constitution. And now the junta announces that it has won the referendum by a great majority. It is ignoring the people as well as world public opinion. It is mocking them. The people will give a weighty answer to the junta for daring to play with the people's will.

The voting was held under the junta's intense oppression and terror. Some citizens who oppose the Constitution were arrested while preparing to vote. A former RPP municipal council member was among those arrested in Izmir. In Trabzon, teacher Mehmet Aygin was arrested and sent to jail for voting against the junta's Constitution. Ahmet Yildiz, another citizen, was arrested in Gemlik, a district of Bursa, for voting against the Constitution. In many villages and several urban regions, the principle of "secret vote and public counting of ballots" was completely violated in addition to the oppression and terror carried out by the junta. In many voting places, the only available ballots were the white Yes slips. The blue No slips were (?not to be found). For example, an open vote was held in Karacahasan village in Elmadag, a district 50 kms from Ankara. The 250 voters in Karacahasan were forced to vote white. In earlier elections, the RPP had obtained a majority in that village.

According to preliminary reports, such fraud took place in almost every village.

As for the Turkish Radio and Television [TRT], the junta's mouthpiece, it refrained from giving separate referendum results for each province and district. It divided the country into groups of 11 provinces and gave the total results for each group. The first figures showed that the junta's Constitution was endorsed by 94 percent. However, according to the first reports we received, despite all the oppression and terror, high rates of No votes emerged from certain ballot boxes. For example, (?1,052) No votes and 99 Yes votes were cast in the ballot box used by Bulent Ecevit, the leader of the defunct RPP. The junta could not carry out its oppression and terror regarding that ballot box because the public's attention was focused on it. This example is significant by itself.

During the vote, the junta resorted to oppression and terror on the one hand and clearly distorted the results on the other. It did not count the blue votes.

Citizens, by announcing from the outset that it would take it upon itself to announce the referendum results, the junta openly declared that it would engage in fraud. Now, with great nonchalance, it is announcing the so-called results, which are not at all persuasive.

The junta's referendum was illegal. It cannot be accepted. The people will not accept these results, which do not reflect the people's free will. The junta is very wrong if it believes that with this act of charlatanism and scandal it has secured a legal foundation for itself. This act of charlatanism will not be accepted by our people or by world opinion.

PARTICIPATION IN LEBANON FORCE DOUBTFUL

AU091149 Vienna KURIER in German 9 Nov 82 p 3

[Text] Austrian soldiers have been asked to help safeguard peace in Lebanon side by side with the American, Italian and French forces: On Monday, the Lebanese Government officially requested Austria to participate in the international peacekeeping force in Lebanon.

According to Beirut's plan, the peacekeeping force in Lebanon is to be increased from the present 2,500 to 30,000 men. Great Britain, South Korea, Belgium, the Netherlands and Sweden have also been asked by Lebanon's new chief of state, Amin al-Jumayyil, to dispatch troops.

However, a dispatch of Austrian soldiers to Lebanon is barred by the Constitution: The relevant Constitutional law enacted in 1965 provides for the dispatch of Austrian troops only at the request of international organizations, not of any individual state. As KURIER was told by the Foreign Ministry, Austrian participation in the peacekeeping force in Lebanon would thus require an amendment to the Constitution.

There is also another reason why Austria is not likely to accede to the Lebanese request received by the Foreign Ministry on Monday: The Austrian Army's capacity for dispatching troops to the United Nations is already exhausted with the current UN quota of 840 men.

KREISKY STRESSES UNTROUBLED RELATIONS WITH U.S.

AU091347 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1145 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Edgar Sterbens and Erich Aichinger Report on Chancellor Kreisky's press conference in Vienna following this morning's cabinet meeting -- with recorded portions]

[Excerpt] First, concerning the foreign policy segment [of the press conference]: Chancellor Kreisky expects his meeting with U.S. President Reagan, which is scheduled for January, to bring an exchange of opinions on all world political issues -- from the Middle-East problem to the policy of detente to the state of European-U.S. relations. Certain misunderstandings between Europe and the United States, which recently occurred, for example in the economic sector, could be overcome on this occasion, he said. The bilateral relations between Austria and the United States have always been good, Kreisky declared, adding that the long vacancy of the U.S. ambassador's position in Austria is nothing unusual.

[Begin Kreisky recording] It is certainly not true that there has been a rift between us. The media are adopting an argument which the Austrian People's Party has invented. The relations between Austria and the United States have been very good. As far as the long duration of the vacancy is concerned, it must be said that this is nothing new. This has frequently occurred before in politics, primarily because the U.S. President reserves this decision for himself. However, the relations between the United States and Austria are indeed characterized by the fact that one of the President's personal friends, Mr Cummings, had been sent to Austria. That he subsequently was ill for a long time and eventually died is a different matter. One should not draw any too far-reaching conclusions from this. [end recording]

Kreisky did not say anything about the allegedly forthcoming appointment of Reagan's secretary, Helene von Damm, as U.S. ambassador to Austria, but did comment on his originally reserved attitude toward the U.S. President:

[Begin recording] [Kreisky] The first thing I said at a Socialist International conference was that it was a matter for the American people and that we had to pay the U.S. President, as the representative of the American people, The respect due him on the strength of his positions -- that is what I said directly after his election. In other words, I did not express any criticism at all, but I said it was a matter for the American people to choose whom they wanted to have.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, such a foreign policy visit usually also favorably affects domestic policy. If you return to the election campaign in Austria in January, would you not regard it as slightly embarrassing that Reagan would more or less become a campaign helper for you?

[Kreisky] Well, first of all there would certainly be nothing embarrassing about anything like that. However, I believe that one will be tactful enough to treat the whole matter very quietly and objectively, and that every one of us will be most careful to avoid using it for campaign propaganda. That is simply a matter of course: no one must misuse something like that. [end recording]

FOREIGN MINISTER, EGYPT'S 'ALI HOLD TALKS

NC082055 Cairo Domestic Service in Arabic 2000 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Our radio correspondent in Canada has learned that the Canadian foreign minister emphasized to [Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister] Kamal Hasan 'Ali during their talks this evening the need for recognizing the Palestinian people and their right to establish their homeland on the West Bank and Gaza Strip as well as their right to participate in determining their fate.

The Canadian foreign minister also affirmed that his country rejects Israel's attempt to adopt unilateral stands to annex Jerusalem and the Golan Heights and that Canada supports initiatives in which the Arabs adopt a unified stand. He asserted his country's denunciation of Israel's measues and emphasized Canada's support for the withdrawal of Israeli and all foreign forces from Lebanon.

Support For Egyptian Policy

NC082240 Cairo MENA in Arabic 2055 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Ottawa, 8 Nov (MENA) -- The Canadian deputy prime minister has stated that his government is opposed to Israel's policy of building settlements in the occupied Arab territories and that it demands that these settlements be removed because they contravene international law. The Canadian Government, he said, is also opposed to the annexation of Jerusalem and the Golan Heights. This was outlined in the review that Canadian acting Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Allan MacEachen gave during his meeting today with Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali, who is currently visiting Ottawa. The meeting lasted well over 3 hours.

A responsible Egyptian official has stated that during the talks, the Canadian side expressed its government's support for the policy which Egypt is pursuing to achieve a just and permanent peace in the Middle East. The Canadian side also expressed its government's conviction that the Egyptian policy is a guideline for settling the Middle East question. The Egyptian source further said that the Canadian acting prime minister expressed his country's support of the Palestinian people's legitimate rights and called for the international community's recognition of these rights. He said that Canada is not opposed to the establishment of a national homeland for the Palestinians if this can be achieved through negotiations on the basis of Security Council Resolution 242. In addition, the Canadian official announced his government's support of the U.S. President's initiative and that Canada goes further than the U.S. inisitiatve regarding the establishment of a national homeland for the Palestinians. The Canadian official expressed his conviction that the United States is capable of playing a principle role in solving the Palestinian problem.

Regarding Canada's participation in the peacekeeping force, the Canadian deputy prime minister said that his country prefers that its participation in such a force be under the UN flag.

Concerning the situation in Lebanon, the Canadian side stressed the need for the withdrawal of Israeli and all non-Lebanese forces from Lebanese territory. He stressed his government's support of Lebanon's independence.

A MENA correspondent has learned that the Egyptian and Canadian sides exchanged views on future moves to further the peace progress in the Middle East. Kamal Hasan 'Ali explained Egypt's views on the furute stages of moves to establish a just and permanent peace in the area.

Both sides reviewed the positive aspects of the U.S. President's initiative and the importance of coordinating future moves within the framework of the U.S. initiative.

'Ali explained to the Canadian side his mission in Washington. Both sides agreed on the seriousness of the U.S. initiative, and expressed support for the Fes summit resolutions.

The Canadian side expressed its satisfaction with the tacit recognition of Israel in the Fes resolutions. 'Ali said that the formula that the Fes summit agreed upon was a result of an agreement between the moderates and intransigents.

The Egyptian-Canadian talks also touched on the North-South dialogue and the problems facing the world economy and their effect on the developing countries.

The source said that the Egyptian-Canadian views agree that the Camp David framework constitutes a sound formula for reaching a solution that will achieve for the Palestinians, particularly the population of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the right to establish their own homeland. It is well known that the Canadian Government supports many of the points that are outlined in U.S. President Reagan's initiative.

Both sides agreed to strengthen cooperation in the economic, scientific and nuclear fields. Both sides exchanged documents on the nuclear cooperation agreement recently signed between Egypt and Canada. They agreed on the need to expedite the conclusion of the economic agreements currently being discussed.

'Ali made a comprehensive review of economic development in Egypt, the development rate and Egypt's interest in plans for family planning. The Canadian side expressed its readiness to increase its contribution in economic cooperation spheres and to increase the volume of projects in which the Canadian International Development Agency is participating. The Canadian side expressed readiness to improve its trade balance with Egypt by increasing Egyptian exports to Canada and developing tourism. The Canadian side agreed in principle to increase the volume of nuclear cooperation and train Egyptian technicians in fulfillment of the recent talks that Minister of Electricity and Energy Mahir Abaza held in Canada.

The official talks between the Canadian deputy prime minister and Kamal Hasan 'Ali began as soon as the Egyptian delegation arrived in Ottawa. Egyptian Ambassador to Canada Tahsin Bashir and head of the Consular Department in the Egyptian Foreign Ministry Kamal 'Abd ar-Rahman attended the talks. An Egyptian-Canadian committee has been formed to prepare the joint statement that will be issued Tuesday morning.

'Ali: Talks 'Very Successful'

NC091806 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1612 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Ottawa, 9 Nov (MENA) -- Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali has stated that his discussions in Ottawa have been very successful in bolstering Egyptian-Canadian relations.

In a statement he made to a MENA correspondent, 'Ali said that the Canadian side expressed full readiness to cooperate economically with Egypt, increase its share in the joint projects and offer Egypt more aid. He added that he submitted some projects to the Canadian side, and pointed out that Investments and Economic Cooperation Minister Dr Wajih Shindi will arrive in Canada today to hold more detailed discussions and agree with Canadian officials on the order of priorities.

Regarding his upcoming visit to the United States, Ali said that he will give a letter to U.S. President Reagan from President Husni Mubarak. He added this his discussions with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz this Friday will deal with the efforts being exerted to achieve a peaceful settlement and the initiatives presented, such as the U.S. initiative and the Fes summit statement. The discussions will also deal with the Lebanese crisis. 'Ali added that he will raise the problem of Tabah and Egyptian-Israeli relations in Washington.

Regarding the next stage in the efforts to solve the Middle East problem, 'Ali said that the Egyptian conceptualization is based on two principles: encouragement of all the parties to enter into negotiations -- this by necessity demands that Israel show good will -- and coordination of the positions of all the parties to arrive at a general formula that would achieve the legitimate rights of the Palestinians and lead to a comprehensive and just solution of the problem.

Regarding the possibility of his meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin in Washington, 'Ali said that Begin will be in New York during his stay in Washington and that he will leave Washington before Begin's arrival there.

'Ali Press Conference

NC091855 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1720 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Ottawa, 9 Nov (MENA) -- Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali has announced that President Muhammad Husni Mubarak will visit Canada at the beginning of next year. This was announced in a statement 'Ali delivered at a press conference he held today at the conclusion of his visit to Canada.

'Ali called on Canada to support the Egyptian aspirations and efforts for the achievement of peace in the Middle East.

He also reviewed the current Middle East situation and dealt with the Israeli attack on Lebanon, which is a link in the chain of the acts of aggression that the Israeli Government has carried out. These include the attack on the Iraqi nuclear reactor, the annexation of East Jerusalem, the application of Israeli law in the Golan and the dismissal of the mayors and dissolution of the town councils in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

'Ali also announced at the press conference Egypt's support for U.S. President Reagan's initiative for solving the Palestinian problem and said that the initiative includes positive points, among them:

1. The call for freezing the illegal settlements in the West Bank and Gaza;

2. U.S. recognition of the organic connection between the land and the people within the framework of Palestinian autonomy;

3. Recognition of the right of the residents of East Jerusalem to take part in the election of the autonomy authority;

4. The initiative leaves the final status of Arab Jerusalem open to negotiations; and

5. The initiative rejects the Israeli claim for sovereignty over the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

'Ali said in his statement that the Middle East area is currently witnessing a new spirit manifested in the U.S. initiative and the Fes summit resolutions, and that Egypt hopes that all the parties will work sincerely for the achievement of peace.

He added that the United States is called upon to work seriously to promote the peace efforts, and that one of the important factors for the achievement of this goal is to try to invite other Arab sides to join the negotiations.

He added: In our opinion, this requires the participation or cooperation of the PLO by encouraging the organization to adopt stands that will help promote the peace process.

He pointed out that the call on Jordan to participate in the peace process requires the cooperation of the PLO.

Regarding the suspended autonomy negotiations, 'Ali said that Israel must show good will by withdrawing from Lebanon as soon as possible and by not maintaining its dangerous policy of establishing new settlements, which is a primary obstacle to peace.

Second Press Conference

NC092106 Cairo MENA in Arabic 2034 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Ottawa, 9 Nov (MENA) -- Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali has reaffirmed that Egypt does not oppose the establishment of a confederal or federal union between the Palestinians and Jordan.

Speaking at a press conference in Ottawa at the invitation of the Press Club, 'Ali said that Egypt believes that the Palestinians must exercise their right for self-determination and that they should state their opinion on the establishment of a federation with Jordan because they themselves must decide their future.

Asked if he will mediate between the PLO and the United States, the deputy prime minister and foreign minister asserted that he has not been commissioned by the PLO to do so and that he is not a mediator between the PLO and the U.S. Government.

'Ali pointed out that the PLO believes that its participation in any negotiations to settle the Palestinian question is a basic issue, because solving the problem will not only affect the 1.3 million Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, but will affect about 2 million Palestinians living in exile as well.

Regarding President Husni Mubarak's visit to Canada, 'Ali expressed the hope the visit will take place before the end of January. He pointed out, however, that contacts are still underway to set the date.

In his statement, the deputy prime minister and foreign minister also dealt with his forthcoming visit to Washington. He pointed out that he carries a letter from President Mubarak to President Ronald Reagan.

'Ali said that he will hold discussions with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz which will deal primarily with the encouraging steps taken lately to solve the Middle East problem. The most important steps are the Reagan initiative and the Fes conference's resolutions, which are considered a sign of progress in the Arab position. He stressed in this regard that the encouraging steps include the PLO's attitude, which is considered more positive. He said that what remains to complete the picture is a readiness by the Israeli Government to show good intentions.

KOHL SAYS USSR 'MOST IMPORTANT PARTNER' IN EAST

LD091612 Hamburg DPA in German 1551 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Bonn, 9 Nov (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl has announced that he will make a government foreign policy statement to the Bundestag the week after next. Kohl told the CDU/CSU parliamentary group today in Bonn that he will report to Parliament after his return from the United States. The chancellor flies to the United States on Sunday for a 4-day visit. On Monday, he will be received in the White House by U.S. President Ronald Reagan.

Kohl told the parliamentary group that his visit to the United States is intended to emphasize that German-U.S. relations are a completely normal issue. The United States should know that the Federal Republic is a reliable partner and basically interested in the success of disarmament. At the same time, the chancellor stressed that the Soviet Union is the Federal Republic's most important partner in the East. It depends to an important extent on Moscow how the Germans in the GDR fare. Kohl told the deputies of his recent contacts with the governments in Paris, London and Luxembourg.

MUTUAL CONCESSIONS TONE FOR FUTURE FRG-GDR TALKS

LD091018 Hamburg DPA in German 0221 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Paderborn, 9 Nov (DPA) -- According to the federal minister for inner-German relations, Rainer Barzel, the Federal Government does not want to use the GDR's deep indebtedness to Federal German and other Western banks as a lever for political demands. Barzel told the press late Monday evening in Paderborn that he was assured that the GDR, despite considerable economic difficulties, will cope with these debts. In new negotiations, however, "nothing will be given for nothing." Barzel was in his political home-town for the release of his new book.

With regard to talks on establishing the frontier on the Elbe, the 58-year old politician stressed that this question was classed in the basic treaty as "unresolvable or not in need of settlement." In view of the considerable difficulties, particularly with the map system on hand, he is initially reserving the right to take a close look at the original maps on this subject. Should these talks ever reach a conclusion, however, the Bonn government will also have the right to raise a few issues. "Then the order to shoot will be brought up," the minister said.

Barzel, who will explain his concept of policy on Germany before the Bundestag Inner-German Relations Committee on Thursday, announced the inauguration before the end of this month of the Hamburg-Berlin [autobahn]. Barzel described the compulsory exchange levy as "contrary to agreement" and posing an obstacle to further scientific, technological and cultural agreements. "Before new agreements can be concluded, we must first get rid of those circumstances which stand in the way of agreements."

According to him, talks are currently underway with the GDR on improving postal communications. Barzel stressed the Federal Government's willingness to hold further talks which should, however, be based on "mutual concessions." Thus, Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR Council of State, is also welcome in Bonn. "However, this must aim to bring about tangible results," Barzel said.

ARGENTINA PRESSED ON 'DISAPPEARED' GERMANS' FATE

LD091856 Hamburg DPA in German 1621 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 9 Nov (DPA) -- An FRG Foreign Office spokesman said today that the Federal Government would continue to press the Argentine military government for information on the fate of 50 Germans or people of German descent who disappeared in Argentina between 1975 and 1978.

So far Bonn's efforts at the diplomatic and government level have produced no results, although Argentina had said it was prepared to cooperate. Lately, the Argentine side has been saying that the fate of these people was uncertain and that they probably were no longer alive.

The spokesman said that, although Bonn did not consider the matter closed, the new Federal Government, like its predecessor, was keenly interested in improving relations with Argentina and Latin America, relations which have been marred by the Falklands war.

FRG PRESS DISCUSSES BERLIN FDP CONGRESS

DW081329 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 8 Nov 82

[From the Press Review]

[Text] Commentators today deal almost exclusively with the Berlin FDP congress that ended yesterday.

The FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: The FDP congress this past weekend has clarified some things, but it hasn't stabilized the party. Despite all the dutiful talk about rapprochement, it has shown that those who are to approach each other are of completely different opinions. The coalition change has cast a clear light on things which up until this fall were hidden behind the will of the FDP with regard to loyal companionship with the SPD. Despite all statements to the contrary, the FDP is a small people's party with -- grossly stated -- two wings, which actually could survive as separate parties if the numerical strength sufficed and if the word liberalism didn't exist as a sentimental collection point, a term interpreted many different ways.

The daily DIE WELT maintains: Is the fatal end threatening now after the manifestation of being torn apart? This picture of the FDP is being persistently disseminated by published opinion. In fact, however, decisions have been made in Berlin which promise the Liberals a chance of recovery or even powerful consolidation. Once the noise has faded away in the coming days, a new and largely optimistic assessment will prevail because Berlin brought about a historic caesura, as very astute leftist observers have formulated it. An unemotional judgement would be that the Free Democrats have reshuffled their top leadership in such a way as to offer Chairman Genscher a safe basis for the coalition with the Union parties.

The RHEINISCHE POST of Duesseldorf notes: The 400 FDP delegates were not in such a position to give an answer to the survival problem of their party that you could clearly ascertain from the results of personnel elections or discussions whether the FDP would nevertheless manage to make a new beginning or be able to recover despite the shrinking process. Still bitter, quarreling and in any case, too occupied with itself, the party will carry on at half speed after Berlin to achieve its aim. If the slim Genscher majority achieves the miracle, of getting what it is calling the entire party over the 5-percent hurdle on 6 March, the chances for the gradual consolidation of a bourgeois-liberal party wouldn't be bad.

The NEUE RHEIN-ZEITUNG of Essen states: The Free Democrats under Hans-Dietrich Genscher's leadership, which was confirmed by a bare but clear majority, demonstrated itself to be a political association for the implementation of the aims and intentions of its chairman. They cannot be the corrective party any longer. They are now nothing but a purebred Genscher party. The current FDP stands on the right of the CDU and it is not too far separated from the CSU in important political fields.

The SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG writes: Hans-Dietrich Genscher has won while inflicting a defeat on his party. He demanded from it what he wanted, and he has taken from it what it had. After this party congress, the FDP is just a shell of its former self -- burnt out and without any drive. Granted, it had difficulties before living with its often irritating so-called left wing, steering without it into a future characterized by unrest and changing values seems almost senseless.

STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG reads as follows: Hans-Dietrich Genscher is the winner of the Berlin FDP congress, but he will be a victor only if the Liberals manage to return to the Bundestag on 6 March. Should the party again fail to take the 5-percent hurdle after Hamburg, Hesse and Bavaria, his days as chairman will be numbered and his critics will celebrate a late masochistic triumph. The chances of the FDP coming through the Bundestag elections are not good at all, and the months until then are still full of internal party risks. The Free Democrats have been shaken too much by the tactically clumsy initiation of the change maneuver and the development of the Berlin congress. The difficult and emotionally loaded replacement process of the social-liberal era and the associated personnel changes would be easier to handle if the party has enough time to consolidate and find a new image. As matters are now, however, many party congress delegates fear that leftist and rightist liberals will wage the election campaign against each other. Insufficient unity, however, is something the voter doesn't forgive a party.

MANNHEIMER MORGEN points out: It was not a division, but a splitting of the party which occurred in Berlin. An important realization in Berlin was it was not the entire social-liberal wing separating from the party, but only its radical, ideologically hardened sector. With Baum, Bonneburger, Hirsch, Funcke, Enderlein and Von Schoeler, the followers of a social-liberal policy will remain linked to the party and its leadership. The quick change to the CDU/CSU still obscures the essential points. Namely, the FDP is returning to the natural principle of becoming acceptable to all democratic parties as a coalition partner. This gives basic political significance to the party congress' approval of the coalition change.

THE AUGSBURGER ALLGEMEINE commentator voices the following opinion: A number of people quit in Berlin, but the founding of the leftist-liberal association is probably not a serious danger. The majority of those assembling there said good-bye to the FDP long ago. In the political setup of the Federal Republic there is no room for two liberal parties. Such politicians as Verheugen, Baum or Von Schoeler know it. They are too clever to link their future to a group of sectarians. Therefore, the actual threat for the FDP is not the split, but resignation.

NUERNBERGER NACHRICHTEN stresses: The 33rd federal FDP congress was certainly an extraordinary political event, not only for the liberals, but for the party system of this republic. It isn't yet clear what the new FDP will look like and where it wants to scrape together new voters beyond the approximate 3 percent of its permanent voters. The party which has been ruling for 13 years at the side of the Social Democrats certainly has shed its old coat. The liberals in favor of a constitutional state had to clear the field for those in favor of economy, the group around Graf Lambsdorff, which after all dominated in Berlin. The FDP Congress was Genscher's getting even with his critics in a cold-hearted way.

AACHENER VOLKSZEITUNG asks: Did the FDP congress bring about a turn to the right? The paper goes on to say: If you view just the Presidium and the Executive Board, you have to say yes. However, those who followed the Saturday noon discussions following the withdrawal of the extreme left, when the usual high level of FDP congress discussions again took place, did not discover a shift to the right. None of the decisions made by the liberals in past years was revised, let alone abandoned. The election program of 1980 is as valid as before. Only the further development desired by Verheugen was hindered to a great extent. Approval of NATO's dual decision and support for the so-called market economy are liberal positions worked out by numerous party congresses during the alliance with the Social Democrats. Decisions of this kind were always taken against a strong minority. The Genscher-Lambsdorff wing, however, managed to prevail with regard to most issues. The FDP has not changed with regard to its contents.

MITTERRAND PRESS CONFERENCE ON THATCHER VISIT

AB091842 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 1130 GMT 9 Nov 82

[French President Francois Mitterrand's press conference following the French-British summit in Paris on 5 November 1982]

[Text] We have just ended this plenary session of the meeting between Great Britain and France. This session enabled us to listen to the outcome of bilateral discussions which had been going on since yesterday between the various ministers, mostly on the issues in question. These discussions are a follow-up of earlier discussions between the prime minister and myself.

These discussions, to use the formal term, were held in an atmosphere of cordiality, but they were not mere formality. In spite of the difficulty we had in dealing with certain issues, we managed to settle them with a common will and a political framework which led us to believe that the discussions of these 2 days and those to follow would lead -- at least it is my hope -- to greater harmony in our efforts.

This harmony has already been achieved in several very important areas, and especially in what one could call general problems of world affairs: East-West relations; certain areas of North-South relations, especially Namibia; the attitude of our two countries toward the United States, particularly the problems posed by the gas pipeline sanctions; certain views on the Third World, particularly the increase in the IMF reserves called for by both governments; and certain decisons relating to the sea and to the right to fish.

Essentially, we spoke of these general external political issues and also of the internal and external life of the EEC. As you know, one can isolate a particular problem which proves to be difficult, which is not solved, but it will continue to [words indistinct] since 1980 different agreements. We did not agree on the principles. We are still discussing them. To be specific, the discussions are not on the principle of contribution; but on its amount and duration, and even to an extent on what one thinks of it.

Is the matter under consideration about a new institution or a new regulation? -- in this case France opposes it. Or is it about a temporary difficulty that should be overcome? However, we have identical views on several issues such as the international negotiations on the GATT and the continuation of the talks within the so-called Versailles group with regard to intervention in the foreign exchange market.

On the pure problem of trade, we have a common desire -- it will be expressed -- to examine in detail what one could call rampant protectionism being resorted to by all the Community's member countries and by all the industrialized countries toward one another inside and outside the Community.

We talked about equalizing contributions, an issue which was also examined by the ministers of economy and finance and those of agriculture. In the sphere of agriculture itself, we examined one or two delicate problems which you are thinking of.

Research and industry: Several points allow us to increase our cooperation -- this is, in any case, my desire. We talked about the Airbus, aircraft engines, automotive equipment, telecommunications, the iron and steel industry, nuclear power stations and nuclear breeders. The level of progress is unequal, but we have a common desire.

Finally, to enable the talks to continue and yield fruit, we have decided to improve the nature of our discussions and therefore our relations. Every month, delegates from our governments will hold meetings either in London or Paris and make a report to their heads of state and governments. This will make it possible for us to keep a close watch on the progress in our affairs, the extent of the identity of our views on the existing disputes, as well as assess the smooth running of our common affairs in most areas.

I have appreciated the visit to France by the United Kingdom's prime minister along with several of her ministers. We received them as we want to receive our visitors whenever they are from the great, friendly country. The frankness prevailing in our talks can't help but contribute to the progress in our relations.

[Question] Mr President, has France removed its reservations in respect to the agreement on the 1982 budget?

[Answer] Please excuse me -- I will answer your question -- and allow me to express my opinion on the resolution submitted to the United Nations about what we call in French the "malouines" which others call the "Falklands." But I think we are talking about the same thing. I expressed mu view in a communique published by the government yesterday before Mrs Thatcher's arrival in Paris. This was not specially meant to give a positive beginning to our discussions. This was because the debates at the United Nations were to commence in just a few hours. The coincidence was opportune but it was mere coincidence because I did not wish France's position to be examined during our discussions. Anyway, we were not asked to do so. I intended this to be France's position on a major world issue, and it is certain that France's views are not the same as those of Great Britain. As a matter of fact, we believe that calling on the parties concerned -- now antagonistic parties -- to promptly begin negotiations corresponds to our view. Also, we believe that the UN secretary general can undertake a good offices mission.

After expressing our approval of two fundamental questions to which I have just referred, what made us disagree with the resolution is that the way in which the document was drafted implied a conclusion which laid the blame on Great Britain in a matter which had been subject to negotiations between Argentina and Great Britain for a long time and which the Republic of Argentina sought to temporarily settle by forceful means. Even if the recourse to force did not end up in its favor, this did not, however, result in an established right. If one should speak of a right -- in this regard, France's and Britain's positions are not identical -- this must at least be arrived at within the framework of peaceful negotiations and mutual respect. Anything likely to prejudge the solution to that question in a resolution aimed at conciliating the points of view cannot be acceptable to us. At the beginning of our meeting I made this clear to the prime minister.

On the issue of contributions, one must consider that the amount, the figures, which were debated and accepted in May and which were repeated quite recently, are the correct ones, at least for this year. We did not agree upon the subsequent conditions raised by a certain number of (?"unbelievers"), as it is colloquially said. Let us briefly say that a contribution which was set last year [word indistinct] and I repeat -- does not intend to refrain from contributing to remedying a situation in which Great Britain is immersed. In simple terms, we do not want to make a principle out of it -- which differentiates us from Great Britain -- and as I was saying earlier, we do not intend to introduce it on a permanent basis in intercommunity relations.

In this case, Great Britain suggested a period of 7 years; however, we said that 3 years is long enough. We were implying the idea of a declining contribution, which means that we have yet to discuss the amount, which we believe must be reduced. The problem therefore remains unsolved. It is already very important for us to be able to talk about it like this.

[Question] What about this year?

[Answer] For this year the matter has been settled within the framework of the initial agreements that were reached. With respect to the requests for additional contributions and to the new basis for fixing France's extra contribution, we totally reject this because Germany abstains from contributing and other EEC countries say: We cannot make such efforts, so France wil have to do it.

[Question] [Words indistinct] Great Britain following the budgetary agreements of 1980 and how this problem will be solved?

[Answer] I will be very brief on this issue. I think that the reaction of France is the same as Great Britain's. That is to say: honesty. From this viewpoint, Great Britain has no lessons to learn. If it has received too much, well...it will repay. The only remaining issue is the way things will happen. That does not seem debatable to me. The estimates which were made were not exact. They could have been too low but they were too high. That is an explanation which we have not even discussed because we have to make the technicians of these matters aware of the issues, and of course one cannot consider as acquired something that does not correspond to reality.

[Question] Have you begun discussions with Mrs Thatcher on defense and general strategy [words indistinct] with your partners in West Germany?

[Answer] To tell you the truth, we did not discuss these issues very much. Without being too indiscreet, I would say that we discussed it at the beginning of our talks yesterday evening, which proves that it is an issue which interests us since we raised it at the beginning of our talks.

One cannot say that we drew the same conclusions as in Bonn, first for an obvious reason: There is a treaty between the Federal Republic of Germany and France which does not exist between Great Britain and France and does not need to exist since one must not forget that Great Britain and France have been allies during the last two world conflicts, especially the second one. The situations are not comparable. The geographical position of Great Britain and West Germany is not the same either. Also, the fact that Great Britain possesses nuclear weapons and that West Germany does not have the right to possess them also creates a different situation. These situations can therefore not be brought together.

As for holding strategic and military talks between Great Britain and France, this is normal. As I said earlier, when we met in London we said that we would emphasize discussions between military and political technicians. We are continuing to do so and will continue doing so without making it possible to speak of real change. But it is very important for Great Britain and France to share a common determination in such an important issue.

[Question] Does France support the efforts of the British Government aimed at reaching an agreement with the United States on the major principles of trade between the East and the West to permit in exchange, the lifting of the embargo on European companies working on the gas pipelines?

[Answer] I was going to say yes to two thirds of your question, but concerning the last third I will not say "no," but rather will express "reservations as to whether the Western countries which belong to the Atlantic alliance are ready to discuss the conditions to be established for commerical exchanges with Eastern countries, in particular, the Soviet Union. If the exchanges concern technological equipment relating to security, in particular, I will say yes, of course.

France is a partner that has never refused to declare its stand on matters of this kind nor refused to contribute to the mutual defense of the alliance to which it belongs. If the question is to consider that these proposals would lead to a sort of means of exchange which would give the United States I do not know what new concession in exchange for lifting the sanctions, I wonder first whether these sanctions only effect the Soviet Union and Poland -- just to get to the point which makes me ask this question -- or are U.S. sanctions against its own allies? This is a point which is somewhat peculiar and paradoxical.

For my part, I consider that this cannot be subject to any genuine negotiations. The duty of the United States is to withdraw a decision contrary to my country's principles of independence, on which I will of course not compromise.

Let us therefore deal with this issue with common sense. Great Britain and France, as well as other countries are suffering from the unilateral American decision which is unfair, legally contestable and politically inadmissible. Can there be an arrangement? If an arrangement is possible, so much the better, and France will not stand in the way. But if this is in exchange of new concessions in other fields, then it means making what is nonnegotiable, negotiable. Of course, as far as France is concerned, this is impossible.

[Question] Mr President, what impact do you think the abstention of France at the United Nations on the Malvinas issue will have on France's policy on Latin America?

[Answer] This diverts us from the very aim of this meeting. We are not giving a press conference on all problems concerning world affairs. We know the effects. Our policy on Latin America was defined by the fact that in our communique and in the statement of our position presented by our representative to the United Nations, we expressed our agreement with the aim being sought by the resolution and our disagreement with the grounds which motivated this decision. Our partners in Latin America are well-informed people who are often sufficiently well informed on the French language to perfectly notice these shades and understand that if we look for and want peace, if we want what is right to be stated, as much for the interests of Great Britain as for the interests of Latin America, we feel that arbitration, good offices, a solution to this problem cannot mean that the issue is solved before beginning. That is all. We therefore maintain freedom of judgement and we intend to develop our relations with Latin American countries. I believe this abstention will be understood, in any case, we will explain it.

[Question] Mr President, during this France-British summit, did you talk about the admission of Spain to the Common Market now that there is a socialist government in Madrid?

[Answer] We discussed it, and not because there is a Socialist government in Madrid, which however has not yet taken office. We have been talking about it for many years now. The problem we face is the problem of Spain. Certainly when our partner is someone we know, whom we respect, with whom we have friendly relations, this gives a coloring which I believe is positive. But the basic problem is that of Spain, and whatever the government in Spain, we have the same respect for it. It expresses the desire of the same people, who I want to believe are friends. Therefore the development of Spain's internal policy, as interesting as it is to us, is not a condition to change the basis of our position.

[Passage indistinct] These two countries belong to it through history, geography and culture. At the same time it is a sign of stability in a democratic life which has been recovered by these two countries with a great deal of courage. But such an entry presents a certain number of practical questions, as happened and happens with Great Britain.

With respect to trade, the trade patterns of Great Britain and France are not similar. As we have already said, we are still busy resolving some temporary situation which is an effect of the past.

It happens that Spain produces a number of goods that compete with those produced by France, but then this does not apply only to France. We therefore need to harmonize our policies, not only our commercial policies but also our social and fiscal policies. We will need to organize fair competition. It is simply this line of discussion that is needed and I am sure that if this debate is presented in clear and precise terms, and not in confusion as it has too often been the case, it will permit us to make headway. We are therefore not asking the question of the utility or the necessity of Spain's presence in the Common Market, we consider this as something natural.

But we do not want to find ourselves in an unresolved, or badly resolved, situation which would overlook all disputes and create a situation whereby as soon as a decision is reached, France or Spain would be forced to resort to the rule of unanimity -- the harmful extreme -- to assert their rights on often secondary issues. We must make progress through a mutual examination of problems that remain to be solved.

Moreover, I think 2 years ago I wrote on this issue to Mr Thorn, the president of the European Commission, in order to obtain answers to some issues that remained to be resolved in this context. This is the present situation. Now, ladies and gentlemen, thank you. We are not going to transform this quite interesting briefing into a general press conference. Finally, the questions we were asked permitted us to give further details on some delicate issues.

'ALI COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH PLO DELEGATION

NC071240 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1150 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, 7 Nov (MENA) -- Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali said that the PLO is abiding by the Fes summit resolutions and is seeking a comprehensive and peaceful solution to the Palestinian issue. Kamal Hasan 'Ali made this statement at Charles de Gaulle Airport before leaving the French capital. Replying to questions about his impressions of his meeting with a delegation representing the PLO Executive Committee last night, 'Ali said that discussions are currently taking place on the PLO's stand on various initiatives, which include its relations with the other sides, its stand on recognition of Israel as is being linked to the coming negotiations, and the U.S. efforts to include other Arab parties in the negotiations. 'Ali said that in all this, the PLO desires that there be a clear visualization of its role in the coming negotiations as well as a clear visualization by all sides on (?recognition of) the right of self-determination for the Palestinians. He added: "There is no doubt that the PLO's stand is committed in this phase to the hope to speed up a comprehensive solution as soon as possible."

On his visit to the United States, Kamal Hasan 'Ali said that he will arrive in the United States on 11 November and that he will meet with U.S. President Ronald Reagan and U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz. He said that he has a letter for the U.S. President from President Husni Mubarak. He added that the letter pertains to the U.S. efforts on solving the Lebanese crisis, the withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon, the efforts aimed at reaching a comprehensive solution and solving the Palestinian issue, the Tabah question, Egyptian-Israeli relations and U.S.-Egyptian relations.

Kamal Hasan 'Ali attended a dinner banquet last night given in his honor by Egyptian ambassador in Paris Samir Safwat. The banquet was attended by the Palestinian delegation sent by the PLO. The Palestinian delegation is scheduled to leave the French capital later today for Tunis to review the results of its discussions in Paris with PLO leaders.

Discusses Mitterrand Visit

NC071420 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1350 GMT 7 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, 7 Nov (MENA) -- Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali has affirmed that Egypt and France are bound by firm relations and have joint stands on a solution for the Palestinian question.

Commenting on French President Mitterrand's visit to Cairo on 24 November, 'Ali said that consultations are continuing between Presidents Husni Mubarak and Francois Mitterrand and that these consultations will continue during their upcoming meeting.

'Ali said that the Franco-Egyptian discussions will deal with bilateral economic relations, particularly since the volume of trade between them is huge and France is considered to rank third in trade volume with Egypt.

In the comments he made during his 24-hour stopover in Paris en route to Canada and the United States, 'Ali said that the Franco-Egyptian discussions will also deal with the topic of cooperation in the sphere of military production. He said that the appearance of the French Alpha jet -- whose parts were made and assembled in Egyptian factories -- during the Egyptian Air Force Day celebrations is considered a milestone on the path of these relations and indicated the significance of President Mitterrand's visit.

TRUDEAU SPEAKS ON BILATERAL TIES, U.S. MERGER

NC091724 Paris AFP in English 1710 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, Nov 9 (AFP) -- Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau forecast here today that Canada and the United States might one day merge into a single state, the most powerful in the world.

Speaking at a luncheon given in his honor by the French Employers Federation and the France-Canada Chamber of Commerce, Mr Trudeau [words indistinct] faced with "the attraction of the economic and industrial poles of the Pacific nations and the insidious lure of continentalism, the country of culture and language with Europe incontestably constitutes a balancing appeal."

But, he added, "it is not assured that North Americans will always refuse" to make their continent "a single national state or a single integrated economy that would assuredly be the world's biggest, richest and most powerful."

Mr Trudeau, who yesterday began a Three-day official visit to France, described Canada as "perhaps the last great adventure possible in the industrialised world," thanks to its resources and its "commitment to the technological race of the future."

"The potential of Canada-Europe, Canada-France relations," he said, "must not be judged by the modesty of our past successes, nor by the sole evaluation of our old constraints. The challenge of the seventies remains to be taken up."

LE MONDE VIEWS OAU PROBLEMS, SUMMIT POSSIBILITY

PM051257 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Nov 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Saving the OAU"]

[Text] The announcement by the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic [SDAR] that it "will voluntarily and provisionally abstain" from taking part in the forthcoming OAU summit, might solve the serious crisis which the pan-African organization is experiencing, due to the fact that 20 of its member states refuse to recognize the "state" proclaimed by the Polisario. Its admission into the OAU -- sparking off a fierce controversy -- prevented the annual summit, scheduled to take palce in Tripoli at the beginning of August, from taking place because a two-thirds quorum was not achieved.

There is now talk of finally convening that conference in the Libyan capital on 23 November. Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, president of the host country, would then succeed Kenyan President Moi as head of the pan-African organization for just 8 months before passing the position to Mr Sekou Toure in July 1983 at the 20th ordinary summit scheduled to take place in Conakry. If that happens, and it is the most optimistic hypothesis, things would be restored to order and the OAU, the form of pan-Africanism, would merely have experienced a serious but surmountable test this year.

Indeed, we have not yet reached that point. First the SDAR's "temporary" withdrawal, under pressure from its African protectors, notably Algeria, does not, in its view or theirs, call into question its status as a "full member state" of the OAU. Second, the compromise drawn up by the states with the job of solving the crisis (Congo, Libya, Mali, Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia) makes provision for Morocco to promise to go to Tripoli and to accept the holding of a self-determination referendum on the former Spanish Sahara before the Conakry summit.

The Moroccans have not, at least not yet, given any official reaction but are scarcely satisfied with the SDAR's "provisional" withdrawal, although they regard this "change in the Algerian attitude" as "interesting," to cite the expression used by the pro government newspaper LE MATIN. The Istiqlal organ L'OPINION, however, merely sees it as a "subterfuge" and a "maneuver" aimed at "implicitly obtaining general recognition of the so-called SDAR." In short, although the ball is in the Moroccan court once again, it is still difficult to forecast Hassan II's response.

States like Egypt and Sudan remain very hostile to Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's accession to the OAU chairmanship. Their attitude is easy to explain: The Libyan leader further increased his isolation in the Arab world by calling on Mr 'Arafat to "commit suicide" rather than leave Beirut and, more recently, by refusing to take part in the Fes summit on Lebanon.

In addition, Mr al-Qadhdhafi is having difficulty convincing many African heads of state of his peaceful intentions when he is fueling a new rebellion in northern Chad. Mr Goukduni Queddei, his protege and guest and former Chadian head of state who was defeated by Mr Hissein Habre, has just announced the formation of a "provisional government of national salvation" in Tibesti. That is a double challenge to Ndjamena, since the Libyan Army has occupied the Aozou Strip in the extreme north of the country for almost 10 years now.

That shows how difficult the negotiations on the possible convening of a pan-African summit are likely to be in the next few days. Whatever happens, the OAU's dismemberment is not any longer a very likely hypothesis.

MAUROY PLEDGES MILITARY SPENDING ADJUSTMENT

PM091309 Paris LE MONDE in French 7-8 Nov 82 p 7

[Unattributed report: "Mr Mauroy Makes Provision for Some Military Spending To Be 'Adjusted' in 1982"]

[Text] Receiving a delegation from the National Assembly Defense Commission Office on Friday, 5 November, Premier Pierre Mauroy pledged to increase from 11.2 percent to 12 percent the 1982 increase in payment credits for military equipment in the next "finance bill" at the end of the year, with regard to which Commission Chairman Mr Louis Darinot, PS deputy for LA MANCHE, said that there might be an "adjustment" on some military spending.

The deputies intended to draw the government's attention to the effects of cancelling Fr 13.5 billion worth of program authorizations and Fr 3.2 billion worth of payment credits in the 1982 defense budget. The increase in payment credits to 12 percent, taking account of previous cancellations, represents a sum of around Fr 800 million, according to an estimate by the deputies.

According to Mr Darinot, the premier also assured the Defense Commission Office that France's military effort will be maintained at 3.9 percent of the gross domestic commercial product in the next military programming bill for 1984-1988 which is being studied and will be submitted to Parliament for approval in spring 1983.

HERNU DISCUSSES NEUTRON BOMB DEVELOPMENT

NC091550 Paris AFP in English 1545 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, Nov 9 (AFP) -- Defense Minister Charles Hernu today said France was "perfectly capable" of building and deploying the neutron bomb and would even have the necessary launching equipment should French production of the controversial weapon be decided.

Speaking at a press conference here today, Mr Hernu said French tests of the neutron bomb have been "crowned with success" and insisted that all studies and tests of the weapon had been carried out by French scientists and engineers, with no help from the United States.

But he said the decision to build the bomb had not been taken.

"That is in the president's domain, but the question remains the subject of studies to which we are particularly attentive," he said.

Earlier today, in presenting the 1983 defense budget, he said France would continue its nuclear deterrent effort and that despite a 3,300 million franc (about 458 million dollar) out in military spending, was "giving up nothing" in its defense program.

COMMUNIST PARTY REACTIVATES FACTORY CELLS

NC092052 Paris AFP in English 2004 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] Paris, Nov 9 (AFP) -- The French Communist Party has decided to reactivate cells in factories and businesses in a bid to encourage workers to "tackle the economy head-on," Politburo member Jean-Claude Gayssot announced today.

Mr Gayssot said the move would be "entirely independent from the trade union movement."

The Communist-dominated CGT Trade Federation, the largest French labor movement, is already present in all the major French factories and businesses.

For the Communists, Mr Gayssot told the press in announcing the party Central Committee decision, a solution to the economic crisis must be sought "not in the capital, but within the working class."

He said the idea behind the move to reinstall party cells at worksites was "not to annoy the government," which is dominated by Socialists but contains four Communist cabinet ministers.

Rather, he said, the party plans "to move from an approach based on contestation to an approach which, without dropping any demands, is careful to propose realistic solutions, immediate actions."

Affirming that the efforts "of the rightwing and capital are not without effect on government policy" and that "workers are worried and discontent," he said the Communists "do not want the experience of the left in power to be without a future" and called on the government to honor its commitments.

PREMIER LACKED 'DETACHMENT' IN U.S. TALKS

PM091249 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 5 Nov 82 pp 1, 6

[Sandro Viola Dispatch. "One Embrace Too Many Between Reagan and Spadolini"]

[Excerpts] Washington, 4 November -- Spadolini's U.S. visit demands an overall assessment, a second appraisal following the one hinted at in yesterday's report. How did the visit go? What emerged from the talks with Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz? What is the Western superpower's image of us?

Reporters who saw him yesterday on the White House lawn under the warm sun of the Indian summer have the image of a radiant and most satisfied Spadolini. As we know, however, this is not a decisive indication of the result of the U.S. meetings. Spadolini is in fact an enthusiastic person (or at least, so he usually seems) and therefore one cannot draw conclusions from the way he looks concerning the events in which he is participating. His cheerfulness is not only usual and therefore rather indicative, it is actually inscrutable.

What did emerge from the day at the White House yesterday is fairly clear. However great U.S. cordiality, there is an evident intent to address a simple and precise message to the Spadolini government, as long as it lasts, and to its successors -- that the United States considers Italy, as the WASHINGTON POST writes today, "a pillar of U.S. policy interests in Europe and elsewhere," and therefore does not want any gray areas in Rome-Washington relations. U.S. administrations may have disagreements with French and even -- as happened in recent years with Helmut Schmidt -- German governments; but they do not want to argue with Italian governments, because friendship with Italy is of a very special kind, shaped over the past 40 years of our uninterrupted and unshakable (not to mention subservient) loyalty to the United States.

Furthermore, the approach adopted yesterday to the issue of the four rotors which General Electric was due to supply to Nuovo Pignone (subsequently halted by the sanctions imposed by Reagan on European industries working on the Siberian gas pipeline) says a great deal about the Americans' state of mind. Rotors and sanctions? These are controversies that apply to the other allies, not to the Italians. Indeed, the U.S. hosts told Spadolini and Colombo that whether or not a withdrawal of sanctions is reached, Nuovo Pignone will have its rotors.

Of course such shows of friendship from the United States cannot fail to please. Among other things, so much friendliness reveals the anxiety felt by Washington over the past year over certain shows of greater Italian autonomy from the major allies' policies. So there is another cause for satisfaction. We have acted more independently than usual, and this is prompting the United States to resume and multiply its demonstrations of sympathy.

Having said this, however, it remains to be seen how Spadolini and Colombo responded to the enveloping U.S. embrace. With moderate satisfaction? With the modicum of detachment of an ally that has just suffered a serious wrong (the unilateral sanctions imposed by Washington)? Taking care not to jeopardize in any way solidarity with the other European partners, to which the Americans do not for the time being intend to give even half a rotor?

The impression is that the Italian delegation lacked the necessary detachment and moderation. They responded to the embrace with an even more cordial embrace. What do the Americans want in exchange for the withdrawal of sanctions: A new approach to, a new view of economic relations with the communist East? Italy agrees. It matters little that Italy is involved, together with its other partners of the industrialized West (including France, the FRG and Britain, all of which are directly affected by the gas pipeline issue), in difficult discussions with the Americans on this "new approach," on what kind of change to impart to trade with the USSR. Giovanni Spadolini considers the discussion closed, to some extent.

So we see in our prime minister's statement following his meeting with Reagan the "three points" of the policy of "greater economic stringency in relations with the Eastern bloc," restrictions on credit and technology transfers and a commitment to "reduce dependence on raw materials and energy products" exported from the communist world -- no more and no less than the points contained in a draft document that the Americans have been trying for weeks to make the Europeans accept, but which the Europeans have hitherto refused to accept. Only Spadolini has forced the pace, perhaps believing in good faith that he can succeed in the next few days in persuading our European partners that this is the only way to end the tensions that have emerged within the alliance. But will he succeed?

Italy has probably gone too far in its desire to patch up the problems between Europe and the United States; too much drive, too much cordiality and too much optimism in the role as mediator. This, while many indications over the past year have shown that, all in all, an element of internal dialectic, an attitude of equal-based negotiation, do not harm the alliance. Indeed, they make it more dignified for the major ally's partners.

U.S. PRESSURES POPE ON NUCLEAR MORATORIUM STAND

AU091958 Rome ANSA in English 1935 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Vatican City, November 9 -- The Vatican declined to comment today on American press reports that the Reagan administration has put pressure on the Pope to "soften" the anti-nuclear position of the American Bishops Conference.

According to the WASHINGTON POST, a recent audience the pope granted to Vernon Walters, former deputy director of the CIA, was directed at convincing the pope to intervene with the Ameircan bishops and prevent approval of a pastoral letter calling for a moratorium on nuclear weapons. The letter, which is not yet in final draft form, condemns any kind of use of nuclear armaments, especially against civilian populations. The majority of Ameircan bishops has come out strongly against nuclear weapons.

Vatican sources are following common practice and have released no details of Pope John Paul II's meeting with Walters which took place on October 18. By making the date public, the Holy See indirectly denied that their meeting was "secret," as claimed by the WASHINGTON POST.

According to the [word indistinct] the results of the meeting woudl be a modification of the moratorium proposal and, therefore, a less critical position against the Reagan adminsitration.

COLOMBO TO MEET DRAPER, AL-JUMAYYIL IN BEIRUT

AU091942 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Excerpt] (ANSA) -- Rome, November 9 -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo left Rome today for a 24-hour fact-finding mission in Beirut where he will have talks with President Amin al-Jumayyil, Lebanese Government leaders and U.S. Mideast Envoy Morris Draper.

The three main issues of Colombo's talks in Beirut will be the state of negotiations on withdrawal of Syrian and Israeli troops from Lebanon, up-to-date information on the Lebanese request to expand and extend the current multinational peace-keeping force in Beirut, and an examination of what contribution Italy can make to reconstruction of the country after 7 years of civil strife.

Colombo will meet shortly after his arrival this afternoon with Morris Draper. Later he will confer with his Lebanese counterpart Elie Salim who is also deputy prime minister.

Tomorrow the Italian minister will visit the Italian contingent of the multinational force and afterwards resume talks with the U.S. envoy and with Saum. He will then meet with Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzan and, separately, with President Al-Jumayyil. Colombo is slated to return to Rome tomorrow evening.

FORMICA EVALUATIONS, PREDICTIONS ON POLICY

PM091647 Rome LA REPUBLICA in Italian 5 Nov 82 p 3

[Italian Finance Minister Rino Formica Interview by Giampaolo Pansa in Rome, date not specified]

[Excerpts] Rome -- [Question] We have had a full measure of despondency and Italy seems close to bankruptcy. Do you share this view?

[Answer] Let us try to be rational. We have rightly attached great importance to the economic policy maneuver and to the agreement between the social partners on labor costs. They are the two cornerstones of the bridgehead that should enable us to reach the shore of relative tranquillity. What is actually happening, however? The opposition, naturally, maintains a critical stance. But what about the majority? Regarding the effects of the maneuver, all we see within the government majority are polemics, disputes and mistrust.

[Question] If only that were all....

[Answer] Of course, there is more. I am sorry if I appear to be one of those people that are always criticizing somebody, but I cannot avoid mentioning Andreatta. When the treasury minister, who is guarantor of the economic maneuver submits an urgent measure for examination such as his famous wage-price freeze, well, he is presenting a scenario for resolving the problems entirely different from the one which we all perceived and jointly decided on.

[Question] Do you mean that this creates disorder in government action?

[Answer] Yes. However, it is also caused in other ways. For instance, when a ceiling is set on public spending with full knowledge that this figure omits certain unavoidable requirements totaling several trillion lire, such as government contributions to welfare payments or the 5-6 trillion lire supplement to the National Social Security Institute's budget, then there is reason to ask the treasury minister: Are you guarantor of the maneuver or what? And that is not the only question.... Andreatta should be well aware that a real-income policy requires not only a wage-price freeze but several other things too: A freeze on profits, the control of raw material imports and a lowering of interest rates. Moreover, all this must be carried out very quickly if one wants the remedy to be effective. Additionally, in this very brief period one should also carry out what I call the grand pact of our public debt. Frankly, it would be quicker to carry out a revolution.

[Question] Do you mean that Andreatta's recipe is simply a provocation?

[Answer] All I am saying is that the government has chosen a long and perhaps unpredictable road, but with prospects of a soft landing, attempting to coexist with the effects of inflation and counting on the social partners' sense of responsibility. We are trying to follow this path. But if even within the government, people immediately start saying: "The time scale is too long; We will never make it." Then new problems are constantly created with a risk of no solution being found unless ....

[Question] Do you suspect something, Minister?

[Answer] Yes, I suspect that Andreatta's recipe conceals a harmful ulterior motive. Since the maneuver decided on by the government is unfeasible, there is no other solution than to leave the general confederation of Italian industry free to use heavy-handed methods.

If this idea exists, I reject it! Its implementation would lead to a social conflict of such dimensions that it would require authoritarian measures, although I do not see what forces could pass them in parliament, and unless authoritarian measures are expected, it means that the hope is for something else.

[Question] The dissolution of the trade unions?

[Answer] Precisely. Certain extreme remedies are aimed at precisely this. They aim to replace national contracts with myriad agreements at the factory level, agreements reached in an atmosphere of each man for himself, with employers signing good contracts in successful companies while throttling the rest. This is an evil policy that would set us back many years.

[Question] You talk about the long term. Perhaps this is a luxury that we can no longer afford....

[Answer] That is what worries us too. That is why we proposed early elections in August. It was not to obtain a national confirmation of the success that the PSI was already gathering here and there. We wanted to counter the extreme disintegration, the falling-apart of governments, the disputes within the majority and the paralyzing situation in which, despite the emergence of so many new and grave problems, all the political forces lack a precise mandate from the voters on how to tackle them. However, the election did not take place and the final outcome is now evident to all.

[Question] The scenario also conflicts wiht the optimism displayed by the PSI over the months....

[Answer] What optimism? If the PSI is open to a charge, it is that we are neither optimistic nor pessimistic. However, since 1976 we have freed ourselves from the molds that fettered us.

[Question] How were you before the Craxi era?

[Answer] In the PSI there reigned a pragmatism entirely centered on day-to-day affairs, minor matters, localized and isolated phenomena, and this was all concealed by the extremist posturing of weekend political rallies. During the week the PSI sinned and on Sundays it ranted. Now it is no longer like that. There is a great deal of realism within the party, but it is always part of a broad and far-reaching outlook.

[Question] Could you be more specific.

[Answer] The things that we Socialists manage to do every day do count, but they are only really important if they prepare for the future. One very clear example of what I am talking about are our relations with the PCI and the DC. With regard to the PCI, we are experiencing the present split in a particular manner; that is, with a view to a future reformist unity. With the DC we are experiencing our present unity with a view to a future split. Is that clear?

[Question] Is the present government equal to the gravity of the problems?

[Answer] You see, to be strong, a government needs solid, consistent and specific backing from its majority. However, what do we see in parliament? The DC considers -- or rather considered -- the second Spadolini government not as "its" government, but as a friendly government. I now have the impression that the DC no longer considers it a friend, but an acquaintance, and probably the DC is moving toward considering it no longer an acquaintance, but a stranger.

[Question] Do you mean that the DC is preparing to "kill" the government?

[Answer] That I do not know. I am telling you what I see and I see that on the important measures there is a tendency to consider government acts as preparatory and not definitive. This could be natural. However it becomes less natural when such an attitude is simply a pretext for challenging the substance of the provision. This is partly what is happening to the finance bill.

PREMIER DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH PRESIDENCY

LD092314 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] At Belem Palace this morning, Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao had a meeting with President Ramalho Eanes, which Pinto Balsemao afterwards described as a very interesting talk on various domestic political matters, namely President Ramalho Eanes' recent nationwide address and the relations between the presidency and the government. They also briefly reviewed relations with Angola and appraised the East Timor issue in view of the fact that the issue will soon come up for voting at the United Nations.

Answering journalists, Pinto Balsemao disclosed that the government is in the process of formalizing the bill seeking to close down the ANOP News Agency before it is sent for parliament's approval. The contents of the bill will be identica o the decree vetoed by President Eanes, he said.

The prime minister also spoke of the forthcoming new labor legislation. Although the government will continue to hold a dialogue with its social partners, he said, in the end a stand will have to be made even if it does not please either the Greeks or the Trojans.

EANES CRITICIZES CONSTITUTIONAL REVISIONS

LD060846 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2030 GMT 5 Nov 82

[Speech by Portuguese President Ramalho Eanes; place not given; live or recorded]

[Excerpts] [Words indistinct] I decided to promulgate the law on the revision of the Constitution. From the political standpoint, the significance of promulgating a law does not go beyond the act of promulgation itself. For this reason, the president of the republic is strictly dutybound to convey to the Portuguese people his political appraisal of the revision carried out and his view of the new framework within which the political process will take place, to clarify his political conduct and give his opinion on the responsibilities entailed by the new constitutional framework. Only thus can the president of the republic fulfill the political responsibilities which come with the office.

Constitutional revisions should be political acts accompanied by profound reflection, as advised by good sense and demanded by democracy. They provide an ideal opportunity to assess the experience amassed in political life. For this reason, and by virtue of their importance and their democratic symbolism, constitutional revisions should be processes of total democratic participation. They should provide ideal opportunities for a public debate on general political issues, serving as foundations for a critical appraisal of the past and for a convincingly sound mapping out of the future course. At the end of such a careful process of collective participation and political negotiation, they should produce a framework of norms that strengthen the practice of democracy and advance the realization of the great national goals.

The process of revising our Constitution did not fulfill these general criteria. Limited negotiations among party leaders at times took precedence over parliamentary debate. The arguments put forward by each side and the exact significance of each of the changes proposed and approved, therefore, never became fully known. With a strictness that was in itself significant, there was recourse to the party whip in the votes on the most relevant issues.

Limited and insufficient, the political debate on revising the Constitution ended up by favoring a particular type of issue such as the system of areas of jurisdiction of the different organs of sovereignty and, especially, changing the powers of the president of the republic.

This final turn taken by the revision process cannot but be regarded as surprising if you recall the numerous controversies that the Constitution has given rise to since 1976.

These debates were centered on the doctrinaire and ideological burden of the Constitution, on the role of the Council of the Revolution and on the limitations or conditions that the Constitution was said to impose on economic and social policy. There were even attempts to prove that all or some of these aspects of the Constitution should be seen as real obstacles to the rapid and efficient resolution of the major national problems.

At least as late as mid-1981, the question of the powers of the president of the republic was not regarded as a vitally important issue to the consolidation of democracy nor as the essential subject of the revision of the Constitution. On the contrary, the political forces that supported the Democratic Alliance candidate in the presidential elections advocated, at least until 1980, that the powers of the president of the republic be increased in the constitutional revision that was to follow those elections.

I, on the other hand, advocated in my election campaign that said powers remain unchanged just as defined in the existing Constitution, and I entered into the agreements that I deemed politically adequate and sufficient for attaining that goal.

Notwithstanding all this, the constitutional revision amounted to changing the powers of the president of the republic and to preserving, in essence, all the other constitutional provisions that had been the subject of controversy. While it is true that the Council of the Revolution is dissolved, it is no less true that this change is not the subject of debate since it was actually stipulated in the Constitution itself.

In short, the revision did not respond to the known criticisms leveled at the Constitution nor did it change what was said to be in need of revision. Instead, preference was given to debatable innovations, some of them so surprising and so original that even their originators proposed several different interpretations of the new constitutional provisions.

It therefore remains to be seen whether some of the solutions arrived at in the process are those that can best guarantee the realization of the democratic goals.

It is important that it should be made clear that as far as the president of the republic is concerned, it is of little interest to discuss whether the revision increased or reduced the presidential powers. In general terms, what is important is to ascertain whether the enhancement of the parliamentary component and the inherent [words indistinct] of the distribution of powers are the most advantageous to elicit democratically adequate answers to the major questions confronting Portuguese society.

The least that can be said is that this strengthening of the parliamentary component has not been the result of any proposals sufficiently elaborated on and debated since 1976 or put forward during the election campaigns of 1980.

But the revision has come into effect and we must appraise the practical significance of some of the changes introduced in the new constitutional framework to which our political actions will be subordinated in order to clarify situations, responsibilities and openings toward possible new solutions.

Within the new constitutional framework, the prime minister becomes politically accountable to Parliament. In the present Constitution, the accountability of the prime minister and of the government to the president of the republic has lost the qualification of "political," a fact that has led some to attribute an institutional character to this accountability. The meaning of institutional accountability is not clear; to some it covers all other types of accountability and therefore is a broader concept than the old political accountability; to others, particularly to the present parliamentary majority, institutional accountability has nothing in common with nor is it superior to political accountability.

In view of these differing interpretations, one would be justified in thinking that from a technical standpoint, the solution falls somewhat short of perfection.

In political terms, the true meaning of this innovation soon becomes clear when you take into account other aspects also affected by the revision. In effect, the president of the republic no longer has the power to freely relieve the prime minister of his functions which had been one of his specific and autonomous powers up to now. By virtue of the Constitutional revision, he can only dismiss the government to ensure the normal functioning of the democratic institutions. The dismissal of the government by the president of the republic requires the prior consideration of the Council of State whose ruling on the matter will be published simultaneously with the presidents. Should the Council of State conclude that the president of the republic is wrong to want to dismiss the government because in the council's opinion no threat exists to the normal functioning of the democratic institutions, and should the president of the republic, as is his right, persist with his intention, then to the implicit situation of conflict will be added the public character of an institutional difference of opinions between president and council.

The dismissal of the prime minister at the president of the republic's initiative has thus ceased to be a constitutionally admissible means of seeking to bring about government alternatives, even within the parliamentary majority itself. An extra emphasis has been added and a qualitative change introduced by giving the dismissal of the government a characteristic of conflict.

Obviously this new political reality will not prevent the president of the republic from dismissing the government should he believe that its actions are not in keeping with the (?overall) requirements of democracy.

The change in the president of the republic's powers concerning the dissolution of Parliament is also worthy of note. It is true that the Council of State's ruling on this matter is not binding on the president. But over half the members of the Council of State are, in one way or another, connected with the Parliament to be dissolved. The president's decision to dissolve Parliament against a ruling of the Council of State is only politically justified if there is a well-grounded belief that the ensuing election would be likely to produce different results. In other words, clear signs are required of different voting intentions, of new alliances or of new organizations emerging in the party political system.

In these circumstances, the dissolution of Parliament becomes less and less an instrument for seeking new political solutions and increasingly a mere method for confirming political solutions arrived at prior to the dissolution.

The entire revision of the Constitution is pervaded by a concern with concentrating political decisionmaking on a party political basis. The very powers of the president, as conceived therein, are geared to this.

The revision of the Constitution has pushed those politically independent even further to the sidelines and has deprived them of their political significance when they occupy or run as candidates for posts of national importance. Bearing in mind the normal conditions of stable democratic life, this changed situation might make it advisable or even necessary to search for new forms of organized political expression. This is a topical question in our political life.

I take the view that the balance of powers reflected by the Constitution prior to its revision was more adequate to an economic, political and social situation that increasingly demands a joining of efforts in which the diversity reflected by the various political parties would nevertheless be respected, indeed strictly respected. This is a situation that will increasingly demand a regulating and stabilizing role for the democratic institutions.

I further take the view that the former allocation of areas of jurisdiction was more in keeping with the fact that the president of the republic is elected by direct and universal suffrage and with the inferences that the voter naturally draws from that fact.

On the other hand, it is true that very different political realities may correspond to legal formulas. In other words, it is admissible that in the context of a true change of jurisdictions, and with the consensus of the very forces that have just seen fit to approve such a change, the president's role may be strengthened.

But let not those responsible for the revision of the Constitution start at this moment to demand the dismissal of the government without declaring and proving that the normal functioning of the democratic institutions is in danger and that such a dismissal not only will make it possible to remove the said danger, but will indeed ensure the regular functioning of the aforesaid institutions. Let not those responsible for the revision of the Constitution clamor for the dissolution of Parliament without providing sufficient guarantees that conditions exist for new political solutions, that they are prepared to consider them and that they will successfully undertake the necessary negotiations.

As far as I am concerned, I wish to declare that, faithfully observing the Constitution as I have always done and have just proved by promulgating its revision, I shall not shirk the democratic responsibilities I have assumed before the country.

My critical appraisal of the constitutional revision does not prevent me from recognizing its positive aspects, with particular reference to its faithfulness to the principles of the state of law, the strengthening of the guarantees of the individual and the confirmation of the autonomy of the guarantees of the individual, and the confirmation of the autonomy of the insular regions. Likewise, I wish to emphasize the observance by the Assembly of the Republic of the fundamental guidelines legally laid down for the process of revision.

Such being my political appraisal, it is right and reasonable that I should be asked why, within the context of my responsibilities and my area of jurisdiction, I allowed the revision of the Constitution to develop in the way that it did.

I did not dissolve this Parliament because I scrupulously respect my undertakings. I became a presidential candidate after this Parliament had been elected with powers to revise the Constitution. During the election campaign, I never questioned the legitimacy of the parliamentary election or the powers invested in the deputies. I would never take advantage of my electoral victory nor of the legitimacy and powers with which it invested me to curb the actions of these parliamentarians unless an immediate threat to the democratic regime emerged.

Furthermore, I always said that the president of the republic should promulgate the revision of the Constitution provided that it respected the constitutional norms on how to carry it out. Since these norms were complied with, the revision has been promulgated and all of us, without exception, are dutybound to abide by the new constitutional framework.

With the political power that they saw fit to concentrate in their hands by means of the revision of the Constitution, the political parties, and especially those of which the majority responsible for the revision is comprised, now find themselves directly confronted with the Portuguese people and their problems. This is the result of their expressed political intention, which is patent in the kind of revision they have chosen.

The constitutional framework within which I shall be exercising by duties has thus changed substantially. But one essential political reality remains unchanged; in terms of democratic legitimacy and in terms of the reality of the facts, my responsibility to the Portuguese people, my responsibility for ensuring the continuity of our democratic life, remains unchanged.

Thus I shall devote permanent critical attention to all political acts in general and to government acts in particular. The government's concrete political action in the shape of the laws it approves will remain subject to the president of the republic's political scrutiny. In these circumstances, I shall exercise my right to veto legislation with greater strictness.

Since the question of the president of the republic's political confidence in the prime minister no longer clearly arises, my veto on legislation will naturally lose the nature of an exceptional step.

In the new political situation, it is necessary that all the Portuguese be acquainted with the president of the republic's stand on all controversial decisions and the reasons for it.

Consistent with my political notions and my democratic responsibilities, I shall not deny my contribution to the creation and development of such political solutions as are adequate to the national needs.

Whenever a situation may arise when democratic rights cannot be fully and effectively exercised, whenever institutional relationships fail to abide by the norms of democratic accountability and honesty, I shall resort to all the instruments placed at my disposal by the Constitution to rectify or prevent such situations. This is a clarification imposed by the new situation so as to prevent any misunderstandings concerning the rules that must be observed by all.

It is now first and foremost up to the parties represented in Parliament, and above all those that make up the majority responsible for the revision of the Constitution, to prove the quality and viability of the norms they have devised by providing solutions that will change the situation, that will raise new hopes and realize democracy. It is indispensable and urgent that they should provide convincing proof, in the form of the right policies, that Portugal and the Portuguese are not fated to mediocrity nor to poverty.

My appraisal notwithstanding, the revision of the Constitution will not prevent the proper political practices from enabling the democratic regime to build the path toward uprightness, fraternity and the hopes of April.

I hope that the majority and the opposition may prove capable, within the new constitutional framework, of finding the rational, efficient and just answers to the aspirations of the Portuguese people.

The immediate responsibility of this test lies with the political parties, the government and Parliament. If the results prove insufficient or ineffective, I am certain that other democratic solutions and new political realities will emerge in Portuguese society within the existing constitutional framework.

The commitment that I have assumed before all the Portuguese to guarantee our democratic future demands that I should make it quite clear that, in this constitutional framework, I shall unfailingly be equal to my responsibilities so that democracy may be, to the Portuguese and Portugal, the path of responsible and free choices, the path of change and hope. I shall shirk none of the responsibilities vested in me by the Portuguese to commit myself to the search for adequate political solutions. This much is demanded by democracy and by my commitments to the Portuguese.

Balsemao Reaction

LD062306 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1800 GMT 6 Nov 82

[Excerpts] The National Council of the Social Democratic Party [PSD] has been in session in Cascais (near Lisbon) since this morning. Here is Dr Nascimento Rodrigues, deputy chairman of the PSD, who will give a progress report on the meeting so far.

[Begin recording] The meeting began with a lengthy exposition by the party chairman, Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao, who analyzed the overall political situation and the party's internal situation.

Concerning the general political situation, the party chairman analyzed the address broadcast yesterday by the president of the republic. He described it as the speech of a bitter and disenchanted man, with not a single word devoted to rallying the Portuguese or to enhancing their democratic awareness. On the contrary, the party chairman saw in this address a criticism of the democratic parties.

This criticism cannot be accepted, since it was thanks to the democratic parties that the revision of the Constitution became possible. The party chairman also drew attention to the proposals he has submitted to the president of the republic in his capacity as prime minister. These proposals are aimed at establishing a sound and correct institutional relationship between the two offices such as will bring the country the political stability and confidence it needs to overcome the economic crisis. Still in this connection, he pointed out that he has not had any reply from the president to his proposals; namely, to the invitation he has extended to the president to chair the next meeting of the council of ministers, which will approve the general state budget.

Next the party chairman went on to analyze the political situation in the opposition parties. He emphasized the major defeat that the revision of the Constitution has represented to the PCP, and also the major setback suffered by the Spanish Communist Party in the last elections. He stressed that the PCP is no longer capable of mobilizing the masses and for this reason is adopting new tactics that have come to light in situations like the recent incidents at the Lisnave shipyards and the Siderurgia metal factory. He sees this as proof that the PCP has lost its mobilizing capacity. [end recording]

MOZAMBIQUE REBELS RELEASE KIDNAPPED CITIZENS

[Text] Seven Portuguese citizens kidnapped by Mozambique rebels a month ago in Mozambique's Manica Province were released today in (Chipunga) on the Zimbabwean side of the Mozambique border. Although they are under medical care as a precautionary measure, the seven are apparently in good health and have since been taken to Mutare, formerly Umtali, where they have been lodged in a hotel. Their names are Orlando Martins, Jose Antonio de Jesus Antunes, Aloino Ferreira da Costa Pinto, Maria Amelia Pereira, Maria de Fatima Diogo e Antunes, Maria Eufemia de (name indistinct] Goncalves Pinto and Maco Bruno Antunes.

Meanwhile, a representative of the Mozambique rebels said in Lisbon today that the rebels had shot down a Mozambique Government helicopter causing the death of two Soviet advisers. However, in Maputo it was thought unlikely that the helicopter was shot down but that it had more probably crashed due to a mechanical fault.

BERG ON FRG TALKS ON PIPELINE, NATO MISSILES

PM091611 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Nov 82 p 8

[Nils Morten Udgaard Dispatch: "Germany Counting on Norwegian Gas in the Next Decade"]

[Text] Bonn, 4 Nov -- The West Germans see Norway as a "possible supplier of natural gas and a real alternative to a second gas pipeline from Siberia, Norwegian Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Eivinn Berg told AFTENPOSTEN after talks in Bonn Wednesday and Thursday [3, 4 November].

The United States and the four EEC nations affected are "well on their way to a compromise" on the controversial Siberian pipeline that will be ready in 1984. The compromise is not expected to include a formal promise that the West Europeans will not participate in a second pipeline from Siberia, but there is a possibility of this, and the West Germans have not tried to conceal the fact that they want to spread their imports for strategic and trading reasons, Berg said. Bonn has made particular note of Norwegian Prime Minister Kaare Willoch's statement at the NATO summit in June that Norway could increase its gas exports to Western Europe in the 1990's. At the same time, Germany fully understands the technical and political considerations which Norway must take into account in its energy policy, Berg stressed. He is the first Norwegian representative to make contact with the 5-week old Kohl administration in Bonn on the political level. He has met two of the Foreign Ministry's secretaries of state, Alois Mertes and Berndt von Staden, and their colleague Lothar Ruehl of the Defense Ministry. The NATO duel decision was a central theme at the talks. The West Germans view the possibility of an agreement in Geneva with optimism, but do not expect any results before the twelfth hour -- toward the end of next year -- once Moscow has made full use of its propaganda opportunities. This is why it is important to keep to the dual decision's timetable, it was stressed in Bonn.

The West Germans are no longer attempting to conceal the fact that the initial ground preparations have begun for the possible deployment of nuclear arms in West Germany -- if the Geneva negotiations are without result.

Berg also had talks with leading Social Democrat opposition circles and received assurances that the party will go to the polls on the platform of continued support for the dual decision's timetable.

PAPER BACKS LABOR PARTY STAND ON MISSILE FUNDS

PM081021 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 29 Oct 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Atoms and Missiles"]

[Text] The danger of a nuclear war hangs like a threatening cloud over mankind. The fear of nuclear arms has gradually been transformed into popular efforts to save the world from such a ragnarok (goetterdaemmerung/Armageddon). We ourselves live in a part of the world where these popular efforts grow and grow. At the present time there is hardly anything which concerns people more than the struggle against nuclear arms and for peace and disarmament.

The deep and widespread popular support for these efforts means that all demarches and political contributions which can be placed in the nuclear arms context are given much attention. This does not mean that everything possesses the same degree of importance whether it comes from Norwegian politicians, Washington or our NATO partners. Some of the demarches can also have more of a confusing effect than a clarfiying one. We believe that in such questions it is important to keep a cool head and be aware of certain realities.

At the present moment, much of this debate is concentrated on two issues -- the allocation of funds to prepare for the deployment of new nuclear missiles in West Europe and reports from Washington that the U.S. forces that will come to Norway's rescue in a war will have nuclear arms with them. This latter issue is also connected with the debate on contingency stockpiling in Norway.

It is perfectly clear that the agreement Norway has made with the United States on contingency stockpiling does not mean that the Americans are able to bring nuclear arms into Norwegian territory on their own responsibility. The text of the agreement particularly stresses that it does not alter Norwegian base and nuclear policy. In a war situation, it is the Norwegian authorities who will decide whether allied forces will be allowed to have or use nuclear arms from Norwegian territory. Norwegian nuclear policy merely means that nuclear arms will not be stationed here in peacetime. The question of agreements which also apply in a war situation is connected with the whole complex of questions surrounding a nuclear-free zone, something which currently remains to be clarified.

We do not have the necessary information to assess to what extent the Americans transport nuclear arms with them when they move around the world. However, there is reason to believe that this happens to a much greater extent than most of us realize. In this respect, we do not believe that the Americans are much different from other superpowers. It is not much more than a year since it became known that a certain submarine aground off the coast of Sweden had nuclear arms on board, and this despite the fact that the submarine was small and of obsolete design. The most important thing for us, however, is the assurances that it is the Norwegian authorities who will decide if we are to have nuclear arms in Norway. Former Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg has said that if the U.S. marines come to Norway with nuclear arms without our requesting them, they will be breaking the contingency stockpiling agreement. The agreement we have entered into is clear in other words, and we assume that we will be able to adhere to it.

Proposing that the Storting allocate funds earmarked for preparations for the deployment of the new NATO missiles in Europe, the Willoch government has set the scene for a confrontation with the Labor Party. The Labor Party will adhere to what has always been Norwegian policy on such questions, and which should continue to be Norwegian policy. As long as several of the countries directly affected, primarily Belgium and the Netherlands, have not reached any decision on the deployment or granted funds for that purpose, it is wrong of Norway to lead the way as a spearhead. Showing greater restraint in such a situation is not an attempt to wriggle out of NATO commitments, but is in harmony with Norway's security policy traditions. We note with interest that the Conservative Party's moves in this area have also met with skepticism in NATO headquarters in Brussels. There, the obvious view is that through its move, the Norwegian Government has created too much unnecessary NATO disquiet.

The Labor Party is firmly adhering to its position on this issue. There is no "crafty way" for the government to reach a compromise. The only chance of ensuring agreement on the issue is for the government to accept a postponement.

EDITORIAL ON U.S. NUCLEAR FREEZE REFERENDA

PM091609 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 5 Nov 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Apple Pie or Bombs"]

[Text] Among the results of Tuesday's U.S. Congressional elections there is one which will produce echoes far beyond the American Continent -- the U.S. people's call to the United States and the Soviet Union to freeze their nuclear arsenals and not develop any new weapons.

In 9 of the 50 states and in a number of cities, referenda were introduced along with the elections to give the voters the opportunity to say 'yes' or 'no' to a proposal to reject nuclear arms. The referenda were a major success for those actively opposed to nuclear arms. Only in one of the states and in three lesser cities did the voters say 'no' to the antinuclear arms resolutions put to them. In addition, the election of a new House of Representatives resulted in the election of several nuclear arms opponents over politicians who supported President Reagan's nuclear arms policy. It is likely that the outcome of the referenda -- the largest ever held in the United States — will be frequently cited around the world. However, their importance should not be exaggerated.

The states where the voters expressed their views on Tuesday earlier on the complicated question of nuclear arms, have only one-fourth of the U.S. population. Not unexpectedly, the victors' proclamations are stating that one-fourth of the U.S. people came out against the administration's defense program. It is doubtful however, whether we should speak of a "crushing victory" for nuclear arms opponents. Only 38 percent of those entitled to vote took part in Tuesday's elections and referenda.

Nor are we dealing with a uniform referendum. The questions put to the voters were different in different places. While the resolutions in several states were couched in cautious language calling on the U.S. Administration to "negotiate energetically with the Soviet Union and other countries for a bilateral nuclear freeze and suitably verifiable reduction in the number of arms," elsewhere the nuclear arms issue was linked with proposals for social programs. It was like confronting the U.S. voter with the choice between apple pie and nuclear arms. In such a situation, the answer is known.

The White House, which has been pursuing an intensive campaign against the freeze slogans, has also been most cautious in its reaction to the referendum and has refrained from all polemics. It has been explained, however, that a freeze on nuclear arms arsenals at their present level would be to the West's disadvantage, make it militarily vulnerable and increase the risk of war. It is also said that a freeze would also lead to a situation in which Moscow would lose all interest in disarmament negotiations. Finally, it is also pointed out that it is impossible to check whether the Soviet Union really has ceased production of new arms.

Reagan now faces a test period over defense policy. After an intensive campaign, the administration succeeded in preventing the adoption of a resolution by the House of Representatives calling for a nuclear arms freeze. The counterproposal won by only two votes. Following the elections it is uncertain whether the President even has a similar majority. In addition, he will have difficulty in pushing through appropriations for other major arms projects.

'REAL GROWTH' IN DEFENSE SPENDING PLANNED

PM091315 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 9 Nov 82 p 9

[Maj-Gen Edward Fursdon Report: "Defense Cash Increased by 622 Million Pounds"]

[Text] An extra 622 million pounds has been allocated for defence spending next year which allows for the cost of the Falklands, Sir Geoffrey Howe, chancellor, announced yesterday.

The revised defense expenditure estimate figure for 1983/84 has now been raised to 15,900 million pounds.

Leaving aside the Falklands element, a Defense Ministry official stressed yesterday that this represented a 3.3 percent real growth over 1982/83.

The chancellor has added 200 million pounds to the 15,298 million pounds estimated for the 1983/84 defence expenditure to cover a proportion of the costs of the Falklands campaign and replacement of lost service assets.

A further 424 million pounds has been added as being the best today's estimate of maintaining the costs of the garrison in the South Atlantic, although the final force levels have yet to be decided. Finally, he has added 42 million pounds for the 1982 armed forces pay award.

At the same time, Sir Geoffrey has offset these additions by a reduction of 44 million pounds. The previous estimated increase in the costs of Defense Ministry civilians, assumed for 1983/84, was too high.

Budgetary changes have already reduced the Defence Ministry's national insurance surcharge totals by 35 million pounds. On the other hand, pension upratings have necessitated an increase of 11 million pounds, and other pay related changes of a further 4 million pound increase.

These adjustments have led to a 20 million pound net reduction of last March's public expenditure white paper's original estimated defence expenditure 1983/84 figure of 15,298 million, making a revised total of 15,278 million pounds.

The fully-revised estimate figure for 1983/84 is now 15,900 million (15,278 million pounds plus the chancellor's 622 million pound net increase).

DENKTAS RECEIVES U.S. COORDINATOR CHAPMAN

TA091231 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] President Denktas has said that the Cyprus problem began in 1963 and not in 1974 as the Greek Cypriots claim. The president was speaking to journalists today after receiving the American State Department's special coordinator for Cyprus, Mr Christian Chapman. President Denktas said that he had explained the details of the Cyprus problem to Mr Chapman, and had informed him that the Cyprus problem had begun as a result of the Greek Cypriot attacks against the Turkish Cypriot community in 1963, and not in 1974 as the Greek Cypriots are claiming. The president reiterated that a solution of the problem depended on the understanding by the Greek Cypriots, Greece and all the world that Cyprus could not be Hellenized. He added that there was a Turkish Cypriot community on the island and that this community would continue to exist.

President Denktas expressed the view that this fact should be acknowledged and designs to do away with the rights of the Turkish Cypriot community, as well as Greek Cypriot aggression under the guise of being the legal Cyprus Government, should be stopped.

Replying to questions, Mr Chapman said that he was only paying a courtesy call on President Denktas. He described as wrong reports which alleged that he would be taking a more active role following Mr Kiprianou's approach to the Kremlin.

Atakol Comments

NC100916 Nicosia BIRLIK in Turkish 9 Nov 82 p 1

[Excerpt] In response to a question regarding reports that Christian Chapman, Cyprus coordinator of the U.S. State Department, who is currently visiting Cyprus, would implement a policy in Cyprus similar to that implemented by special envoy Philip Habib in the Middle East, Foreign Affairs and Defense Minister Atakol stated that these reports do not tally with reality.

Atakol explained: "No such situation exists. It is not the desire of the Turkish side for the United States to get involved in the Cyprus issue in this manner. Therefore, no such task can be assigned to His Excellency Mr Chapman."

O AGON SEES SLOWDOWN IN INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

NC090909 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 9 Nov 82 p 1

[Text] It is probable that the number of meetings within the framework of the intercommunal talks will decrease because of the election campaign period which, according to appraisals by UN circles, is not the appropriate time for the making of political decisions or progress.

Authoritative reports received by O AGON say UN officials in Cyprus believe that until the presidential elections are held and until some time after, the intercommunal dialogue will be continued solely for the sake of formality because, as the UN circles maintain, no change in the positions of either side is expected until then.

Interlocutors Mavrommatis and Onan now meet twice a week, but there is a proposal to hold only one meeting a week until the elections.

According to the same reports, the whole question is being discussed by Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, with the two sides. Mr Mavrommatis and Mr Onan will have their first meeting today following the recess in the talks at the beginning of October.

Talks Resume 9 Nov

NC091950 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] After a recess of approximately 2 months, the inter-Cypriot talks resumed this afternoon at the Ledra Palace Hotel.

In a statement before the meeting, Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, said that today the representatives of the two communities and he would discuss ways of organizing future work. He added: We have held long consultations and, fortunately, everything is developing normally.

In answer to questions, Mr Gobbi stated that in this round of talks, discussion of the constitutional aspect of the Cyprus issue will continue, and expressed the hope that the territorial aspect will also be discussed. He added: Now we have to handle difficult matters and the period is very sensitive. Therefore, we must work carefully and without interruption. Mr Gobbi also said that this round will conclude in December, before Christmas.

Asked if he expected any results from this round, Mr Gobbi reiterated that this period is very difficult and sensitive and expressed the hope that this round of consultations will be very important as preparatory work. He clarified that by the term preparatory work, he meant that during this round there would be an exchange of ideas for the purpose of exerting efforts so that the obstacles can be transformed into bases for progress.

In response to a question on the meeting he had with Mr Chapman, the special coordinator on the Cyprus issue at the U.S.State Department, Mr Gobbi said it was a routine visit. He added: Mr Chapman has replaced Mr Bartholomew, and he wanted to get in touch with reality. For this reason, he has come to Cyprus.

Mr Mavrommatis, the representative of the Greek Cypriot side at the talks, stated that the meeting would consider procedural matters concerning work in the future. . added: Then we will discuss matters we have not yet discussed, such as the territorial and constitutional aspects.

Answering a question, Mr Mavrommatis expressed the hope that discussion of the territorial aspect would begin soon. Asked if there is a proposal for one instead of two meetings a week, Mr Mavrommatis said that for the time being there is no such proposal. However, he added: We will be making the appropriate decisions according to the needs of the talks. I believe we will continue with two meetings until a different decision is made. Should we need more time for preparation and less for official meetings, then we will decide accordingly.

In conclusion, Mr Mavrommatis said that for the Greek Cypriot side, the Famagusta issue continues to be one of priority and that it will be raised again during the discussion of the territorial aspect.

In his turn, the Turkish Cypriot Interlocutor said that at today's meeting the method of procedures for this round of the inter-Cypriot talks was to be discussed. He also said they would exchange views on the question of holding one instead of two meetings a week. Mr Onan said that until now, enough has been achieved at the talks, and expressed the hope that more will be achieved in the new round of talks.

A UN communique on today's meeting says that there was a general exchange of views. The next meeting will be held on Thursday.

GOVERNMENT DENOUNCES CURRENCY CHANGE IN NORTH

NC092044 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1830 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] The government of the republic has denounced internationally the decision of the Turkish Cypriot leaders and Ankara to replace the Cypriot pound with the Turkish lira and to methodically pursue practical measures to establish the Turkish lira in the occupied areas. The Foreign Ministry has instructed the permanent Cypriot delegate at the United Nations to denounce this new unacceptable action by the Turkish side to the UN secretary general and ask that the denunciation be circulated as an official document of the UN General Assembly and Security Council. Similar instructions have also been given to the republic's diplomatic missions in various countries.

In a statement, the government spokesman said the decision to replace the Cypriot pound in the occupied areas falls within the framework of the partitionist policy being followed and promoted by the Turkish side, particularly since the 1974 invasion. The spokesman added: This new divisive action confirms most indisputably that the Turkish Cypriot leaders, instead of working for a Cyprus solution based on the UN resolutions and the Makarios-Denktas and Kiprianou-Denktas agreements, are moving in the direction of gradually annexing the occupied territories to the state of Turkey.

'Partitionist Move' Charged

NC101018 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 10 Nov 82 p 5

[From the "Positions" column: "Monetary Invasion"]

[Text] Ankara's action in completely dislodging the Cyprus Republic's currency in the occupied areas, only permitting circulation of Turkish currency, completely reveals its partitionist goals. With this act it definitely partitions the country's economy, and at the same time lays the foundations for a final geographic and political partition of the island. This Ankara goal is no longer doubted by anyone. With its own acts, Ankara sees to it that it becomes obvious.

Turkey's monetary invasion must not be tolerated by the international community. Tolerance would mean acceptance of Ankara's partitionist plans and a final abandonment of the position supporting a just and permanent solution to the Cyprus issue on the basis of the UN resolutions. Denouncing this new Turkish partitionist move, we stress the necessity that the international community undertake its responsibilities toward Cyprus and that it put an end to Ankara's promoting of the partitionist plans.

O AGON EXAMINES LEFT'S CRITICISM OF PAPANDREOU

[Text] New, extremely serious barbs against Greek Prime Minister Papandreou have been launched by the left. Specifically, A. Ziartidhis, secretary general of the Pan-Cyprian Labor Federation [PEO], speaking at the organization's general council, asked whether a recommendation made by Kliridhis in a speech to the Nicosia Rotary Club about continuation of the [inter-Cypriot] talks with the participation of Western countries had its origins with Papandreou.

After rejecting the Kliridhis recommendation by stating that "this would be like entrusting NATO with solving the Cyprus issue for us," he said, "all those who desire such a redefinition must say so. Since Kliridhis made his recommendation shortly after he saw Papandreou, the Conservatives of Britain and the Christian Democrats of the FRG, it is of interest to us whether the idea he launched is entirely his own or not."

In his speech, Ziartidhis once again attacked the redefinition of the Cyprus issue, describing it as a concept that is "dark, unclear and difficult to explain." Ziartidhis stressed that if the intercommunal dialogue is turned into an international dialogue or into an international conference, then its object must be the international aspect of the issue, and the socialist countries must also take part. "Otherwise," he added, "it would be like entrusting NATO with solving the Cyprus issue for us."

Ziartidhis stated that the intercommunal talks must be kept alive even though they produce no results and argued that "if the intercommunal talks are stopped, the political vacuum thereby created will be filled by unforeseeable and inestimable dangers.

The PEO secretary general defended the Democratic Party-AKEL minimum program and said it blocks the course of the extreme right toward authority in the election and even after it, stressing that democratic cooperation must be strengthened even after February [date of the presidential election].

Ziartidhis asked for faith and trust by one party of the democratic cooperation toward the other party and, as a result, implementation of the minimum program.

PAPANDREOU ON RELATIONS WITH NATO, LIMNOS ISSUE

NC092034 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] NATO must seriously consider the problem of concern to the Greek people and to the Greek Armed Forces, stressed Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou to press representatives this afternoon after his visit to the 12th Division in Alexandroupolis. The prime minister stated: After the warm contacts I have had with leading personalities of the armed forces, I must state that while my mission was to encourage them, what really happened is that I am the one returning to Athens encouraged.

Referring to the cancellation of the Apex Express-82 exercise, the prime minister stated: I believe that perhaps I could use an interesting phrase which will follow me to Brussels in a few weeks. On the part of NATO's leadership, the question to be asked about Greece is: Why does Greece attribute such great significance to the incorporation of Limnos in the exercise that it preferred to cancel the exercise since it was not incorporated?

The question of the Greek people which I now present and which I will also present in Brussels is: Is it so important for NATO's leadership to exclude Limnos so that those in NATO, knowing the reaction of the Greek Government, would prefer to have the exercise cancelled?

It is a little difficult for one to understand why it is so important for the alliance not to consider Limnos as incorporated in Greece's national territory and whose defense -- it is supposed -- we have the responsibility to guarantee.

Answering a question on whether the Greek Government will explain to NATO that something which bears upon our national interests will not be allowed, the prime minister replied: As a government, we now have 13 months of experience. In any eventuality, I believe that NATO must seriously consider this problem, which concerns the Greek people and the Greek Armed Forces. Consequently, I intend to raise a series of grave issues culminating with the very issue of Limnos.

Answering another question on whether the Limnos issue could more generally affect our relations with NATO, Papandreou replied: I admit that this is a peculiar message which we must utilize to the full. This is because this message is exactly what I stated earlier. Naturally, a question does arise: To what degree are Greek positions clear to our Western partners?

Remarks on NATO, U.S. Bases

NC092311 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2200 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Excerpts] NATO must seriously consider the problems of concern to the Greek people and to the Greek Armed Forces, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou stressed to representatives of the press this afternoon after his visit to the 12th Division in Alexandroupolis.

The prime minister stressed: It is a little difficult for one to understand why it is so important to the alliance that Limnos not be considered a territory included in the Greek area and whose defense it [the alliance] supposedly has the responsibility to guarantee.

The prime minister emphasized: I believe it is necessary that there must be a full briefing of, at least, West European public opinion. This must be one of our targets in Brussels.

The following question was next: Do you believe that the Limnos issue has come up because of a lack of briefings or is it the result of NATO's political will, which insists on questioning Greece's sovereign rights?

The prime minister replied: In his directive in May 1980, Mr Luns of course did not specifically mention Limnos. For us, however, it is unthinkable that Limnos is a political issue because, if Limnos is a political issue, then all of Greece is a political issue. In the case of Limnos, it happens that there is a very clear legal status, a status which is indisputable because of the Montreux Treaty. I would say that this directive of Mr Luns would not even have an application in our case and, therefore, the decision which was made cannot be based on that directive. This will be one of our basic arguments in Brussels. We do not give anyone the right to determine which area of the country we have the responsibility to defend. I must reiterate that I am amazed at how it was preferred to cancel the exercise than include Limnos in the exercise. The same way, of course, great astonishment is also caused by the loss of the Greek message.

Question: Will the talks on the U.S. bases be affected because of Greece's conflict with NATO, or is it a separate issue?

Answer: Nothing is separate, they are all one complex and, naturally, it is certain that in the dialogue it is conducting on the bases the Greek Government will certainly ask for clarifications concerning this new issue.

Question: Concerning the purpose of your visit to units on the borderline, what do you have to state?

Answer: It was an attempt to fully brief the armed forces about our national defense strategy and foreign policy. It is very significant that all the people, particularly those who shoulder the task of the country's defense, be kept informed. I consider it a duty of the government.

FLORAKIS ON DIFFERENCES BETWEEN KKE, PASOK

NC081215 Athens TO VIMA TIS KIRIAKIS in Greek 7 Nov 82 p 3

[Exclusive interview granted by KKE Secretary Gen Kharilaos Florakis to TO VIMA correspondent Mikhalis Dhimitriou -- date and place not given]

[Excerpts] Question: Certain people believe that the rise in KKE's influence on the municipal election is coincidental. Do you believe the KKE will keep these voters in the future and, if yes, then why?

Answer: First of all, a distinctive line must be drawn between influence and voters. For the KKE there is no relationship between influence and voters. The party's true influence cannot be expressed in its full extent through an election, for the simplest of reasons: Is there anyone who does not know how the apparatus of the state, capital, the mass information media, the controlled press and so forth are being utilized? The votes given to the KKE are, how shall I say, of a different quality. They are an indication of an advanced political-social conscience and of militancy. This is the reason why we do not make our entire policy depend on chance, expediency or mass movements -- voters -- but rather on an improved level of politcial conscience, organization and the people's struggle.

In any case, the rise of KKE's influence as expressed in the municipal elections is not coincidental. It is the fruit of our correct general policy and our line toward unification. It is the reflection of the conscience of new voters for the correctness of our immediate goals and our long-term strategy.

It is, in conclusion, the result of the tireless work of our members, leading personalities, friends and allies.

Question: Discussion was caused by the fact that the KKE leadership did not invite the voters, during the first round of the election, to give preference to PASOK candidates when they were confronted by a New Democracy candidate. This, however, was done -- but not always -- by certain isolated mayors. What expediency was served by such behavior?

Answer: Permit me to state that your question is not based on fact. I refer you to the official Central Committee statement after the first round, which was published on 20 October, calling upon local party organizations and the slates supported by the democratic fronts to make an effort for the election of slates during the second round, which declared a democratic line and which are closest to the people's problems. Our position was extremely clear and democratic and it is not correct that it was the result of the initiative of isolated mayors.

This was the KKE's real position during the second round. By contrast, we have not seen an official statement from the PASOK leadership in the same spirit. Instead, they fed statements through press organs friendly to them that they would not accept central discussions and cooperation in a spirit of mutual cooperation. Was there no discussion caused by this policy of PASOK? Over and above this there is another fundamental aspect of the issue which appears to have escaped you. Of necessity we had to cooperate in the second round of the election. Would it not have been better if unification and joint action of all the democratic forces had been discussed and resolved right from the first round as we had originally proposed? Who is responsible for this?

Question: There was also much discussion of the fact that there was mass preference for mayors supported by the KKE, also by citizens who voted for rightwing candidates in the first round. Do you believe these voters' beliefs changed radically or was their preference for KKE candidates the result of an antigovernment and anti-PASOK feeling?

Answer: If there is a certain new element which merits discussion and also merits lauding -- not just by us the communists, but by every sincere democrat -- then it is that the "scarecrows" and the walls of anticommunism created by the rightwing were pulled down, that is, that the voters who in the past voted for the right, or who supported the right in the first round, preferred in the second round to vote for the Communist candidate or the KKE-supported candidate. Thus voters preferred the most efficient, most able, most active people's candidate, as was natural that they should do. This particularly concerned certain circles. You must have observed the phenomenon when one front accused the other of cooperating with the Communists. Thus in the second round they discovered a certain "alliance" and "cooperation" between the KKE and the right; yet they knew very well there was nothing of the sort. The "peculiar alliances" are, by contrast, to be found elsewhere, in the areas where even secret protocols were signed with slates of junta trends in an effort to attract conservative votes.

Support of our own candidates, however, did not only come from rightwing voters but also from PASOK voters. It is well known that in Athens, Piraives and Thessaloniki, in Patrai and in many other municipalities, the municipal slates supported by PASOK won percentages which lower than those gained in the last general election. Most of these voters, even members of PASOK, voted for our candidates because they judged them as better and more efficient and because our general policy and our solutions to local issues were more satisfying to them. In this process there are both these elements: dissatisfaction or a form of protest against PASOK's policy, and the radicalization of the voters. There might also be a reevaluation of positions maintained by the leftist and more radical elements, who in 1981 voted for PASOK in an effort to oust the rightwing but now gave their vote in accordance with their political and spiritual ties.

Question: During the second round of the election there was, on the part of the KKE as well as by mayors it supported, a certain verbal definition ("conservative citizens") to describe voters who by tradition voted for the right. After the election there is a change of the KKE toward these citizens and with certain political shades from the right-wing, New Democracy and its leadership. Do you accept today that the main division lies between the right and the democratic forces?

Answer: What certain people describe as "a certain verbal definition," as something new after the first round of the municipal election, is for us an old, established element in our policy, our goals -- both the immediate and the future goals. We never did, do, or will support this vertical division between workers. We do not classify them and especially not within watertight compartments, into leftists, centrists or rightists. These are bourgeois classifications aimed at the perpetuation of the authority of the bourgeois regime. In any eventuality, such classifications are never either final or definitive. We have always aspired and continue to aspire for the unity of the workers and we call upon them, we organize them within a joint struggle, a unifying struggle -- irrespective of their political affiliations, irrespective of any other difference, sex, nationality, religion and so forth -- for bread, work, peace, democracy and better wages and better and healthier conditions of work for a true change to democracy among the people and for socialism.

Question: How does the KKE believe that the country's political map has been redrawn today in respect of the big party formations (New Democracy, PASOK, KKE) and their character? How does it particularly view the prime minister's position that Greece is regional and, therefore, polarization of political affairs between PASOK and New Democracy is real and that the role of the KKE is insignificant?

Answer: In respect of New Democracy, it is well known that it faithfully represents the interests of the monopolistic olygarchy, that it handled these interests as a government and that it conducts its policy as the opposition from this viewpoint.

PASOK, as we have underlined, has its predominant social foundations in the intermediate layers of Greek society. To an increasing degree, however, since its advent to authority, it looks for approval from the larger-bourgeois class, it provides "guarantees" to local and foreign establishment and marches along the road of a reformist alternative within the framework of the dominance of monopolies, of the regime of dependence for our country. The few democratic measures adopted by it do not transcend these limits. This is not even denied by PASOK itself but it excuses it under the "theory" of the "tangible" and the "vision."

Most certainly there is "polarization" as the prime minister said but it does not lie between New Democracy and PASOK as he alleged. The existing and true polarization is social and economic between large local and foreign capital, and between dependence on imperialism on the one hand and all the other classes and layers of Greek society on the other. In the face of this great conflict permeating all layers of Greek society, PASOK must explain its position and it must tell us whom its government policy supports. Most certainly, this socioeconomic polarization is reflected at the level of the political forces.

It is obvious that this entire case of "bipolarity" and "regionalism" aims at providing a foundation for the theory of the two-party system in our country -- New Democracy-PASOK -- as something "essential" and "final." It is obvious, however, that the true state of affairs and the politics of Greece cannot be altered with abstract theoretical concoctions and "sacred hopes."

Our country's life and history demonstrated that many parties have come and gone but the KKE proved it can stand the test of time and always remains as the great true factor in our country.

Two-party systems belong to other times. Today the two-party game is not suitable under the political reality of Greece, and it will be left behind by the Greek people and by developments as clearly proved by the municipal election. I am once again forced to recall that, although PASOK may boast of the mayors it elected in Athens, Piraievs, Thessaloniki and dozens of other municipalities, it is indebted for this to the "marginal" votes of the Communists.

Question: Recently there is an observable increased tension between PASOK and the government on the one hand and the KKE on the other. This confrontation reached its peak during the municipal election. On its own part, how does the KKE believe its relations with PASOK will develop after the political criticism leveled against it?

Answer: We never tried to have, we never wanted and we do not want any tension or deterioration in relations with PASOK. For the same reasons, we never sought any confrontation during the municipal elections. On the contrary, we did propose, and we fought hard for, cooperation, alignment and unification but, it must be understood, based upon equality and independence of the parties and not in the form of "handouts" to PASOK's poor relatives. Always chasing its self-sufficiency, however, PASOK sought confrontation. We know how it reaped its fruits.

I will return to your question: Relations between our party and the government do not exclusively rely on our own desire. Now that it is becoming clearer that the government is pursuing the course of reformism and, objectively, the policy of handling the monopolies and foreign dependence, we are unable to conceal the truth by saying that all is well. We cannot keep silent over repeated government reneging away from the goals of change and even from its very own preelection promises.

I must stress that our differences are not only over the context of the government's policy, but also over the method in which the government is exercising authority and over certain expressions of authoritarian character which have started to emerge.

As is well known, right from the start we stressed our good-will toward the government, and stated we would unreservedly laud any positive government measure and would oppose every measure which blocks the road toward change.

If the government believes it will find its way through the two-party system, then it will soon understand that it is only undermining its own position. Anticommunism is the well-concealed trap which will push the government toward the local and foreign establishments, toward its own erosion which will weaken it, making it easier to control.

We must stress that the trump card of the two-party system and struggle, of anticommunism, has been played by many governments to date and by many parties, but it never boded any good for them and it always helped the most reactionary forces of our country.

We declared that we will insist on this responsible position. The government, however, must take up its own responsibilities in the same spirit.

Question: In his interview with TA NEA the prime minister cleared up certain issues related to KKE policy. How do you view these positions, and more specifically, the fact that Papandreou raised the question of redefinition of your party's policy as a matter of priority before any claims for your participation in the government and its responsibilities?

Answer: I am particularly glad you asked this because it gives me the opportunity to clear up, once and for all, any questions about our participation in the government. All those who believe that we desperately want to participate in the government are very wrong.

They are mistaken if they think that for this reason we would accept responsibilities for a policy which, in our viewpoint, does not reflect the peoples expectations for true change.

Those who believe that we are after "ministries" or "positions" or that we are prepared to negotiate our "percentages" in exchange for governmental seats by signing statements of "regret" over our policy and our positions are very far wrong. The Greek Communists do not agree to participate in any government just like that, without principle, without a program and without equal cooperation.

The first prerequisite for any sharing by us of governmental responsibilities today lies in our agreement on a government policy for true change. It is truly very farfetched when the prime minister of the government asks us to redefine our policy in order to gain legal status in his viewpoint.

Question: This may be fine but it is considered by many sides that your greater role in the political affairs of the country is annulled or prevented by positions such as: "the dictatorship of the proletariat," relations with foreign centers of influence and alien models etc.

Answer: To say the least, this only shows an attempt at a not so successful ideological-political confrontation since we are on the eve of the party's 11th congress and, I assure you, we are expecting much more of the same. This demonstrates an effort to disorientate the people and lead them away from their burning problems and the urgent issues for change. Such arguments, however, are quite unsuitable for inclusion in a prime ministerial interview. I must repeat what I said in the past that such discussions over the term "dictatorship of the proletariat" must cease. Whether one uses this term or not -- and this is not a matter of principle -- one must know the term was used by Marx to describe civil authority, the authority of the proletariat and the need for a workers state of a new type, based on the participation and the self-administration of the workers and nothing more.

As to references to "foreign centers" we hope the government will not be trapped by the literature of other times about "alien controls" and so forth. Yet government sources state they do not accept lectures from the KKE on national independence because the government is free of any foreign controls and so forth....

Question: Recently, the government spokesman made certain allegations. How do you place yourself, Mr Florakis, against such views about the KKE and its policy which means a distortion of authentic international solidarity?

Answer: In principle we do not like lecturing others. We do hope, however, that in the end they will "recognize" our right to claim the national independence of our country because we have also fought for it and defended it, because we fought for a new Greece without NATO bases when this meant exile, executions and imprisonment.

If, however, the government would, in action and not in words, like to pursue a "policy removed from foreign centers" all it has to do is throw out the U.S. bases, of which the prime minister often says that their presence is at the expense of our national independence; let it withdraw from NATO, let it follow an independent peaceful policy far from military coalitions. Only then would it find us militantly on its own side.

As for us, all must know that we are Communist, in other words internationalists and that, as a result, we are in solidarity with the countries which build socialism, each one in accordance to its own reality; that we are in solidarity with every revolutionary, progressive and peaceloving force of our times and that our international solidarity means neither dependence, nor copying nor any lack on our part of creative and critical study of international experiences. Naturally, we do not submit our internationalistic position of principle either for approval or rejection by anyone, nor do we ask for a certificate of patriotism from anyone.

TA100604 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] The High Election Council has announced that it has been categorically determined that the Constitution which was submitted to a referendum on 7 November 1982 has been approved by the nation. With the declaration of the approval of the Constitution, Head of State and head of the National Security Council Gen Kenan Evren becomes president. He is the seventh president of the Turkish Republic and he will serve in that post for 7 years. It has been announced that these developments do not necessitate the withdrawal of the Ulusu Government.

The referendum results were presented today to President Kenan Evren by the chairman of the High Election Council, Orhan Aydin. The approval of the Constitution and Kenan Evren's presidency were also announced by a 101 gun salute in Ankara.

The High Election Council announcement which says that the referendum was approved points out that, in accordance with the final results that have reached the council, 18,719,115 citizens voted, of which 18,600,313 votes were valid and 117,802 were invalid. Of these votes, 16,945,545 were in favor of the Constitution while 1,594,761 were against it.

The High Election Council statement says that voting results from 219,000 citizens who voted in 730 ballot boxes have not yet reached the council, but that even if all of these were negative it would not greatly change the proportion of approval. The statement recalls the law which stipulates that one more than half of the valid votes are needed for approval and adds: According to these final results, the Turkish Republican Constitution has been approved by the Turkish nation.

Meanwhile, the presidential secretariat general has issued a statement saying that the fact that Gen Kenan Evren who had appointed Bulent Ulusu prime minister has become president does not necessitate or force Ulusu's resignation. The Constitution was published in the second edition of today's Official Gazette and went into effect.

NO ROMANIAN PROPOSAL RECEIVED ON NUCLEAR ZONE

TA100650 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 Nov 82

[Text] It has been announced that Turkey has not received a proposal from Romania regarding the establishment of a nuclear weapon-free zone in the Balkans. The Foreign Ministry spokesman, Ambassador Nazmi Akiman, was replying to a question on certain press reports to that effect when he said that during his visit to Romania, President Kenan Evren did not receive such a proposal. Ambassador Akiman stressed that there had not been either a positive or negative reply concerning that question. He went on to say that during President Evren's visit to Romania the two sides had discussed cooperation in the Balkans and holding a meeting for that purpose. Ambassador Akiman added: Even that meeting, which was discussed within that framework, was not planned as a summit in the first stage. Our reply was that the necessary study would be made and our attitude determined only after the assessments regarding the issue were clarified.
